44 win seats in 15 states

By SAMUEL HOSKINS

WASHINGTON

With the four incumbent colored congressmen being returned, the election, Tuesday, of a fifth brought the number of colored members in Congress to an 85-year high.

Only in two other Congresses in the history of the nation have more than five colored members sat together in the national legislative body.

This was in the 43rd Congress, 1873-1875, and the 44th Congress, 1875-1877.

THERE WERE seven colored members in the 43rd, four from South Carolina and one each from Alabama, Florida, Mississippi.

The 44th had eight colored members, two each from Mississippi and South Carolina and one each from Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and North Carolina.

THE NEW MEMBER is Augustus F. (Gus) Hawkins, 55, of Los Angeles, who will represent the recently created 21st California Congressional district.

A Democrat, he served 28 years as a member of the California House of Representatives.

In addition to the five congressmen, colored candidates were elected to such posts as state attorney - general, state treasurer, member of a state supreme court and municipal court and to a number of lesser offices.

These included six to States Senates and at least 39 to State Houses of Representatives.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S office was won by Edward W. Brooke, Boston Republican, who scored an upset victory over his Democratic opponent, Francis Kelly.

Brooke, a lawyer, was Massachusett's first colored candidate to run for a statewide office when he was a candidate two years ago for

He defeated Kelly by a vote of 1,052,411 to 823,048.

Gerald A. Lamb of Waterbury, Conn., also the first colored candidate to seek state - wide office in the state's history, won the State treasurer's post.

His opponent was William D. Graham, a lawyer on the Republican ticket. Lamb, a dental technician, won the Democratic nomination, last May 22.

IN MICHIGAN, Otis Smith, running on the Democratic ticket, survived the back-lash created by the election of Republican George Romney as Governor to become a justice of the State Supreme Court.

In Georgia, LeRoy Johnson, an Atlanta attorney, made political history by being elected a member of the State Senate.

This was the first time a colored person has been elected to the Georgia Senate in 92 years.

Johnson, who billed himself as a New Frontiers Democrat, defeated another colored candidate, T. M. Alexander, Republican and insurance company executive.

A STATE—BY—State summary of voting results in states where colored candidates were elected or sought office include the following:—

ALABAMA

While no colored candidates seeking public office on municipal, county or state levels survived the last May 2 primary, six colored members were nominated to the Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee.

All were elected without opposition, Tuesday. Alabama Democrats tried unsuccessfully to keep colored candidates for the executive committee off the ballot, but reversed their stand after the issue was taken to court.

CALIFORNIA

IN ADDITION to electing the man who will be the fifth colored member of Congress, three colored members also were elected to the State Assembly.

Two of the candidates were incumbents, but the third — a newcomer — defeated a white Republican.

CONNECTICUT

Connecticut was one of the two states which elected a colored candidate to statewide office, that of State

Courts, and seven to the State Legislature.

Party-wide, the House of Representative members are five Democrats and two Republicans.

KENTUCKY

In Hopkinsville, Dr. P. C. Brooks, director of Brooks Memorial Hospital, was elected to the board of education.

His election marked the time a colored person was ever designated to serve on the board. Colored constitute 35 per cent of the population of the town.

Dr. Brooks, who has operated the hospital since 1944, defeated a white incumbent, Dr. J. J. Labold, a veterinarian who served on the board for 12 years.

Dr. Brooks started his practice here in 1930.

MARYLAND

FOUR COLORED candidates were elected to the State Legislature, one to the State Senate and three to the House of Representatives

The State Senator is the first colored woman to be elected in Maryland history. Of the House members, one was an incumbent and one the son of a national official of the NAACP.

The young candidate first came to public notice as a result of his leadership role in sitdown demonstrations.

MICHIGAN

Michigan also is one of the five states which elected colored Congressmen. Additionally, a colored Supreme Court Justice was re-elected to an eight-year term.

Also elected were a State Senator and six members of the State House of Representatives re-elected.

MISSOURI

THE STATE of Missouri elected five colored members to the House of Representatives, four from St. Louis and one from Kansas City, all Democrats.

According to the Kansas City Hall, the majority of the state's colored voters supported Sen. Edward V. Long, Democrat, who was elected.

Long's opponent was Crosby Kemper, banker and conservative Republican.

NEW YORK

In addition to re - electing Rep. Powell, voters of the Greater New York Area elected two colored State Senators and four members to the State House of Representatives.

However, colored voters also contributed sustantially to the re-election of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, both Re-

Georgia Senator, 34, new in politics--not in in leadership

ATLANTA, Ga. — When Leroy R. Johnson won election to Georgia's Senate, he became the first colored legislator since 1907 and the first Senator since the Reconstruction.

The 34 - year - old attorney is not a veteran office - seeker. This was his first campaign and he won it on a Democratic ticket by defeating T. M. Alexander, pioneer Atlanta businessman.

Being a "first" is no novelty to Mr. Johnson. In 1957, he was the first colored criminal investigator on the staff of a Southern solicitor general.

"I've always been interested in politics," says Mr. Johnson. This is reflected in the fact that he specialized in the study of political science that led to his receiving his master's degree from Atlanta University in 1951.

EDUCATION FOR this Atlanta native started in the local public schools. This phase ended with his graduation in 1945 from Washington High School.

He then entered Morehouse College, a branch of the Atlanta University system, and majored in sociology and history. Following graduation in 1949, he entered the graduate division of Atlanta University.

From 1950 through 1954 Mr. Johnson taught social science in a local high school. He then entered the North Carolina School of Law and received his degree in 1957.

That year, Solicitor General Sol C. Webb named him an investigator—a post he kept until May, 1962 when he entered the private practice

MR. JOHNSON is also a vice president of the Georgia Association of Citizen's Democratic Clubs, chairman of the executive committee of the Fulton County Citizens' Democratic Club and vice president of the Southern Conference of Democrats.

Professionally, he belongs to the Georgia Bar Association and is vice president of the Gate City Bar Association.

His professional and political activities have not kept him from rendering service in other community organizations.

He is a member of Wheat Street Baptist Church, a director of a local paper, a director of Campfire Girls, a member of the Executive committee of the Atlanta Committee for Corporate Action, and a YMCA director.

As far as political philosophy is concerned, Mr. Johnson regards himself as being strictly "New Frontier."

He says: "I will first condition myself to learn something about the Senate. . . I don't intend to go over there waving a red flag."

While a student Johnson was president of American Law Students Association.

CALIFORNIA

IN ADDITION to electing the man who will be the fifth colored member of Congress, three colored members also were elected to the State Assembly.

Two of the candidates were incumbents, but the third — a newcomer — defeated a white Republican.

CONNECTICUT

Connecticut was one of the two states which elected a colored candidate to statewide office, that of State treasurer.

The significance of this is seen in the fact that the colored population of the entire state represents only 4.4 per cent. When nominated last summer, Lamb said:—

"I do not expect to run for office of treasurer as a colored person, any more than I do as a Waterburian, an Episcopalian or a dental technician."

A colored member also was elected to the State Legislature.

GEORGIA

THE STATE MADE political history by electing its first colored State Senator in 92 years.

In this respect, the actual election was anti-climax as the two candidates nominated by the Democratic and Republican Parties are colored.

The Democrat emerged as the victor, with 70 percent of the colored voters of the district supporting him.

INDIANA

James S. Hunter, veteran Democratic legislator from Lake County, was reelected for a 12th term. Hunter entered the House in 1951. Last September, he was appointed a member of the Indiana Legislative Advisory Commission replacing Birch Bayh who resigned to seek a U.S. Senate seat and won.

ILLINOIS

In addition to electing one of the five colored members in Congress, Illinois elected colored to two judgeships, Superior and Municipal Senator and six members of the State House of Representatives re-elected.

MISSOURI

THE STATE of Missouri elected five colored members to the House of Representatives, four from St. Louis and one from Kansas City, all Democrats.

According to the Kansas City Hall, the majority of the state's colored voters supported Sen. Edward V. Long, Democrat, who was elected.

Long's opponent was Crosby Kemper, banker and conservative Republican.

NEW YORK

In addition to re - electing Rep. Powell, voters of the Greater New York Area elected two colored State Senators and four members to the State House of Representatives.

However, colored voters also contributed sustantially to the re-election of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, both Republicans.

Edward Dudley, colored candidate seeking election to State Attorney - General, was defeated.

OHIO

The first colored Democrat was elected to the State House of Representatives. He joins a colored Republican who won an easy victory to be re-elected.

The bid of Leo Harris of Cleveland to become the state's first colored congressman was futile. His opponent was incumbent Congressman Charles A. Vanik, Democrat, who was re-elected.

PENNSYLVANIA

VOTERS RE - ELECTED Rep. Nix, one of the four colored members of Congress, and returned 10 members to the State House of Representatives, nine from Philadelphia and one from Pittsburgh.

The colored vote of the state's two largest cities contributed substantially to the victory of Democratic Sen. Joseph S. Clark, who beat off a determined bid by a Republican opponent.

The bid of a Philadelphia candidate to become the first colored member of the State Senate was unsuccessful.

NEW JERSEY

In Newark, a colored member of the Essex County Board of Freeholders was re-elected and in East Orange two colored members were elected to the City Council.

In the cities of Paterson an alderman was elected and a City Council member in Plainfield.

TEXAS

In Houston, Mrs. Charles Charles E. White, who made history two years ago by being elected a member of the school board, was re-elected.

To win, she beat off the bids of five opponents, one of whom was colored.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Three colored members presently serving in the city council won in last week's election without facing a run off.

They are Z. Alexander Looby, 20th district; Harold M. Love, 19th and Robert Lillard, 16th.

Of the three, only Lillard opposed the new metropolitan government in the summer campaign. Long associated with Mayor Ben West's majority in the council, Lillard spoke out against the charter in the June campaign.

THREE OTHER colored persons failed to get clear majorities and will face rival candidates in a run - off Nov. 27. In one instance, both candidates are colored.

John L. Driver and Mrs. Mabel Suggs, both colored, are seeking a council seat in the 21st district. Mansfield Douglass III, will face a white opponent, Neal Johnson, for a seat in the 28th district.

Dr. W. S. Davis, president of Tennessee A. and I. State University, was elected one of the three members of the new Nashville - Davidson county metropolitan board of education here.

LAGOS, Nigeria (NNPA) — Delegates to the first African Railway Congress, representing the independent African states, began work at Lagos Tuesday on proposals to link the major rail systems on the continent.

ALTHOUGH A NEOPHYTE office - seeker, Mr. Johnson is no stranger to Atlanta leadership circles. For five years, he was on the executive committee of the powerful Atlanta Negro Voters League.

This organization has pushed registration of colored voters to the point where in the past only non - hostile whites could be elected to city office and, this year, a colored man could be elected to the state legislature.

Dr. Rufus Clement, Atlanta University president now and at the time of Mr. Johnson's student days there, paved the way some years ago by being elected to the city school board.

While a student in North Carolina, Mr. Johnson was president of the Law School Student Bar Association. He was the first colored vice organization of the Atlanta Junior Voters League.

MR. JOHNSON is also a rector of Camphre Girls, a member of the Executive committee of the Atlanta Committee for Corporate Action, and a YMCA director.

29 colored congressmen in 93 years

WASHINGTON

The election of Augustus (Gus) F. Hawkins of Los Angeles, last Tuesday, as the fifth colored member of Congress raises the total number of colored members who have served in the national legislative body to 29.

The first colored members in the history of the nation were elected to Congress 81 years ago when Georgia and South Carolina sent one representative each to the House and Mississippi a Senator.

The only other colored Senator to serve also came from Mississippi, and was a member of the 45th Congress 1877-1879.

WHEN HAWKINS takes his seat next January, it will mean that the five colored members represent the largest number to serve in any Congress since the 45th.

There were seven colored House members in the 43rd Congress, 1873-1875, and the same number plus a Senator in the 44th Congress, 1875 - 1877.

There were no colored in the 50th Congress or any of the 13 Congresses between 1901 and 1931.

Prior to 1931 when Oscar DePriest was elected in Illinois (Chicago), all colored Congressmen came from states in the South.

DURING THE 62 years between 1869 and 1931 there were 22 colored congressmen from eight Southern states Some served more than one term.

Two came from Alabama, one each from Florida, Georgia and Louisiana, three from Mississippi, four from North Carolina, nine from South Carolina and one from Virginia.

Since 1931, six colored have served in Congress: three from Illinois, and one each from Michigan, New York and Pennsylvania.

HARTFORD, Conn. —State Treasurer - elect Gerald A. Lamb, who made political history in this state, last Tuesday, ran as a Democrat and was elected as a Democrat.

His name was offered as the Democratic candidate, last July, at the party's convention in Hartford by Mayor Edward Bergin of Waterbury.

When convention delegates voted their approval, Lamb, a dental technician said:

Afro scores .970 batting average in voting forcast

WASHINGTON

A check of the AFRO's pre-election forecast of how the colored vote would go on Nov. 6 shows predictions were 97.7 per cent correct.

Excluding predictions in which the outcome was almost a fore-gone conclusion, there were 45 which carried a high "hazard element."

Of these 45, the AFRO predicted 44 correct. Included among these were predictions that former Vice President Richard M. Nixon would be defeated in California, Mrs. Verda F. Welcome would be the first colored woman elected to the Maryland State Senate, and Edward R. Dudley would lose in New York.

ALSO THAT IN Florida, former Sen. Claude Pepper would be returned to Congress, Pennsylvania Sen. Joseph S. Clark would be re-elected, Gerald A. Lamb would defeat William D. Graham in Connecticut and in Georgia Leroy Johnson would be at his GOP opponent, T. M. Alexander.

The single instance in which the predictions went astray was that all Democratic congressmen in Maryland would be re-elected. One congressman who had been indicted in the savings and loan institutions was defeate loan institutions was defeated.

Consequently, this prediction was only five-sixths correct or one-sixth wrong.

THE ONE really "long shot" which the AFRO got right was predicting that Maryland would elect a Democratic Senator to replace Sen. John M. Butler, who did not seek re-election.

The predictions would be the results of consultation among Dr. Carl Murphy, chairman of the board; C. W. Mackay, editor - in - chief; Arthur Carter, managing editor; Samuel Hoskins, assistant managing editor who wrote the forecast article, and Max Johnson, political writer who specializes in Maryland politics.

Attorney General - elect says vote 'shows progress'

BOSTON, Mass. — "I didn't hear one racial epithet during the whole campaign," said Edward W. Brooke following his election, last Tuesday, as Attorney General of Massachusetts.

A Republican, he defeated Democrat Francis E. Kelly, former Lieutenant Governor and onetime Attorney General.

A native of Washington, D. C., the attorney general elect had tried three times before for election to public office, without success.

IN 1960, he ran for Secretary of State and received over a million votes.

He was the only Republican elected this time in an otherwise Democratic sweep of all state offices.

"I think it's progress," Mr. Brooke said of his election, adding: "Hardly anyone mentions I'm colored any more."

HE ALSO observed that during the entire two - month campaign he was not asked more than five questions on civil rights, and "didn't even receive any crank mail."

He and his wife and two daughters, Remi, 13, and Edwina, 10, reside in Roxbury, a suburb of Boston.

The Week In Records

LENA, GIBBS SHARE JAZZ SPOTLIGHT

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Two of the most popular names in jazz and entertainment share the record review spotlight this week. Lena Horne provides a sparkling new waxing of a number of choice standard tunes, while Terry Gibbs showcases delightful big band music.

Following are the details of the review:

"LOVELY AND ALIVE": —(RCA Victor LP) featuring singer Lena Horne. Music arranged and conducted by Marty Paich.

Tunes: "I Concentrate on You," "I Get the Blues When It Rains," "I've Grown Accustomed to His Face," "I Got Rhythm," "I'm Confessin" (That I Love You)," "I Want to Be Happy."

Side 2: "I Surrender, Dear, "I Found a New Baby," "I Understand," "I Let a Song Go Out of My Heart," "I ain't Got Nobody," "I Only Have Eyes for You."

THIS ALBUM of songs personalized by the pronoun "I" features Miss Horne in one of her finest performances, reminiscent of the days when she held forte at New York's Cafe Society before moving on to Hollywood and television fame.

Her soft, mellow voice caresses 16 ballads heard on the disc in a most romantic way, particularly the evergreens, "I Get the Blues...," the "Confessin' " blues and "I Surrender, Dear..."

"EXPLOSION": — (Mercury LP) featuring Terry Gibbs and his big band. Tunes: "Tico Tico," "Big Bad Bob," "The Big Cat," "Soft Eyes," "Billie's Bounce," "Take Romance," "Do You Wanna Jump Children?" "Nature Boy," "Jump the Blues Away," "Sleep."

Music with the big beat, throbbing and exciting, is provided by Gibbs and his sidemen on this waxing.

The band plays in its popular, driving style, with Gibbs' golden vibe tunes providing both the tempo and the background...

Terry is especially tuneful on such slow ballads as "Soft Eyes" and "I'll Take Romance," when he changes the tones of his vibe to a deeper, richer sound that blends beautifully with the rhythm section of the band.

These tunes and the Latin rhythm, "Tico, Tico" are the top tunes in the set.

Ray Charles hit with 25G suit

GREENSBORO, N.C. — (NNPA) — Singer Ray Charles was named Tuesday in a $25,000 civil action charging breach of contract when he failed to appear for a scheduled performance in Roanoke, Va., last Sept. 16.

The suit, filed in Guilford Superior Court, was brought by Oliver W. Arnold, who said he made partial payment of $1,750 to Charles at the time the contract was signed.

Arnold's action sought court attachment of funds held by T. Ellis Stone and Robert H. Kent of Greensboro, and Jim Crockett of Charlotte, who were promoters of the Charles show held here Monday.

CHICAGO — (ANP) — FROM HOLLYWOOD TO HARLEM.

Marian Anderson reveals that she will join Carl Sandburg as guest of honor at the Star Spangled ball to benefit the international culture center for youth at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel.

This gala will bring out leaders from the cultural, social and economic worlds. A highlight will be the presentation of the original manuscript of "My Country 'Tis of Thee" to Mrs. Kennedy for the 'house that's white.'

This will be an evening of glamor for the glamorous too because more than 20 top American designers will present originals during a fashion review.

HOW'S THIS for a survey report! Detroiters no longer shout in church!!

According to a recent poll conducted, (I can't imagine why), among 'member' churches, shouting during church services is definitely on the down grade.

One minister who asked that his name be withheld, said that if anyone shouted or prayed aloud in his church, his parishoners would probably fall over in a dead faint.

Another minister who spoke out when queried, said that the only time a voice was raised in his church, was that of a visitor!

These tunes and the Latin rhythm, "Tico, Tico" are the top tunes in the set.

Californians hired as African natives

HOLLYWOOD — (ANP) — Several colored Americans have been hired as "extras" for the movie, "Drums of Africa," a film of an African safari depicting scenes in Nairobi but actually cast in by Culver City, Calif.

Hired as extras for native roles were Morgan Roberts, Calvin Brown, Francois Andre and Billy Hines, all colored Amercians. Roberts is a supply clerk with the Los Angeles Board of Education; Brown is a postal clerk; Andre, drama editor of a Los Angeles newspaper, and Hines, a singer and songwriter whose latest jazz tune is "I Want to Love."

Philly musician faces dope charge

PHILADELPHIA — (ANP) —A popular Philadelphia jazz musician, identified as Louis Judge, 40, last week was arrested and held in $25,000 bond after undercover agents posing as purchasers trapped him and found a bag full of marijuana, described as the largest amount conficated in a decade.

Judge was arrested at a Philadelphia intersection by federal agents after he allegedly accepted $215 in marked money for a pound bag of marijuana ordered by an undercover man.

He faces 10 to 20 years in prison because of a previous narcotics conviction in Texas, agents said.

Dot Dandridge asks eviction of hubby

LOS ANGELES — Beauteous actress Dorothy Dandridge, 38, last week filed suit to end her three-year marriage to Jack Denison, 48-year-old white restauranteur, charging cruelty and asking the court to eject him from her home.

The actress-singer and Denison were married on June 22, 1959. They have no children.

In her divorce suit, Miss Dandridge charged her husband with using physical forced her on several occasions. However, it was not known for what reasons he used physical force.

MISS DANDRIDGE, reportedly wealthy from her successes in the movies and on stage and in television, made it plain that the house is her private property.

She scored a recent hit in Houston, becoming the first colored artist to perform in a downtown night club there.

According to Dot, there is no chance of a reconciliation. She, Miss Dandridge is currently appearing at the Chi Chi Club in Palm Springs.

Jamaican beauties eye star roles in movies

KINGSTON, JAMAICA — (ANP) — Fans throughout the world who have become disgusted with the menial roles being given colored performers in Hollywood may soon derive some satisfaction from seeing a number of beauties cast in starring roles in the movies.

The later became a possibility last week after actress Ginger Rogers and her husband, William Marshall, announced that they had signed a 10-year agreement with Prime Minister Alexander Bustamente of Jamaica to establish a film industry on a $10,000,000 initial investment in that island.

SO ELATED were the Marshalls over the transaction, which will provide employment for hundred of Jamaicans, that they said they envision the development of a Jamaican film festival to rival those of Cannes, France and Venice, Italy.

To achieve this end, they are banking both on the availability of local talent and the natural setting which Jamaica provides. Known as "The Island in the Sun," Jamaica abounds in tropical beauty.

THE MARSHALLS plan to bring their motion picture industry to Jamaica early next year. They also plan on establishing a permanent home in Jamaica.

The development was also seen as a significant indication of confidence in Jamaica's stability by American enterprise and industry, paving the way for more such investments in the newly independent nation.

New entertainment fad credited to Ella, Dizzy

NEW YORK — It isn't the "Nova" in Bossa Nova that makes the jazz craze from Brazil so intriguing. In the opinion of jazz expert Leonard Feather, it's the "Bossa" that counts, all the way.

"Nova" means "new," of course, and Feather, writing in the current issue of Show Magazine, refuses to get excited over this element.

There is nothing new, he insists, about new jazz fancies; they come and go all the time. If Bossa Nova has any staying power (and Feather suspects it has) credit the "Bossa."

WHAT IS "Bossa?" In Portugese patois, it means flair, style, bizazz. Or, as Hollywood composer Shorty Rogers puts it, "It's an inside word, like our funk, or soul.

"Ella Fitzgerald has bossa. Dizzy Gillespie and Miles Davis have bossa."

The history of Bossa Nova, defined by Feather in Show as "a lovechild of the Portugese-Indian-African elements in the music of Brazil and the Afro-American-European essence of jazz," is brief, but bewildering.

Some credit its origin to Brazilian guitarist Laurindo Almeida.

FEATHER, however, favors the theory that Bossa Nova was inspired in Brazil by the records of Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, and Thelonius Monk.

The rhythms of these American jazz masters, Feather believes, so beguiled the

ELLA FITZGERALD

Brazilian buffs that they wedded American jazz to their native samba.

He also credits the score written by Antonio Carlos Jobim and Luis Bonfa for the film, "Black Orpheus," with bringing Bossa Nova to international attention.

Hospital admits medic to staff

CHARLOTTE, N.C.—Charlotte Memorial Hospital last week admitted Dr. C. Warren Williams to its private medical staff and broke a tradition of segregation.

Last May, Dr. Williams accepted a limited scientific membership in the North Carolina Medical Society. Other colored physicians had been seeking admission to the society on a basis of full equality rather than in a limited capacity. They censured Dr. williams for his acceptance.

Now local colored doctors are suing in federal court for admission to practice on a full professional basis in Charlotte hospitals. As it is now, they must turn over their hospital patients to white doctors.

Mardi Gras ball bows to rights

NEW ORLEANS —(ANP) —The Bunch Club of New Orleans, described as one of the city's oldest and foremost carnival organizations, last week announced the cancellation of its 1963 "Carnival Dance" and plans to concentrate on serious social and civil rights projects during season next year.

Two years ago the club canceled most of its dances and directed much of its funds towards civil rights projects. A similar line will be followed this year.

The club took the initial step in this direction in 1957 when it voted to modify its program and to move in the direction of "social action." This action was followed in 1960 by the cancellation of all carnival activities.

The five colored members of Congress were given a total of eight assignments to standing House Committees, Thursday, for a gain of three assignments over the total number they held in the 87th Congress.

The assignments were made by the House Ways and Means Committee, which is headed by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D., Ark.)

The gains are accounted for by one additional assignment to Reps. Charles C. Diggs Jr. of Michigan and Robert N. C. Nix Sr. of Pennsylvania and a single committee seat to Rep. Augustus Hawkins of California, all Democrats.

Pensacola Negro Candidate Reports House Fired On

PENSACOLA, Feb. 18 (AP)—A Negro leader said shots were fired into his home last night because of his candidacy for the Florida House of Representatives. He said he would not withdraw from the race.

Approximately seven .22 caliber bullets were fired into the home of the Rev. William C. Dobbins ,an integration leader who is running for a legislative seat in the Feb. 26 Democratic primary. Dobbins said the shots did not awaken him or his wife.

The minister said he discovered the bullet holes when he went out of the house to get his morning newspaper.

A neighbor said she heard the shots and a car speed off some time after midnight. Several spent .22 caliber cartridges were found in front of the house. Officers said they had not determined if the cartridges were fired from a rifle or pistol.

Five of the bullets pierced a glass-enclosed porch and entered a front bedroom where Mr. and Mrs. Dobbins and their 22-month-old son were sleeping. Dobbins said one of the bullets apparently passed over the boy's head.

Gazette State News Service

Pine Bluff, July 5.—Roy Long, 21, a graduate of Altheimer (Jefferson County) schools and Arkansas AM and N College here, has been appointed an agent for the Internal Revenue Service at Columbus, S. C.

He is the first Negro to be employed in such a capacity in South Carolina. Long also is the fourth Arkansas Negro to be hired in a substantial position by the federal government in recent weeks.

Long said that he had hoped to be employed in Arkansas. He said that he eventually wanted to return to the state.

Long is now attending Atlanta University at Atlanta, Ga., under a tuition scholarship. He has a 3.56 grade average out of a maximum 4 points. He majored in business administration at Arkansas AM and N.

Long will leave Monday for Jacksonville, Fla., for three months of training for his IRS duties.

While at AM and N, Long won the annual Bailey Memorial Essay Contest which included a trip to New York where he attended a meeting of the United Nations General Assembly, and later to Boston to attend a conference of UNESCO. He also was editor of the College paper in 1960-61, vice president of the Business Club and treasurer of the senior class.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Long, live at Altheimer.

to disprove those cynics and critics at home and abroad who question our purpose and our competence.

"If we fail, if we fritter and fumble away our opportunity in needless, senseless quarrels between Democrats and Republicans, or between the House and the Senate, or between the South and the North, or between the Congress and the Administration, then history will rightfully judge us harshly. But if we succeed, we can achieve these goals by forging in this country a greater sense of union. Then, and only then, can we take full satisfaction in the State of the Union. . .

"Let me make one principle of this Administration abundantly clear: All of these increased opportunities in employment, education, housing, and in every field, must be open to Americans of every color. As far as the writ of Federal law will run, we must abolish not some, but all racial discrimination, for this is not merely an economic issue or a social, political, or international issue. It is a moral issue, and must be met this session by the passage of the bill now pending in the House.

"All Americans of all races stand side by side in Berlin and in Viet Nam. They died side by side in Korea. Surely they can work and eat and travel side by side in their own country.

"We must also lift by legislation the bars of discrimination against those who seek entry into our country, particularly those with much needed skills and those joining their families. In establishing preferences, a nation which was built by the immigrants of all lands can ask those who now seek admission, 'What can you do for our country?' But we should not be asking, 'In what country were you born?' For our ultimate goal is a world without war, a world made safe for diversity, in which all men, goods, and ideas can freely move across every border and every boundary. . .

"This Administration today, here and now, declares unconditional war on poverty in America. I urge this Congress and all Americans to join with me in that effort. It will not be a short or easy struggle, no single weapon or strategy will suffice, but we shall not rest until that war is won. The richest nation on earth can afford to win it. We cannot afford to lose it. $1,000 invested in salvaging an unemployable youth today can return $40,000 or more in his lifetime.

"Poverty is a national problem, requiring improved national organization and support. But this attack, to be effective, must also be organized at the State and local level and must be supported and directed by State and local efforts, for the war against poverty will not be won in Washington. It must be won in the field, in every private home, in every public office, from the court house to the White House."

Negro Candidate Wins Florida Election

LAWTEY, Fla. (AP)—The first Negro candidate in the history of this Northeast Florida farming community was elected to a two-year term on the Town Council Tuesday.

Robert Scott, a brickmason, polled 84 votes in winning one of three seats contested by nine candidates. D. L. Shuford was first with 105 votes. Leslie Phillips got 79 votes and won the other seat.

Negroes outnumber whites 169 to 140 on voter registration rolls in Lawtey, 35 miles southwest of Jacksonville.

Replaces Edward R. Murrow

Rowan To Head U.S. Information Agency

By MERRIMAN SMITH
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Johnson announced Tuesday that Edward R. Murrow has resigned as director of the United States Information Agency USIA and is being replaced by Carl T. Rowan, now ambassador to Finland.

Rowan, a former newspaperman, will become the first Negro in history to sit regularly at meetings of the National Security Council and the Cabinet. Until his appointment Tuesday, the highest ranking Negro in the government was Robert C. Weaver, head of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

In a letter to the President, Murrow, a former radio and television personality, noted that he "was separated from a cancerous lung in early October." He said that although he has been assured that the operation was successful and recovery has been normal, "it will be several months before I can resume full-time duty" at the USIA.

During that period, Murrow wrote, "I could not direct its affairs as I would wish, as I have tried to do, or as you are entitled to expect it to be directed."

NOTIFIED KENNEDY

Murrow said he previously had told President Kennedy he might have to resign. He said he had hoped to be able to stay with the Johnson administration and said "my inability to do so is deeply disappointing." His resignation letter was dated Dec. 19.

CARL T. ROWAN

In a "Dear Ed" reply, Johnson told Murrow he, too, had hoped Murrow would remain and "after you recovery, I will be calling on you for advice and help."

Then, in a paraphrase of Murrow's familiar radio-television sign-off phrase, Johnson said "Goodbye, and good luck." Rowan, who was a reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune before joining the State Department in 1961, became acquainted with Johnson when he accompanied the then vice president on his around-the-world tour in 1961.

SHORT NOTICE

Rowan, who has been visiting in Washington, said he learned of the appointment only Tuesday. He said he would return to Finland "to pay my proper respects to people I have come to love, but will remain in Washington [illegible] to my ac[illegible] with Dr. Johnson. [illegible]n, 38, was born in Ravenscroft, Tenn., and brought up in McMinnville, Tenn. He attended Tennessee State University, a Negro school, before joining the Navy. At the age of 19 he became one of the first Negroes in U. S. history to become a naval officer.

Rowan, who also has done considerable magazine writing, has written several books, including a biography of baseball player Jackie Robinson.

In 1951, he was cited by the Minneapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce as that city's outstanding young man of the year.

JOHN FITZGERALD KENNEDY May 29, 1917 — November 22, 1963

35th President of the United States — January 20, 1961 to November 22, 1963

THE INAUGURAL

'Ask What You Can Do For Your Country ...'

This is the text of the historic Inaugural Address of President John F. Kennedy delivered in Washington on Janurary 20, 1961:

Vice President Johnson, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Chief Justice, President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon, President Truman, Rev. Clergy, fellow citizens:

We observe today, not a victory of party but a celebration of freedom — symbolizing an end as well as a beginning — signifying renewal as well as change. For I have sworn before you and Almighty God the same solemn oath our forebears prescribed nearly a century and three - quarters ago.

The world is very different now. For man holds in his mortal hands the power to abolish all forms of human poverty and all forms of human life. And yet the same revolutionary beliefs for which our forebears fought are still at issue around the globe — the belief that the rights of man come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God.

We dare not forget today that we are the heirs of that first revolution. Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans — born in this century, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage - and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which we are committed today at home and around the world.

Let every nation, know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty.

This much we pledge — and more.

To those old allies whose cultural and spiritual origins we share we pledge the loyalty of faithful friends. United, there is little we cannot do in a host of new cooperative ventures. Divided, there is little we can do—for we dare not meet a powerful challenge at odds and split asunder.

To those new states whom we welcome to the ranks of the free we pledge our word that one form of colonial control shall not have passed away merely to be replaced by a far more iron tyranny. We shall not always expect to find them supporting our view. But we shall always hope to find them strongly supporting their own freedom — and to remember that, in the past, those who fooolishly sought power by riding the back of the tiger ended up inside.

To those people in the huts and villages of half the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period is required — not because the Communists may be doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich.

To our sister republics south of our border, we offer a special pledge — to convert our good words into deeds — in a new alliance for progress — to assist free men and free governments in casting off the chains of prey of hostile powers. Let all our neighbors know that we shall join with them to oppose aggression or subversion anywhere in the Americas. And let every other power know that this hemisphere intends to remain the master of its own house.

LAST HOPE FOR PEACE

To that world assembly of sovereign states, the United Nations our last best hope in an age where the instruments of war have far outpaced the instruments of peace, we renew our pledge of support — to prevent it from becoming merely a forum for invective — to strengthen its shield of the new and the weak — and to enlarge the area in which its writ may run.

Finally, to those nations who would make themselves our adversary, we offer not a pledge but a request: that both sides begin anew the quest for peace, before the dark powers of destruction unleashed by science engulf all humanity in planned or accidental self - destruction.

We dare not tempt them with weakness. For only when our arms are sufficient beyond doubt can we be certain beyond doubt that they will never be employed.

But neither can two great and powerful groups of nations take comfort from our present course — both sides overburdened by the cost of modern weapons, both rightly alarmed by the steady spread of the deadly atom, yet both racing to alter that uncertain balance of terror that stays the hand of mankind's final war.

A NEW BEGINNING

So let us begin anew — remembering on both sides that civility is not a sign of weakness, and sincerity is always subject to proof. Let us never negotiate out of fear. But let us never fear to negotiate.

Let both sides explore what problems unite us instead of belaboring those problems which divide us.

Let both sides, for the first time, formulate serious and precise proposals for the inspection and control of arms — and bring the absolute power to destroy other nations under the absolute control of all nations.

Let both sides seek and invoke the wonders of science instead of its terrors. Together let us explore the stars, conquer the deserts, eradicate disease, tap the ocean depths and encourage the arts and commerce.

Let both sides unite to heed in all corners of the earth the command of Isaiah — to "undo the heavy burdens. . .and let the oppressed go free."

And if a beachhead of cooperation may push back the jungles of suspicion, let both sides join in creating a new endeavor — not a new balance of power, but a new world of law, where the strong and just and the weak secure and the peace preserved.

All this will not be finished in the first 100 days. Nor will it be finished in the first 1,000 days, nor in the life of this Administration, nor even perhaps in our lifetime on this planet. But let us begin.

In your hands, my fellow citizens, more than mine, will rest the final success or failure of our course. Since this country was founded, each generation of Americans has been summoned to give testimony to its national loyalty. The graves of young Americans who answered the call to service surround the globe.

Now the trumpet summons us again — not as a call to bear arms, though arms we need — not as a call to battle, though embattled we are — but a call to bear the burden of a long twilight struggle year in and year out, "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation" — a struggle against the common enemies of man: tyranny, poverty, disease and war itself.

Can we forge against these enemies a grand and global alliance, north and south, east and west, that can assure a more fruitful life for all mankind? Will you join in that historic effort?

In the long history of the world, only a few generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility — I welcome it. I do not believe that any of us would exchange places with any other people or any other generation. The energy, the faith, the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it — and the glow from that fire can truly light the world.

And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you —ask what you can do for your country.

My fellow citizens of the world: ask not what America will do for you — but what together we can do for the freedom of man.

Finally, whether you are citizens of America or citizens of the world, ask of us here the same high standards of strength and sacrifice which we ask of you.

With a good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds let us go forth to lead the land we love, asking His blessing and His help, but knowing that here on earth God's work must truly be our own.

AT THE BEGINNING—The Inauguration — President Kennedy served notice that all Americans would be a part and participants in his administration. Here on January 20, 1961, at the U. S. Capitol, Marian Anderson sang the "Star Spangled Banner" as the late president added his tenor voice. This set the tone of All-America for Mr. Kennedy's all-too-brief Presidency.

INAUGURATION: JANUARY 20 ,1961

'Ask What You Can Do For Your Country ...'

HIS GREATEST SPEECH:

"Every American ought to have the right to be treated as he would wish to be treated, as one would wish his children to be treated . . ."

From the House on June 12, 1963, the late President John F. Kennedy delivered a Civil Rights message to the nation via radio and television following the admission of two qualified students to the University of Alabama in the wake of Governor George Wallace's abortive attempt to stop them. Many citizens, colored and white, regarded this speech as President Kennedy's "greatest" on Civil Rights. The full text of the Civil Rights Address of June 12, 1963, follows:

Good evening, my fellow citizens.

This afternoon, following a series of threats and defiant statements, the presence of Alabama Guardsmen was required on the University of Alabama to carry out the final and unequivocal order of the United States District Court of the Northern District of Alabama. That order called for the admission of two clearly qualified young Alabama residents who happened to have been born Negro.

That they were admitted peacefully on the campus is due in good measure to the conduct of the students of the University of Alabama, who met their responsibilities in a constructive way.

I hope that every American, regardless of where he lives, will stop and examine his conscience about this and other related incidents. This nation was founded by men of many nations and backgrounds. It was founded on the principle that all men are created equal, and that the rights of every man are diminished when the rights of one man are threatened.

Today we are committed to a worldwide struggle to promote and protect all of those who wish to be free and when Americans are sent to Vietnam or West Berlin, we do not ask for whites only. It ought to be possible, therefore, for American students of any color to attend any public institution they select without having to be backed up by troops. It ought to be possible for American consumers of any color to receive equal service in places of public accommodation, such as hotels and restaurants and theaters and retail stores, without being forced to resort to demonstrations in the street, and it ought to be possible for American citizens of any color to register and vote in a free election without interference or fear of reprisal.

IT OUGHT to be possible, in short, for every American to enjoy the privilege of being American without regard to his race or his color. In short, every American ought to have the right to be treated as he would wish to be treated, as one would wish his children to be treated. But this is not the case.

The Negro baby born in America today, regardless of the section of the nation in which he is born, has about one-half as much chance of completing high school as a white baby born in the same place on the same day, one-third as much chance of completing college, one-third as much chance of becoming a professional man, twice as much chance of becoming unemployed, about one-seventh as much chance of earning $10,000 a year, a life expectancy which is seven years shorter, and the prospects of earning only half as much.

THIS IS not a sectional issue. Difficulties over segregation and discrimination exist in every city, in every state of the Union, producing in many cities a rising tide of discontent that threatens the public safety. Nor is this a partisan issue in a time of domestic crisis. Men of goodwill and generosity should be able to unite regardless of party or politics. This is not even a legal or legislative issue alone. It is better to settle these matters in the courts than in the streets, and new laws are needed at every level, but law alone cannot make men see right.

We are confronted primarily with a moral issue. It is as old as the Scriptures and is as clear as the American Constitution. The heart of the question is whether all Americans are to be afforded equal rights and equal opportunities, whether we are going to treat our fellow Americans as we want to be treated.

If an American, because his skin is dark, cannot eat lunch in a restaurant open to the public, if he cannot send his children to the best public school available, if he cannot vote for the public officials who represent him, if, in short, he cannot enjoy the full and free life which all of us want, then who among us would be content to have the color of his skin changed and stand in his place? Who among us would then be content with the counsels of patience and delay? One hundred years of delay have passed since President Lincoln freed the slaves, yet their heirs, their grandsons, are not fully free. They are not yet freed from the bonds of injustice. They are not yet freed from social and economic oppression, and this nation, for all its hopes and all its boasts, will not be fully free until its citizens are free.

WE PREACH freedom around the world and we mean it, and we cherish our freedom at home, but are we to say to the world and, much more importantly, to each other that this is a land of the free except for the Negroes; that we have no second-class citizens except Negroes; that we have no class or caste system, no ghettos, no master race except with respect to Negroes?

JOHN F. KENNEDY
Tells nation "Every American ought to have the same rights . . ."

Now the time has come for this nation to fulfill its promises. The events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or state or legislative body can prudently choose to ignore them.

The fires of frustration and discord are burning in every city, North and South, where legal remedies are not at hand. Redress is sought in the streets, in demonstrations, parades and protests which create tensions and threaten violence and threaten lives.

We face, therefore, a moral crisis as a country and as a people. It cannot be met by repressive police action. It cannot be left to increased demonstrations in the streets. It cannot be quieted by token moves or talk. It is a time to act in the Congress, in your state and local legislative body and, above all, in all of our daily lives.

It is not enough to pin the blame on others, to say this is a problem of one section of the country or another, or deplore it. The fact that we face a great change is at hand, and our task, our obligation is to make that revolution, that change, peaceful and constructive for all.

Those who do nothing are inviting shame as well as violence. Those who act boldly are recognizing right as well as reality.

NEXT WEEK I shall ask the Congress of the United States to act, to make a commitment it has not fully made in this century to the proposition that race has no place in American life or law. The federal judiciary has upheld that proposition in a series of forthright cases.

The Executive branch has adopted that proposition in the conduct of its affairs, including the employment of federal personnel, the use of federal facilities and the sale of federally financed housing.

But there are other necessary measures which only the Congress can provide, and they must be provided at this session. The old code of equity law under which we live demands for every wrong a remedy, but in too many communities, in too many parts of the country, wrongs are inflicted on Negro citizens for which there are no remedies at law. Unless the ongress acts, their only remedy is the street.

I AM, therefore, asking the Congress to enact legislation giving all Americans the right to be served in facilities which are open to the public hotels, restaurants, theaters retail stores and similar establishments.

This seems to me to be an elementary right. Its denial is an arbitrary indignity that no American in 1963 should have to endure, but many do.

I have recently met with scores of business leaders urging them to take voluntary action to end this discrimination and I have been encouraged by their response, and in the last two weeks over 75 cities have seen progress made in desegregating these kinds of facilities. But many are unwilling to act alone, and for this reason, nationwide legislation is needed if we are to move this problem from the streets to the courts.

I AM also asking Congress to authorize the Federal Government to participate more fully in law suits designed to end segregation in public education. We have succeeded in pursuading many districts to desegregate voluntarily. Dozens have admitted Negroes without violence. Today a Negro is attending a state-supported institution in every one of our 50 states, but the pace is very slow. Too many Negro children entering segregated grade school at the time of the Supreme Court's decision nine years ago will enter segregated high school this fall, having suffered a loss which can never be restored. The lack of an adequate education denies the Negro a chance to get a decent job.

The orderly implementation of the Supreme Court decision, therefore, cannot be left solely to those who may not have the economic resources to carry the legal action or who may be subject to harassment.

Other features will also be requested, including greater protection for the right to vote. But legislation, I repeat, cannot solve this problem alone. It must be solved in the homes of every American in every community across our country.

IN THIS respect, I want to pay tribute to those citizens North and South who have been working in their communities to make life better for all. They are acting not out of a sense of legal duty but out of a sense of human decency.

Like our soldiers and sailors in all parts of the world, they are meeting freedom's challenge on the firing line, and I salute them for their honor and their courage.

MY FELLOW Americans, this is a problem which faces us all—in every city of the North as well as the South. Today there are Negroes unemployed, two or three times as many compared to whites, inadequate in education, moving into the large cities, unable to find work, young people particularly out of work without hope, denied equal rights, denied the opportunity to eat at a restaurant or lunch counter or go to a movie theater, denied the right to a decent education, denied almost today the right to attend a state university although qualified — it seems to me that these are matters which concern us all, not merely President or Congressmen or Governors but every citizen of the United States. This is one country. It has become one country because all of us and all the people who come here had an equal chance to develop their talents.

We cannot say to 10 per cent of the population that you cannot have that right; that your children can't have the chance to develop whatever talents they have; that the only way that they are going to get their rights is to go into the streets and demonstrate.

I think we owe them and we owe ourselves a better country than that.

THEREFORE, I am asking for your help in making it easier for us to move ahead and prove the kind of equality of treatment which we would want ourselves; to give a chance for every child to be educated to the limit of his talents.

As I have said before, not every child has an equal talent or an equal ability or an equal motivation, but they should have the equal right to develop their talent and their ability and their motivation to make something of themselves.

We have a right to expect that the Negro community will be responsible, will uphold the law, but they have a right to expect that the law will be fair; that the Constitution will be color blind, as Justice Harlan said at the turn of the century.

This is what we are talking about and this is a matter which concerns this country and what it stands for, and in meeting it I ask the support of all of our citizens.

Thank you very much.

Revolutionary speeches

President Kennedy's two civil rights speeches, the first in February and the second in June. Last year (1963) were truly revolutionary speeches in the direct assault upon the entire civil rights question by the head of the American government. This is the first time such a thing has ever happened in the United States.

The President knew that he would alienate the white South and many timid souls in the North as well. Yet he realized that as a matter or principle, and just because it is right and has been so late in coming, he had to stand forthright on this question and seek new voting alliances, or not worry about them at all.

President Kennedy's Rights Bill, moderate as it is, is a revolutionary bill, if one takes a look at the past.

Sets Precedent

The elevation of colored people to top positions in the government in Washington and in foreign service was a high-water mark of President Kennedy's first year.

Plans for this were a topic of conversation among New Frontiersmen even before the inauguration address plaudits and campaign promises had cooled.

At the end of the first year 1961, the Kennedy record was already superb.

HE HAD named Dr. Robert C. Weaver to head the Housing and Home Finance Agency and Carl T. Rowan to the No. 2 post for Public Affairs at State. (Rowan in 1963 became ambassador to Finland where he is now.)

Kennedy appointed Andrew T. Hatcher to the No. 2 press spot at the White House and named Thurgood Marshall to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, in New York, a lifetime judgeship.

ANDREW T. HATCHER

The list goes on — with Clifton R. Wharton becoming ambassador to Norway; James B. Parsons and Wade McCree to life terms as U.S. District judges.

CECIL F. POOLE and Merle McCurdy were sworn in as the first of their race ever appointed Federal District Attorneys in the United States.

Lisle C. Carter was installed as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Many others were tapped or had the word passed to them that they would be.

Then, near year's end, word went out that the President would soon name more colored ambassadors. Just how many was not known but people mentioned as possibilities included Lester B. Granger and Horance Mann Bond of Atlanta.

Also Howard Bennett of Minneapolis, Carl Murphy of Baltimore, Mrs. Marjorie Lawson of Washington and John Hope Franklin of New York.

The President subsequently appointed Mrs. Lawson a judge in the District of Columbia.

Nominated 5 for lifetime judgeships

Perhaps no where will the mark of the late President John F. Kennedy be more indelible than in the area of the Federal Judiciary where he, in less than three years, pushed to seven the number of lifetime colored judges.

By comparison, President Eisenhower in eight full years in office appointed 186 lifetime Federal judges. None was colored. President Roosevelt in slightly more than 12 years appointed 216. Not one was colored.

President Truman appointed 142 during his almost eight years. Two of these were colored: Judge William Henry Hastie, Third Judicial Circuit at Philadelphia, and the late Irvin C. Mollison of Illinois.

BUT MR. KENNEDY, in his brief presidency, nominated a total of eight colored persons for judgeships. Five of them have been named to lifetime judgeships. Two, on whom Congress failed to act, have been renamed by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

If these two Kennedy nominees—A. Leon Higginbotham Jr. of Philadelphia and Spootswood W. Robinson III of Richmond, Va. — get Senate confirmation, it will raise to the all-time high of seven, the number of lifetime Federal judges.

President Kennedy nominated these judges:

James B. Parsons, U.S. District Court, 7th Illinois, August 7, 1961.

Wade H. McCree Jr., U.S. District, Michigan, September 1961.

Thurgood Marshall, U.S. court of Appeals, 2nd District, New York, September 1961.

A. Leon Higginbotham Jr., U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, September 25, 1963.

Spottswood Robinson III, U.S. District Judge, District of Columbia, October 1963.

IN ADDITION, Kennedy named colored people to the courts of the District of Columbia — Marjorie McKensie Lawson to the juvenile court and Joseph C. Waddy to the Domestic Relations court.

He reappointed Judge Andrew Howard to the D.C. Municipal court in 191. All three are for 10-year terms.

In general, Mr. Kennedy's selections for the bench have been praised by lawyers, other public officials and newspapers. The outcry by Southerners to some appointments only pointed up more clearly the boldness of the action.

At the time Judge Marshall was named, he was the National NAACP's chief legal expert and practicing attorney. Similarly, Spotwood Robinson is a celebrated NAACP lawyer and former dean of the Howard University Law School.

A. LEON HIGGINBOTHAM

When President John F. Kennedy set out to find his chief of housing in 1961, he knew he would have to find an extraordinary man—that is, if the slightest progress was to be made toward better living.

President Kennedy knew from the start of his reign that there was no field of welfare greater than the problem of housing.

The President believed that the home was the citadel of the family. He knew that drab, rat-infested tenements—like those in Harlem—were a detriment to the country.

He knew that such conditions could only drive men to bars, innocent children to delinquency, and breed discontent and frustration that would cause people to rebel in streets.

President Kennedy knew of this first hand. He had seen during his campaign for Congress the noisome tenements in Charleston and East Boston.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY also knew that no ordinary man would even have the guts to tackle such a mammoth problem as American housing presented. He needed a superman, one with extreme competence and forcefulness.

The man who best measured up to the job was Robert Clifton Weaver.

His 25 years in urban planning, his Ph. D. from Harvard, his two books relating to the housing problem earned him the reputation of knowing more about subsidized housing than anyone else in the country.

But, after finding the man, putting him to work wasn't the easiest job for the President. As usual, he faced opposition from racially-oriented Dixiecrats, but nevertheless, the President won.

And Dr. Weaver became the first of his race to become Administrator of the Agency, which then made him boss of 11,000 employees, a $2.4 billion annual budget and five sub-agencies.

THE FIGHT that President Kennedy had in getting his nomination approved by the Senate was best illustrated in a AFRO headline that appeared in the Feb. 11, 1961 edition. It cheered:

They Tried, They Pried And Southerners Cried, But U.S. Was On Weaver's Side.

Dr. Weaver, who was chairman of the NAACP Board of Directors when President Kennedy named him also knew that good housing meant more than bricks and mortar.

"Housing it more than shelter," Dr. Weaver once said, "Housing is people."

That was the human viewpoint that the President cherished.

And had the President had his way, housing would have had a representative in the Cabinet. That's how important he thought housing was.

BUT, AS IT happened, Congress said "No" and the Kennedy ideal of creating a department of urban affairs and housing, with Dr. Weaver as its head, was killed.

But, with the Kennedy spirit still prevailing, the extraordinary Dr. Weaver may still wind up as the first Cabinet member.

President Kennedy thought he was the best man for the post.

DR. WEAVER TAKES OATH OF OFFICE AS HOUSING CHIEF AS PRESIDENT KENNEDY LOOKS ON FROM THE LEFT

KENNEDY AND LINCOLN

The murder of President Kennedy in Dallas, Tex., has been widely compared to the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

Both Presidents gave their lives in efforts to reshape the nation into a more democratic society. Neither came to the White House with the conviction that the racial problem was the most serious crisis confronting the republic.

Lincoln said his first goal was to preserve the union, and that if it was necessary for the colored race to remain in slavery to achieve that end, he would be powerless to emancipate them.

Kennedy entered the White House convinced that America's greatest danger was the threat from international tyranny.

LIKE LINCOLN, Kennedy believed strongly, personally, in equality but he did not see it as the most compelling business. Like Lincoln, the racial issue was forced upon him. He could do not other than confront it and oppose those sought to perpetuate their policie of the colored man's exclusion. aim was to attack the racial problem

Accordingly, the President's first aim was to attack the racial problem in those places where national unrest might most easily occur — in the public places and in voting.

As the situation worsened last spring, he recognized the need for a wide and sweeping civil rights program and urged it upon the Congress, in one of the most remarkable speeches ever made by a President to the nation? So the question of hatred — hatred by some Americans for other Americans — drowned all the other pertinent business of state and consumed the first energies of John F. Kennedy.

HIS WAS THE most articulate and far-reaching indictment of racial torment of any President since Lincoln. His were the ringing words that Americans who could fight and die together could live and work together. From him came the reminder that unemployment in the colored community was twice that among whites and that income was but half, and that life expectancy was seven years less.

John F. Kennedy rose to the challenge of racism. He opposed it strongly and with conviction. He recognized that hatred and brutality and defiance of the federal and constitutional law must be stricken down in all their forms. It was part of the irony and tragedy of his murder that he was cut down by an extremist whose hatred outweighed his every other consideration.

John Kennedy's lieutenant, Lyndon B. Johnson, worked seriously to carry out the Kennedy goals of wiping out discrimination in employment by those companies which did business with the federal authority. Although Texas - born, political analyst William S. White said of him, "There is no intolerance in the man."

Now the unfinished business of John Fitzgerald Kennedy devolves on President Johnson, and his supporters, in Congress and across the nation. That business is to wipe out the mass hatred and oppression which is so widespread in this nation.

AN EXAMPLE of President and Mrs. Kennedy's attitude on civil rights was the historic White House reception given in February, 1963 on Lincoln's Birthday, commemorating the 100th Anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation. The affair drew more than 1200 persons from all walks of life from all over the country and was the talk of the 1963 Winter Season. Never before in history had so many colored guest been invited to the White House for a reception of any kind.

The tragic death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy a little over two months ago, dealt a severe loss to the world of sports.

No White House occupant of recent memory displayed as much genuine interest in athletes and athletics as did the young Chief Executive who was felled by an assassin's bullet, Nov. 22, in Dallas, Texas.

Himself a football player and swimmer of some medium ability in his undergraduate days at Choate Prep and Harvard, President Kennedy was a fervent admirer of those who played these and other games with high success.

That it was he who breathed life into a long - neglected national physical fitness program, is only one facet of the man's attachment to athletics. During his short reign in Wahington there was constant evidence that he enjoyed being a part of the athlete's world.

JOHN F. KENNEDY made opening American League baseball games occasions for White House holidays. He attended Army-Navy football games, Big Ten gridiron spectacles and had already accepted an invitation to preside at ceremonies for the National Open Golf tournament, slated for a Washington (DC) club in June.

At such times as he was at the old Griffith Stadium and the new D.C. Stadium for American League baseball, he made a point of personal contact with the likes of Cookie Lavagetto, Earl Battey, Mickey Vernon and Minnie Minoso, to name a few.

THE ADDRESS at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue was invariably "open house" when new world champions were crowned.

That is how it came to pass that Floyd Patterson and Sonny Liston, Wilma Rudolph and Ralph Boston, Stan Musical and Warren Spahn received special invitations to visit with the President and his family.

The world champion Boston Celtics — Bill Russell, Bob Cousy, et al — were welcomed following their fifth straight basketball championship. The same happened when the United States representatives returned from the 1960 Olympic Games.

Broadjump champion Ralph Boston, sprinters Bob Hayes, Paul Drayton and Edith McGuire, and hurdler Hayes Jones were among the group that had invitations awaiting upon their return from Rome.

No other President in history — the two Roosevelts, Wilson, Coolidge, Harding, Truman nor Eisenhower— exhibited as much enthusiasm for sports, and the individual stars who inhabit it.

And it most certainly wasn't because John Fitzgerald Kennedy was any less busy than were they who preceded him. Rather, it was because none had the abiding love for competitive performance that belonged to him.

SERVICEMEN FROM FIVE SERVICES WERE PALLBEARERS.

GRIEF WAS WRITTEN on the faces of mourners everywhere as a sorrowful nation watched the funeral services after the tragic death of its great, young (46) and beloved President. More than a million filed past the bier in the rotunda of the U. S. Capitol and millions more watched the impressive rites on television throughout the country and the world.

SORROWFUL FINAL JOURNEY

This week as the calendar shows the third anniversary date of the late President John F. Kennedy's historic inauguration on January 20 1961, the nation and the world look back on these sorrowful and mournful scenes of the dark weekend in November.

As an aftermath of the tragic assassination in Dallas, Texas on Friday, November 22nd 1963, 1035 days after his imauguration, the body of President Kennedy was buried in Arlington National Cemetery on Monday, November 25th, 1963. Impressive rites marked the funeral service, in which he was eulogized in his own words.

Everything that was said served to strengthen the fact that the nation's youngest President had become a symbol to the colored citizen of his struggle for full equality as a citizen as a voter, and as a human being in the United States.

Many were quick to point out that it was significant that Kennedy should be interred in the same cemetery where the remains of Medgar Evers lie. Evers, NAACP field secretary for Mississippi was, like Kennedy, the victim of a sniper's bullet. Kennedy in eulogizing Evers had called him a hero of national greatness. So was Kennedy.

It is understandable why Evers devoted himself to the cause of civil rights. He was a colored man and from Mississippi where racial oppression is greatest.

But how did Kennedy develop his compassion for the great human cause?

No man of his Roman Catholic faith had ever been successful in winning access to the White House. He faced the same religious prejudice that had thwarted Al Smith, also a Roman Catholic, in 1928.

KENNEDY DID what many others faced with prejudice had done and are doing. He set out to fight it with every weapon he could muster — and he won.

But in winning, he must have developed a better understanding of and a sympathy for others who were and are the victims of a cruel and meaningless prejudice — the colored American.

No one can tell, but there is every reason to suspect that because of his priviliged background he might never have understood the problems, the discontent and the urgent militancy of the colored citizen had he not himself been cast in the unhappy role of one confronted by prejudice.

INTEGRATED TROOPS ACCOMPANIED PRESIDENT KENNEDY TO HIS LAST RESTING PLACE, A SYMBOL OF HIS BELIEF IN JUSTICE.

GIFT FROM AFRICA—Indicative of the esteem with which Africans as well as other foreign dignitaries held for the late President Kennedy was the numerous and novel gifts they presented Mr. Kennedy. In 1961, President Fulbert Youlou of the Republic of Congo gave the President elephant tusks during an informal visit to the White House. The 44-year-old African who wears the cassock of a priest was presented a bust of Lincoln by Mr. Kennedy in the exchange of gifts.

KENNEDY QUOTES

"Justice cannot wait for too many meetings. It cannot wait the action of the Congress or even the courts. We face a moment of moral and constitutional crises—and men of generosity and vision must make themselves heard in every part of the land."

At U.S. Conference of Mayors. meeting in Honolulu, Hawaii June 9, 1963

"THE UNITED STATES is opposed to discrimination and persecution on grounds of race and religion anywhere in the world, including our own nation. We are working to right the wrongs of our own country.

"Through legislation and administrative action, through moral and legal commitment, this Government has launched a determined effort to rid our nation of discrimination which has existed far too long—in education, in housing, in transportation, in employment, in Civil Service, in recreation and in places of public accommodation."

at United Nations General Assembly Sept. 20, 1963

"Children are the world's most valuable resource and its best hope for the future. It is a real tragedy that in an era of vast technological progress and scientific achievement millions of children should still suffer from lack of medical care, proper nutrition, adequate education, and be subjected to the handicaps and uncertainties of low-income substardard environment."

In White House Statement Oct. 31, 1963

"I believe in America where religious intolerance will someday end—where all men and all churches are treated as equal—where every man has the same right to attend or not to attend the church of his choice—where there is no Catholic vote, no anti-Catholic vote...and where Catholics, Protestants, Jews...will refrain from those attitudes of disdain and division which have so often marred their works in the past, and promote instead the American ideal of brotherhood."

.Meeting With Protestant Ministers Houston, Sept. 12, 1960

"The courage of life is often a less dramatic spectacle than the courage of a final moment; but it is no less than a magnificent mixture of triumph and tragedy. A man does what he must—in spite of personal consequences, in spite of obstacles and dangers and pressures—and that is the basis of all human morality."

From 'Profiles in Courage'—1955

"This is a dangerous and uncertain world...No one expects our lives to be easy—not in this decade, not in this century."

His Last Speech, Fort Worth, Texas,

. . . "Men of generosity and vision must make themselves heard in every part of the land. I do say that all men are equal in their ability, character and motivation. I do say that every American should be given a fair chance to develop in full whatever talents he has and to share equally in the American dream."

In Honolulu, June, 1963

To the world's downtrodden, underprivileged and oppressed, those 1,035 days, from inauguration Day, 1961, to the assassination, November 22, 1963 were too good to be true.

President John F. Kennedy was someone, and in the highest station on earth, who cared about their plight, who articulated their feelings, and achieved results in their behalf.

In those 1,035 days, they felt their burdens grow lighter, their hopes stronger and their sense of being somebody restored.

President John F. Kennedy stood for justice and the equality of all men.

ON THE PRESSING issue of civil rights—which so many leaders before him had cowardly evaded—he boldly faced and transformed noble precepts into meaningful deeds. He put the full power and prestige of his office behind the colored citizens' drive for human dignity.

He did so not because he thought it would help him politically (it is believed he lost more votes than he gained), but because he thought it was right; because he thought decency and justice demanded it; because he knew it necessary to keep faith in American democracy—and people over the world who were crying for the same freedom colored Americans were and still are seeking.

ON OTHER ISSUES that were linked with the promoting of a higher quality of life for the little man, he also took action:

He gave aid to newly independent nations in their efforts to remain free. Through the Peace Corps he helped underdeveloped nations to help themselves. He declared war against poverty. He also thought about the welfare of children, the sick, the aged. No one was without his concern.

President Kennedy identified himself with the hopes and aspirations of peoples everywhere. He believed in peace, a good full life for all and, above all, freedom. And, by freedom, he didn't mean one race looking down on another.

THIS IS WHY the end of those 1,035 days tore into the hearts of men everywhere. This is why most people felt as though they had lost a member of their family when they got the terrible news in November 22, 1963.

This is why the colored sharecropper in Mississippi was saddened because it wasn't his body instead of the President's that absorbed the assassin's wicked bullet.

This is why the Japanese family went 18 miles—every step on foot—to stand in front of the American Embassy as an expression of respect and sympathy.

This is why the students, carrying memorial torches, marched in Berlin.

And this is why the Kayunga Boys Club of Burerere, Uganda became the John F Kennedy Boys' Club less than 15 hours after the senseless tragedy

To the world's downtrodden, underprivileged and oppressed, those 1,035 days were too good to be true. Those days, like a fleeting dream, were only too short. They were unnecessarily short.

This is why the world's great and small in every town and hamlet mourned his loss, and those who could, came in person to Washington to pay a final tribute.

Selassie headed Africans

His Imperial Majesty, Haile Selassie I, Emperor of Ethiopia headed the list of African dignitaries who flew in from their respective countries or posts in the United States to pay homage to the memory of the late President John F. Kennedy.

The Emperor, accompanied by his aides—Ras Andare Atchew Massai, fara-Woro Kidane-Wold and Liji Kassa Wolde-Mariam—was one of two colored chiefs of state to personally make the trip to the U.S. to attend the Kennedy funeral services. The other was Sir Alexander Bustamante, first prime minister of the fledgling independent nation of Jamaica in the Carfibbean.

At least 14 other African nations were represented by high government officials, or their diplomatic representatives either to the United Nations or to Washington.

Afraid to Stay in Office, Resigning Negro Says

LAWTEY, Fla., Jan. 28 (AP)—Lawtey's first Negro councilman has resigned because he said he "was afraid not to."

Robert Scott, a 50-year-old brickmason, said he had been receiving threatening telephone calls since he was elected Dec. 3. He finished third in a field of nine. The top three won seats.

"He received full protection from the town and the Bradford County sheriff's office," Mayor Charles Shuford said after receiving the resignation Monday, "but I didn't want to encourage him to stay in office because if something were to happen, I wouldn't want to be responsible."

Lawtey is a town of 1,000 in northeast Florida. About 140 Negroes are registered voters and 108 are white.

ELSEWHERE in Florida two other race cases were reported.

Theodore Norley, an orthopedic surgeon at Good Samaritan Hospital in West Palm Beach, said he was removed from the staff because he wanted the hospital to accept Negro patients and doctors. The hospital administrator said Norley was removed because he failed to correct a patient's chart.

Gen. Arthur H. Carter (USA-Ret.), president of the hospital, denied that race had anything to do with the action. He said, "We don't have to give a reason. Good Samaritan is a private hospital."

In Quincy, three white persons were charged with disturbing the peace after they went to Gadsden County to start a voter registration drive among Negroes. They were Judy Benninger, former University of Florida student; Rosemary Dudley, former Florida State student; and Dennis Floyd, a student at FSU. Julius Hamilton, a Negro student at Florida A&M was charged with open profanity.

Sen. Johnson After A Year In The Senate

United Press International

The confident young man leaned back in his chair, a cigar clenched between his fingers, and pondered his politics.

"That first year paid off in dividends this year," he said explaining the relatively quiet time he spent during his first hitch in the Georgia Senate last year.

"This year the formality that once existed has been watered away. Last year it was Senator Johnson this, and good morning Senator Johnson and good evening Senator Johnson.

The young man is Leroy Johnson, a former meat cutter in a supermarket in Durham, N. C. where he was eventually graduated from the North Carolina College Law School. Today, at 38 Johnson is the first Negro in a dixie legislature in half a century.

"This year there is a handshaking and backslapping kind of approval, a sort of entry into inner circles, including cocktails in hotel rooms" he said.

"I have always been treated well here," he said waving a hand in the direction of the legislative chambers, "but this year the formality has eased."

HE CHANGES

This represents a change not only on the part of Johnson's white colleagues, but also by Johnson himself who last year trod the state capitol's corridors as if he were walking barefoot on razor blades.

Although things may not be going as swimmingly as they might appear, Johnson by virtue of his race and his legislation is the leading advocate of civil rights in the Georgia General Assembly.

And if all his proposed legislation hasn't emerged victorious from the various committees, neither have all the anti-civil rights measures—which he has opposed.

"They like the ole boy over there," said one seasoned observer of the Georgia Senate. While they did not like him enough to pass Johnson's public accommodations bill which ended up in a health study committee, the Senate did recently give him a 43-0 vote on a resolution to join other states in prohibiting the poll tax in federal elections.

represents a predominately Negro section of the city—labeled an "Uncle Tom" for not raising more cain.

IGNORES LABEL

Johnson ignored the label. "I wanted to gain the respect of the Georgia legislature," he said. "I think I did. Now I can introduce civil rights legislation and can deal from a position of strength rather than weakness," he added.

"I have made crystal clear where I stand and where I ought to go in the area of civil rights. They all know it and I think respect me for it," he said.

Johnson says he has never had any "difficulties" at the once stringently segregated Georgia state capitol. This, he adds, includes use of wash room facilities and the employes cafeteria. The "white only" signs have been removed. In his role as the only Negro legislator in the south, Johnson has racked up about 200,000 miles in traveling across the country on speaking tours.

He denied that Negroes would use their "united vote" as a bloc vote, but in good political phraseology he made it "crystal clear" that vote in Georgia, for example, would be used in attempts to unseat men like U. S. Sens. Richard B. Russell and Herman Talmadge.

ICE BOX TREATMENT

The Senate also gave the ice-box treatment to the only two anti-civil rights measures to come up this year—bills to limit picketing and forestall the admittance of Negroes to hotels.

"If I can just keep those two bills shunted off the mainstream, I'll have considered my work this session pretty successful," Johnson said.

In his role at applying pressure to kill the two anti-measures, Johnson sees himself as a "detector" of bills he thinks are bad for Negroes.

The Senate committee that gave one of them the deep freeze treatment was headed by Lt. Gov. Peter Zack Geer, a former vocal segregationist considered a leading contender for the next governor's race.

During Johnson's first term last year, he was rarely heard from. Some Negro groups in Atlanta—he

Seek Answer To Hatcher's Future Role

WASHINGTON — Resignation of Andrew T. Hatcher as associate White House press secretary, in conjunction with the departure of Press Secretary Pierre Salinger, has provoked conjecture as to what Hatcher's future political role will be and whether or not another Negro will be named to the post.

Hatcher, who became the highest ranking Negro ever to serve on the White House staff, stepped down last week at the same time that Salinger announced his resignation in order to seek the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from California.

The move came as no surprise for insiders, for Hatcher previously had indicated that he would not remain on the White House staff if Salinger decided to leave. The two were close associates long before both came to Washington from the West Coast.

The tie between Salinger and Hatcher more and likely will continue, for Hatcher was one of two men accompanying Salinger when he arrived in California to file for the Senatorial race, just two hours before the deadline.

Hatcher, who reportedly turned down an ambassadorship to one of the African nations recently, is believd to be close to the forces of Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy. These forces, it was reported, had tried to persuade Hatcher to remain on the White House staff, at least until the Democratic convention.

But there were also some speculations that he may try to lay the groundwork to gain Negro support for RFK for the vice presidential nomination.

Immediately following the double resignation in Washington, George Reedy, a longtime Johnson associate, was named new White House press secretary.

Simultaneously, speculation arose as to whether a Negro will be named to Reedy's staff.

Though no official word has been issued as of yet, it is considered by some that the present administration might not deem it as important to have race representation in this area, in light of President Johnson's previous appointment of Carl T. Rowan as head of the U. S. Information Agency. Rowan's appointment made him the highest ranking Negro ever to serve in the executive branch of the government.

In addition, a Negro woman, Miss Gerry Whittington, serves as President Johnson's personal secretary.

On the other hand, it is considered that President Johnson might need a Negro advisor at closer hand to avoid even small blunders, due to the critical state of race relations in the nation, as the time for the national political conventions daws nigh.

N.J. Negro Congressional Candidate Is Nominated

Cite: Daily Ind. 4-24-64

NEWARK, N. J. — (UPI) — Republicans nominated the first Negro congressional candidate in New Jersey history Tuesday in a primary election that stirred little interest and prompted only a fractional turnout of the registered voters.

A dull ballot and rainy, chilly weather combined to keep voters home. In some areas, officials said only 10 to 15 per cent of the registered voters bothered to make it to the polls. The total turnout was about 25 per cent.

There were few noteworthy contests and even less controversial ballots for presidential and vice issues. There were no names on the presidential races although 19 of the state's 21 counties permitted write - in votes.

This prompted only minor response.

In fragmentary returns, U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge held a slim lead over Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz. Lodge had 403 votes for 398 for Goldwater.

Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon had 201, New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller 34 and Pennsylvania Gov., William W. Scranton 41.

Segregationist Gov. George Wallace of Alabama picked up 39 write in votes from both Republican and Democratic voters. President Johnson garnered 48 write - ins in the Democratic balloting.

The Negro nominated was William L. Stubbs of Newark, the city's GOP central ward leader. He will run against the 11th Congressional District incumbent, Democrat Joseph G. Minish, in Nov.

Other organization backed candidates won handily. Also on the ballot were 235 delegates to the party convention whose election was a foregone conclusion.

GOP Has Negro On Primary Unit

By FRED TRAVIS
Chattanooga Times Bureau

NASHVILLE—In an apparent effort to placate Negroes following refusal to place one of them on the Tennessee delegation to the GOP national convention, the state Republican executive committee Monday appointed a Negro on the party's primary board for Hamilton County.

Judson Webb, Chattanooga Negro and cochairman of the GOP executive committee for Hamilton County, was appointed to the board.

His name evidently was added to the list at the last minute and as a result of complaints by Chattanooga Negroes about Tennessee Republicans' decision to send an all-white delegation to the national convention and back Sen. Barry Goldwater, Arizona conservative, for the party's presidential nomination.

Four white persons were named to the board which will conduct the Aug. 6 Republican primary in Hamilton County. They are Dan Hunter, Mrs. Una C. Meacham, Mrs. Cleo Pendergrass and Ray Gouldy.

The list of five white persons for the board had been drawn up over the weekend, but Monday morning, shortly before the state Republican executive committee met, one of the white persons was scratched off and Webb's name added.

Frank Todd Meacham, Chattanooga lawyer and general counsel for the committee, declined to reveal the name removed to make way for Webb. Meacham was in charge of drawing up the tentative lists on the basis of recommnedations submitted to him by Republican leaders over the state.

Rep. William E. Brock III of Chattanooga was reported to have been consulted on the primary board appointments for the Third Congressional District. However, it could not be learned whether Brock had recommended a Negro be placed on the board.

Brock participated here Saturday in the state Republican convention which confirmed selection of an all-white delegation to the national convention at San Francisco.

Speaking to the Republican committee meeting as a state primary board, W. M. Ables Jr., South Pittsburg lawyer, predicted Brock will be re-elected to Congress in November. But he admitted there may be some difficulty.

"Congressman Brock is doing a fine job for his district, and I believe he will win re-election," Ables said. "I believe we will carry Marion County this time. We lost it before."

Patten Abshire, Chattanooga and Washington lawyer, presided. He criticized what he called the "news management' 'by the Johnson administration.

"The people are being fed propaganda until it is difficult for them to know what to believe," he said.

Long-Time Communist Runs for Supervisor

First Time in 14 Years That Known Member of Party Has Been on Ballot

BY PAUL BECK
Times Staff Writer

For the first time in 14 years a member of the Communist Party will be on the ballot June 2 in Los Angeles.

He is William C. Taylor, a 54-year-old Negro running against veteran supervisor Kenneth Hahn in the 2nd District.

Taylor said Wednesday he has been a member of the Communist Party for 35 years and before coming to California in 1950 was for four years chairman of the party in Washington, D.C.

He is under no illusions that he will beat Hahn, who was first elected supervisor in 1952 after five years on the City Council.

"But I think I'll get near 25,000 votes," he told The Times. "If I don't win, I'll still feel that I have won because the votes will show the Board of Supervisors how people in this district think and it should force them to take up some of the serious problems affecting the people in this district."

With 449,934 registered voters in the district and an anticipated vote of about 200,000 on June 2, the number of votes Taylor pulls has caused some concern in Hahn's headquarters.

A spokesman said if Taylor gets as many as 20,000 or 30,000 votes "it could be used as propaganda fodder by the Communist Party."

Councilman Thomas Bradley, a Negro, asked about Taylor's candidacy, said he considers it "more of a lark. I don't expect he'll get any significant support in the Negro community or anywhere else."

Bernadette Doyle of San Diego, who ran for state superintendent of public instruction in 1950, was a known Communist. Mrs. Dorothy Healy, chairman of the Communist Party in Southern California, said Walter A. Martin, who campaigned for Los Angeles county sheriff in 1950, also was a Communist.

Mrs. Doyle received 605,393 votes statewide against 1,771,245 for former Superintendent Roy E. Simpson. Martin ran fourth with 40,000 votes in a five-man race that drew about a million votes.

Taylor freely discusses his Communist background and his campaign literature points out he is a "Communist spokesman."

He said he is employed by the Communist Party as a writer and is conducting a "low budget campaign" which he hopes will cost about $2,000.

He said he is not assisted financially by the Communist Party. But his two campaign co-chairmen are Communists. One is Mrs. Healy. The other is Pettis Perry, identified by the House Committee on Un-American activities as a Communist official.

Aimed at Minorities

At a May Day rally for Taylor, one of the speakers was Bob Thompson, described in Taylor's campaign literature as "one of the outstanding national Communist speakers . . . currently active in New York." Thompson served nearly five years in a federal prison after his conviction under the Smith Act.

Taylor freely acknowledges his campaign is aimed at the Negro and Mexican-American vote in the Second District, which is about 30% Negro and about 5% Mexican-American.

He said he is seeking the county post "because it is high time that the war against poverty be fought in this area" as well as on city, state and federal levels.

Pushes Three Issues

"My campaign will mainly be on three issues," he said: Decrease the small property-owners tax, increase taxes on large corporations and put more money into county social welfare programs.

Taylor said many of his supporters "do not like my Communist ideas" but nevertheless "see eye to eye with me on some things" because many problems in the Negro community are not being corrected by supervisors.

Taylor also says he is against the initiative to repeal the Rumford Act, wants military spending cut and calls for an end to "mistreatment of Negroes and Mexicans by police or sheriff's deputies."

Taylor, who was required to sign a loyalty oath before filing his nomination papers, said "I had no qualms about that. I don't consider myself or the Communist Party to be subversive."

Negroes Win Alabama Races

Negro Elec. & App

TUSKEGEE, Alabama (AP)—Negroes in Macon County, where racial tension still simmers in the wake of school desegregation, apparently have defeated white opponents in a Democratic primary.

All four Negro candidates seeking county offices led the ticket in yesterday's election.

One faced a possible runoff against a white incumbent, but there were enough uncounted votes—mostly in predominantly Negro precincts—to win outright.

With four boxes untabulated out of 20 in the county, Reverend V. A. Edwards led the runnerup by 209 votes in the race for one seat on the county governing body. He was shy of a majority, however.

The other Negro candidates, including Dr. C. G. Gomillion, one of Alabama's foremost civil rights leaders, apparently were nominated without a runoff.

Democratic nomination in this section is equivalent to election.

Macon is the only Alabama county where Negroes outnumber white voters. The recently published offiical poll list showed 3,499 white and 3,642 Negro voters eligible to vote in local and state races.

Edwards, religious extension director at Tuskegee Institute, had 1,229 votes; Virgil Guthrie incumbent, had 1,020; Hoyt Sheppard received 598; Herman Daughtry 371; and W. C. Dillard 144.

Gomillion, professor of sociology at the Negro college, drew 1,493 votes for a seat on the county school board now held by Emerson Guthrie, a brother of Virgil Guthrie. The incumbent had 949 votes and O. C. Bryant 805.

Two Negro businessmen, William J. Childs and William C. Allen, were nominated for justice of the peace in separate races. Childs, a service statinon owner, had 989 votes to 710 for Kyle Freeman. Allen, who operates a merchandizing store, led James R. Perry Sr., 970 votes to 654.

It was an historic climax to a long struggle for voting rights which finally gave the Negroes an unquestioned majority at the polls after a federal judge ordered all qualified applicants registered.

And it was the first time in almost a century in Alabama that Negroes were able to win a county election.

For many years, Negroes in Tuskegee and elsewhere in the county complained that white registration authorities turned them down because of their race. The federal judge, Frank M. Johnson Jr., concluded in his investigation that there had been systematic discrimination.

Elsewhere in Alabama, two Negro women also sought nomination in the primary, but both were defeated.

Mrs. Amelia Platts Boynton of Selma made an unsuccessful race for Congress against Representative Kenneth Roberts. And in Jefferson County (Birmingham), a Negro school teacher, Mrs. Bernice Johnson, lost in her race for the county school board.

3 Negroes Win Nomination In Macon Co.; Runoff Due

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Three of the four Negro candidates seeking county office in Macon County appeared Tuesday night to have won Democratic nomination.

The fourth Negro candidate in the county where famed Tuskegee Institute is located was leading four white opponents, but faced the prospects of a runoff June 2.

By contrast, a Negro woman running for Congress and another seeking a place on the Jefferson County (Birmingham) School Board were lagging far behind.

In Tuskegee, Dr. C. G. Gomillion, a Negro college professor, appeared to have won nomination for a place on the Macon County School Board.

Returns from 16 of the county's 20 boxes gave the Tuskegee Institute faculty member 1,493 votes to 949 for incumbent Emerson Guthrie and 805 for O. C. Bryant. The later two are white.

That wasn't enough to get Gomillion by without a runoff, but two of the four still-uncounted boxes were from the all-Negro precinct at Tuskegee Institute.

Another Tuskegee Institute staff member, the Rev. V. A. Edwards, was out in front in his race for a seat on the county governing body, the Board of Revenue, but there was a possibility of a runoff there.

Returns from the 16 boxes counted gave Edwards 1,229 votes; Virgil Guthrie, a brother of Emerson Guthrie, 1,020; Hoyt Sheppard 598; Herman D.

Two other Negro candidates, William C. Allen and William J. Childs, apparently won the nomination for justice of the peace in their separate races. With five out of eight boxes tabulated in the Tuskegee precinct where they ran, Allen had 970 votes to 654 for his white opponent, James R. Perry Sr.; Childs had 989 votes and Kyle Freeman, another white candidate, received 710.

The three remaining boxes in those races have heavy Negro votes.

In the congressional race in the 4th District, Mrs. Amelia Platts Boynton, a Selma businesswoman and civil rights leader, was running far behind Rep. Kenneth Roberts. With 66 boxes out of 320 counted, Mrs. Boynton had 1,517 votes, Roberts had 11,760.

A Negro school teacher, Mrs. Bernice Johnson, lagged behind her white opponents in the race for the Jefferson County School Board.

It was the strongest Negro bid for political recognition in Alabama in almost a century.

Four Negroes Win Nomination Races

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP)—Jubilant Negro voters set their sights on the coming city election in Tuskegee on Wednesday after nominating four members of their race for county office.

Until the official canvass was made of returns from Tuesday's Democratic primary, it appeared that one of the Negro candidates would be forced into a runoff against a white officeholder. But the official count gave the Negro the nomination outright.

Victory in the Democratic primary is equivalent to election in Macon County, where racial tension still is evident in the wake of school desegregation.

With the historic breakthrough in the county elections, Negro leaders turned their attention to the City Council.

There were rpeorts that Negroes have agreed to put up candidates for two of the council seats. In Tuskegee, as well as throughout the county, they now outnumber white voters.

Two Negroes have filed as independent candidates for county office in the November general election, but whether they get the mass support of the Negro voters remains to be seen.

One of them, Detroit Lee, is running for probate judge against Sheriff Preston Hornsby, who won the nomination for that office with the help of a majority of the Negro voters. Hornsby gained support among the Negroes a year ago by appointing a Negro deputy.

The Rev. V. A. Edwards, religious extension director at Tuskegee Institute, defeated four white opponents for a place on the county governing body.

Another Tuskegee Institute faculty member, Dr. C. G. Gomillion, won the nomination for a seat on the five-member county school board. Gomillion headed the drive for Negro voter registration.

Negro businessmen William J. Childs and William C. Allen were nominated for justice of the peace in separate races.

Tuskegee and Macon County have long been the centers of racial strife, and repeated complaints of discrimination finally brought a federal court order which led to the registration of more voters.

In recent months, the desegregation of three high schools brought mass boycotts by white pupils and in one community, Notasulga, the desegregated school was destroyed by a fire which a state fire marshal said appeared to have been started by arsonists.

3 Negroes Score Breakthrough in Alabama County Primary Election

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (UPI) — Negro voters Wednesday credited a persistent registration drive with permitting them to score their first breakthrough in Alabama politics since Reconstruction.

Dr. Charles G. Gomillion, Negro dean of the School of Arts and Sciences at Tuskegee Institute, and two other Negroes were nominated over white opponents for Macon County offices in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

A fourth Negro was a strong front-runner for another spot but was forced into a runoff.

The Negroes must run in the November general election but nomination in the Democratic primary usually is tantamount to election in Alabama.

Negroes outnumber white registrants slightly in the county.

Could Be Eventful

Victories in November would mark the first time Negroes have held office in Alabama, except for a minor office holder in an all-Negro community, since Reconstruction.

The Macon County voting, which brought Negrroes victories in three out of seven county offices contested, highlighted a flurry of politics in Alabama and Florida.

In Florida, two mayors — Haydon Burns of Jacksonville and Robert King High of Miami—were forced into a runoff in their race for the governorship. Their opposing views on civil rights were key issues of their campaign.

Wallace Slate Wins

Alabama voters gave Governor George C. Wallace his hand-picked slate of unpledged presidential electors, thus knocking the name of President's Johnson's loyalist electors off the November election ballot. Wallace earlier won a firm commitment from the state's Democratic convention delegates.

But the noise of big-office campaigning failed to overshadow the significance of the voting in Macon County, an area torn during the past year with school integration strife.

Gomillion, who has been in the forefront of civil rights activity in the county for 32 years, received 2,433 votes against 1,015 for Emerson Guthrie and 872 for O. C. Bryant, both white.

The race was for one of the five spots on the County School Board, the agency that was directed by a federal court to open the way for public school integration last fall.

Two for JP Posts

Two Negroes were nominated for justice of the peace posts. Businessman William C. Allen received 1,896 votes over A. R. Perrys' 765. W. J. Childs, a service station owner, had 1,994 to Kyle Freeman's 829.

A fourth Negro, Rev. V. A. Edwards, a Tuskegee Institute staff member, was forced into a runoff with Virgil M. Guthrie for the District Board of Revenue. Edwards had 2,243 votes to Guthrie's 1,080.

Allen and Gomillion expressed pleasure at the outcome and said they would try to serve the best interests of all in the county.

Allen said, cautiously, that he would keep an eye on general election developments before believing he is actually "in."

Worked Since '32

Gomillion recalled that he had worked for the enfranchisement of Negroes in the county since 1932 when there were only about 30 Negroes registered in the county.

By 1940, the Negro registration had risen to only around 100. It reached about 700 after the first administration of then Governor James (Kissing Jim) E. Folsom. Gomillion said Folsom appointed "a white man who dealt fairly with Negroes" as registrar and this helped registration.

In Tuesday's voting, Folsom was defeated in two races. He lost to former Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor for Democratic national committeeman and ran third in a contest for public service commissioner. Connor and incumbent C. C. Owen went into a runoff.

Outnumber Whites

The voter registration drives that Gomillion helped get started 30 years ago have continued over the years, with varying degrees of intensity, until today the Negro registration is estimated at about 3,500 in Macon County, or about 200 to 250 more than white registration.

Gomillion, who received about 500 votes more than his two white opponents, surmised that he may have received some white votes.

"I believe I did," he said, "I hope I'm right. I have been saying for years that the two races should learn to work together here."

Two Face Unexpected White Opposition

FOUR TUSKEGEE NEGROES WIN NOMINATIONS IN MACON COUNTY

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Four Tuskegee Negro candidates, first members of their race to offer for public office in a Democratic Primary, since Reconstruction days, won nominations for offices in Macon County in the state-wide primary election on May 5.

A record crowd of voters stood in line long after the closing hours to settle, without a run -off, the seven county positions contested, and the estimated 4,800 was by far the largest in the history of Macon County.

Official returns from the primary showed that the Negro candidates won clear - cut victories over their white opponents, but it was at first indicated that there was a possibility of a run - off between the Rev. V. A. Edwards, director of Religious Extension at Tuskegee Institute, and one of his white opponents for a seat on the county governing body, the Board of Revenue.

EDWARDS POLLS MAJORITY

According to The Tuskegee News, however, final tabulations showed that Rev. Edwards polled a majority of votes over three white opponents to win the nomination for a seat on the Board of Revenue, thereby eliminating the necessity of a run-off for the position on June 2 The final box gave him the majority.

Dr. C. G. Gomillion, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, at Tuskegee, won the nomination for a seat on the five - member county Board of Education with a total of 2,433 votes. Emerson Guthrie had 1,015 and O. C. Bryant had 872.

Two businessmen, William J. Childs and William C. Allen were nominated for justice of the peace in separate races. Childs led Kyle Freeman 1,994 votes to 829; and Allen ran ahead of incumbent James R. Perry, Sr., 1,896 to 765.

VOTERS SET SIGHTS ON CITY ELECTION

Immediately after the primary, Negro voters set their sights on the coming city election to be held in September. All five members of the City Council will be elected. It is reported that they will probably enter candidates for two of the council seats.

Courthouse records disclosed Thursday that at least two of the Negro candidates winning nominations in Tuesday's primary will have unexpected opposition from two Notasulga white candidates in the general election in November.

Democratic nominees are rarely challenged for county office in Alabama unless Republicans put up candidates. In Macon County, there has been no indication of GOP opposition.

According to the records in the probate office, two Notasulga white men, William B. Ray, Sr., and Herbert F. Ruff, have qualified as in-

BALTIMORE

Warren S. Shaw, Baltimore's lone colored candidate for Congress, swung into the final lap of his campaign and told his Monday night workers that, "This campaign must be decided upon solely on the issues involved, and not by how much money a political boss pays you to work at the polls."

Mr. Shaw said "I have taken a firm stand on a minimum wage and hour law for wemen so that domestic workers and nospital employees, and other low paid workers will not have to keep on working for an inadequate $6 a day or less."

He went on, "I have said I will continue to work to get higher Social Security benefits for our aged ,and an adequate program for compulsory health insurance, because I believe that in a land of plenty it is foolish to be without medical care for all the citizens."

THE FOUNDER and president of Manning Shaw Realty, Inc. declared, "I will work for strict enforcement of the present Federal Civil Rights laws now on the books, and for passage of more laws as the need arises."

Shaw said, "I support a sound foreign aid program to countries where it has been shown to be a real helping hand, but not to hostile 'friends' who feel that they can take our money and then slap us in the face while the world looks on; and I stand on the belief that our foreign aid money must go for the real help of the citizens and not in the pockets of corporation owners and unscrupulous ruling classes."

Opening several folders of longhand and typewritten material, Mr. Shaw pointed out, "I am prepared now to offer to Congress some sound concrete steps to cure poverty wherever it exists. I believe that full employment must be attained and that we have now the technological ability to attain it."

Paine business manager dies

Afro-Amer. 5-23-64

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Wheeler C. Ervin, business manager at Paine College and the first colored to be elected to public office in Georgia since Reconstruction days died here Sunday following a brief illness.

Mr. Ervin won a seat on the Richmond County Board of Education in 1952 and served a four-year term.

A native of Darlington, S.C., he had served as business manager at the local college for more than 35 years, and had at one time served as national president of the American Association of College Business officers.

A GRADUATE OF the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., his first job was as state business manager at Voorhees Junior College, Denmark, S.C. He came to Paine College in 1929.

He was a member of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity and served as president of the Tenth Congressional District Republican organization.

He served as a member of the board of directors of the Ninth Street YMCA and for several years conducted the campaign for the United Negro College Fund in Augusta. He was a member of the Trinity CME Church where he served as a steward.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Ann M. Ervin; one brother, E. C. Ervin, Darlington, S.C.

New Day In Alabama

Ed. Mercury 5-23-64

Macon county, Alabama, is one of the Black Belt counties of the South with a preponderant Negro population. It also happens to be the location of Tuskegee Institute which means that it has a reservoir of articulate and literate Negroes ready to assume political office.

Until a few years ago Macon county had only a handful of registered Negro voters who were far outnumbered by white voters. Federal intervention demanded and secured by Negroes finally broke up the disfranchisement of Negro voters and now the county has more Negro than white voters.

The inevitable happened three weeks ago. Three Negroes won public office: a county school board candidate and two justices of the peace. Another led the ticket in the race for county commissioner (a position comparable to our county supervisors) and he will undoubtedly be elected in the run-off race. A white sheriff who had the political foresight to appoint a Negro deputy also won his race for probate judge.

What happened in Macon county is going to happen in other Black Belt counties, no matter what Gov. Wallace and his ink may do. In the first flush of their newly won power Negroes are going to elect Negroes to public office, an inevitable reflex to long continued white voting for white office seekers. The only white candidates who can survive will be those who have shown a willingness to break with lily white tradition.

Whites who deplore Negro bloc voting have only themselves to blame; they have tacitly or openly supported bloc voting since Reconstruction and they must expect to reap what they have sowed. It won't be long before Negro legislators will become commonplace in southern legislatures and Negro congressmen show up in Washington to represent southern constituencies.

MURFREESBORO, Tenn. — This Middle Tennessee City recently bucked its usual Confederate character Monday and elected its first colored city council member in history.

He is Robert W. ("Tee-Ninv") Scales, elected Councilman - at - large in an April race in which he led the entire ticket with 1,441 votes. He soundly trounced the incumbent, a well - known white politician.

Drafted for the race by Murfreesboro's colored community, Scales led one predominantly white and one predominantly colored precinct, and got good representation in all other precincts.

THE NEW councilman is a mortician by profession, heading the family firm, H. Preston Scales and Sons Funeral Home which was established in 1916. He also owns several other local businesses.

Scales is a member of the Murfreesboro Chamber of Commerce; the City Bi - Racial Committee; a Mason and an Elk; and a trustee of First Baptist Church.

ROBERT W. SCALES

His wife, the former Miss Mary Carruthers, of Murfreesboro, is a grammar school teacher here. They have six children.

Richmond Elects Negro to Council

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Voters have elected the second Negro in this century to Richmond City Council.

B. A. Cephas Jr., a real estate man, ran second only to Richmond's first woman mayor, Mrs. Eleanor P. Sheppard, in Tuesday's municipal election. Mrs. Sheppard received 18,042 votes and Cephas 16,512 as a record turnout of 30,931 voters chose nine councilmen.

Cephas was a member of a nine - member Richmond Forward slate formed to oust the present council majority. The new organization, which also backed Mrs. Sheppard, won six seats to three for incumbents.

In War Against Poverty

Woman Professor Gets Top Post

A PRETTY YOUNG educator who was raised by an illiterate ex-slave was named yesterday to a prominent post in the war against poverty by R. Sargent Shriver.

Jeanne L. Noble, associate professor at New York University's Center for Human Relations, will head the section of the Job Corps concerned with enrolling thousands of underprivileged girls in proposed homemaking and vocational centers.

"We were anxious to get her and we're happy we've been able to steal her away from NYU," said Shriver, the President's Special Assistant in charge of the "war."

She is "one of the most distinguished experts in the country on the needs of culturally deprived young women," he said.

Miss Noble, who grew up in Albany, Ga., under her great-grandmother's guidance, is one of the best-known Negro professors in the United States.

For the last two years she has worked on the board of Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited Associated Community Teams, (HARYOU-ACT) which is attempting to improve opportunities for the restless slum youth of Harlem.

Associated Press

. . . joins war on poverty

She will use this experience in formulating programs to "strengthen the whole home and family life" in pockets of poverty, Miss Noble said, adding that she is "certainly enthusiastic about this responsibility."

Shriver indicated that he has given her carte blanche authority to determine exactly how this section of the Job Corps will operate.

DURING the two to three days a week she expects to spend in Washington at poverty war headquarters, Miss Noble plans to set up a program that will teach deprived young women:

- Basic intellectual tools such as reading, writing and arithmetic.
- Home arts skills such as child care.
- Marketable skills for getting jobs.

Most women in depressed areas, "especially if they are Negro, will have to work most of their lives," she explained. "At least one-fourth of all families in the country are headed by women, and over 50 per cent of those live in poverty."

She anticipates training them for work as nurses' aides, recreational aides and clerks, among other things.

The centers she set up may be either residential or day schools, and she hopes for cooperation from universities, school boards, businesses and labor unions, as well as for volunteer instructors from national women's organizations.

NYU will continue to pay her a full time salary for teaching part time while she works with the Job Corps.

Miss Noble, who will work with the administrator of all Job Corps programs, Ohio University President Vernon Alden, is a graduate of Howard University. She earned her master's degree and Ph.D. from Columbia University Teachers College. She serves on the Presidential Scholars Committee.

She has won awards for her book, "The Negro Woman's College Education," and co-authored "College Education as Personal Development" with Margaret Fisher.

Negro Elected by Richmond to City's Governing Council

Associated Press

Richmond voters for the first time in 16 years elected a Negro to City Council Tuesday, and they gave him the second highest vote total among 21 candidates.

Two other Negro candidates in Richmond, and Negro hopefuls in at least seven other cities and towns, lost their bids to get on governing boards as municipal elections were held throughout the State.

The Negro elected in Richmond was B. A. Cephas Jr., a member of the City Planning Commission and one of the six successful candidates fielded by a new political organization, Richmond Forward, for the city's nine Council seats. He polled 16,512 votes, second only to the 18,042 collected by Eleanor P. Sheppard, the current Mayor and another Richmond Forward candidate.

Oliver W. Hill, who served on Richmond's Council in 1948-50, is the only other Negro elected in the capital in this century.

Three Richmond incumbents were defeated in the election, which polled 30,931 votes, a record for a Council election. The other two Negro candidates, who had been backed by Voters Voice, trailed near the end of the field.

Negro candidates also lost in Danville, where a slate expressing support of the city's handling of last year's racial troubles won election, and in Martinsville, Portsmouth, Norfolk, Hopewell, Culpeper and Lynchburg.

In Culpeper, Mortimer M. Marshall, a Negro funeral director, was disqualified yesterday when it was learned that he had been delinquent in paying his poll tax, officials said. He said he had discussed the matter with the U.S. Justice Department and would appeal his disqualification to the State Supreme

State Senate, council seats won in elections

BY ART CARTER

The election of one State senator in Nebraska and a city councilman in Richmond, Virginia highlighted last week's local elections and primary voting around the country.

For the second time in this century, a colored candidate won a seat on the city Council in Richmond. He is B.A. Cephas Jr., a real estate operator, who ran second to Mrs. Eleanor Sheppard, the city's first woman Mayor, in the vote tabulations for the nine-member council.

The first colored person to serve on the Council in this century was Attorney Oliver W. Hill, who was elected in 1948 to the first of two terms. Mr. Hill is now wih the Federal Housing Administration in Washington.

IN LINCOLN, Newark, Senator Edward Danner, only colored legislator in Nebraska, topped his nearest rival by a 3-1 margin, 1801 to 654 votes, to win re-election.

In Oklahoma City, Okla., John B. White, 32-year-old insurance agent, took a 825-vote victory over a white electrical contractor to win the Democratic nomination in Oklahoma County's District 4 House of Representatives primary race.

White now faces the Republican nominee in the November general election and if he wins, will be the first colored person to sit in the Oklahoma House since 1909.

NONE OF THE FOUR colored persons contesting for seats in the U.S. Congress in Mississippi made a serious dent in the vote tabulations.

The Rev. John Cameron, 31 of Hattiesburg, received only 1,071 votes to 30,749 for Rep. William Colmer of Pascagoula. Mrs. Victoria Gray, also of Hattiesburg, fell by the wayside in her 4,314 vote bid to unseat Sen. John Stennis, 62, of Dekalb. Stennis polled 151,330 votes.

Rep. Jamie Whitten of Charleston collected 32,151 votes to eclipse his opponent, J. M. Houston, 74-year-old retired Vicksburg furniture dealer. Houston received only 1,190 votes.

Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer of Ruleville secured only 389 votes to her opponent's, Rep. Arthur Winstead of Philadelphia, 27,222 votes.

IN ANDERSON, South Carolina, the Rev. J. O. Rich, Baptist minister, lost his bid for a seat in the city council in the Democratic runoff. He polled 975 votes to his opponent's 3,327.

In the regular primary, Rev. Rich led by 81 votes with a tally of 875.

In Petersburg, Va., John H. Owens polled 1,426 votes to qualify for a June 23 runoff election with four other candidates, all white, who failed to gain a majority of the 4,175 votes cast to win seats on the city council. Three councilmen will be picked. Owens is an independent.

In Lynchburg, Va., M. W. Thornhill Jr., president, Lynchburg Voters League, placed sixth in the balloting for the city council with 1923 votes, but only three were elected.

Mrs. Nannie Dupee, the only colored woman seeking office in Virginia, was defeated in her bid for a council seat in Martinsville, and two candidates, the Rev. L. W. Chase and Charles Harris, trailed in the council race in Danville.

MEANWHILE, TWO candidates have popped up for the fall elections, seeking a seat in the U. S. House of Representatives as the sixth colored congressman to be in that body.

B. A. CEPHAS

Richard H. Austin, certified accountant, is running in the new first district of Michigan at the request of a "Draft Richard Austin" move by a citizens committee. Austin has served as co - chairman of the Michigan Apportionment Commission and is chairman of the Democratic organization of his district.

IN BOSTON, Noel Day, 31, executive director of St. Mark's Social Center and co-chairman of the Massachusetts Freedom Movement which sponsored a recent boycott on local public schools, is running as an independent for the seat now held by House Speaker John W. McCormack.

In Atlanta, Attorney Donald L. Hollowell is one of the three candidates seeking nomination in the Sept. 9 Democratic primary for Fulton County Superior Court judgeship.

Hollowell will be pitted against the incumbent judge, Durwood Pye, and another white candidate, Paul Webb Jr., also an attorney. Hollowell has been practicing law in Atlanta since 1952.

James Middleton, 42, of Jackson, took his oath in the office of the chief marshal in an unpublicized ceremony and was not available for comment afterward.

But Charles Evers, NAACP field secretary, said the appointment of Middleton was made after Evers requested Atty. Gen. Robert Kenndey nine months ago to name a colored man to the post.

Evers said Middleton, a native of Vicksburg, had his recommendation for the job. He added that Middleton was "The only man we found qualified for the job in the area."

Colored mayors selected in two towns in Alabama

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (ANP) Clyde Foster, an employee of the Marshall Space Flight Center here, last week was slated to become the first colored mayor of a city in Alabama with an integrated council.

He was also to become the second colored mayor in the state when Probate Judge Ashford reinstates a charter for the town of Triana, which has a population of about 250 residents, most of whom are colored.

JUDGE ASHFORD said a group known as the Triana Improvement Committee and headed by Foster, has been active for five years in efforts to vitalize the charter that has lain dormant since the middle of the 19th century.

Foster's fellow councilmen will be David L. Barnes, William Griffin, Joe L. Fletcher, Mrs. Jessie .J Bennie, and Erskine Parcus, the lone white member.

They will all be appointed by Judge Todd until the next election.

Dear Mr. Branton:

I promised Mr. Blackwell and Mrs. Whittaker when they were with your staff that as soon as I had tabulated the official precinct breakdown in the May Primary election, in which I ran for a seat on the Jefferson County Board of Education, that I would send the results to your office.

I received 22,018 votes in the above mentioned election. 4,891 of these votes were whites. It is interesting to note that I received some votes in every precinct.

The only method of contact to the white voter was through mail and radio appeal.

Any Negro winning a political job in Jefferson County must be a candidate with enough voter appeal to carry a large segment of the white population. Also the political climate of Jefferson County and Alabama as a whole must undergo revolutionary changes before any political positions are held by negroes to any large degree. Of course in Counties such as Macon where the whites are out voted by the Negro the story may be different.

These are facts asked for by previous members of your staff. I don't know if they are of any value to you.

Respectfully,

Bernice C. Johnson

Atlantic City with the Hap Farley organization, which has had 54 years of consecutive Republican control of Atlantic City and Atlantic County.

Mr. Claiborne has worked for the GOP in numerous capacities in Atlantic City, with the New Jersey Republican State Committee and with the Republican National Committee.

While a radio news commentator during 1941-42 for station WFPG in Atlantic City, he earned the distinction of broadcasting more news than any other Negro in America.

He has served as national press secretary of the Improved Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the world's largest Negro fraternal organization, and edited the Elks News, the organization's officials publication.

Prior to joining the Republican National Committee, Mr. Claiborne served as agent-in-charge of narcotic enforcement for Atlantic County, N. J., for 10 years. He was trained for that post by the Federal Bureau of Narcotics.

Chairman Burch said the appointment of Mr. Claiborne emphasizes that the Goldwater-Miller campaign is interested in all people of this country. We will undertake an effective permanent program to demonstrate that Republicans are not writing off any group of voters."

Predict Election Of Three Negroes In Missouri Race

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — (NPI) — There is a strong possibility that three Negroes will be sent to the Missouri State legislature in November, instead of one, as the result of the final figures from the recent primary election. The three, all Democrats, will face GOP opponents in November, but coming from three predominantly Democratic districts, their victories in the primary are tantamount to election.

The winners were Leon M. Jordan, leader of Freedom, Inc., a 14th Ward political organization; Attv. Harold L. Holliday, and Henry Ross.

Jordan defeated G. McKinley Neal, incumbent veteran Missouri legislator. Neal's defeat was a decisive one—by a 2-1 margin or 3,637 votes for Jordan to 1,789 for Neal.

Holiday, who ran unsuccessfully last year for a city council post defeated five candidates—two Negroes and three whites—by a wide margin for the fifth legislative district nod. He polled 2,301 votes to his nearest rival, incumbent legislator George O. Weatherly who had 1,377.

Ross had no trouble beating his two rivals in the second legislative district.

CANDIDACY OF

DETROIT LEE for the Office of PROBATE JUDGE

General Election -- November 3, 1964

1. Key Statements
2. Who Is DETROIT LEE, What Has He Done?
3. Qualifications of DETROIT LEE.
4. What About the Office of Probate Judge of Macon County?
5. My Creed (Excerpts).

KEY STATEMENTS

ELECT DETROIT LEE PROBATE JUDGE OF MACON COUNTY AND DO THREE IMPORTANT THINGS!

1. Have the best man, DETROIT LEE, qualified to be PROBATE JUDGE of Macon County.
2. Keep the popular, best man, PRESTON HORNSBY, qualified in the SHERIFF'S office.

3. Keep the Honorable Governor George C. Wallce of Alabama from appointing a Sheriff who may not (and most likely will not) be in the best interest of our community.

Ladies, gentlemen and fellow citizens, in my campaign literature and statements I am saying that I am better qualified for the Office of Probate Judge than my opponent.

I heard him talk or campaign before the May 5th primary. I did not hear him give any information or experience he has had that would qualify him for the Office of Probate Judge. He did not even list any of the duties of the Office of Probate Judge nor did he state where this information may be found.

May I ask each one of you this question. In this modern day when emphasis should be stressed for good background, honesty, efficiency, education, training, experience and qualifications, will we be satisfied to elect the Sheriff Probate Judge just because he is white and has been a popular Sheriff? I hope that you are aware of our school crisis in which our children in the near future may be riding integrated school busses over the country. Certainly the least we could do for them is to keep our present Sheriff in his present office to which we elected him some two years ago to look out for our interest.

It is my firm hope and desire to see you and discuss these issues with each and every one of you personally, and to ask for your vote and support in this most important election; however, should I not be able to see you individually I shall still be hoping for and appreciate your vote for me on General Election Day, Tuesday, November 3, 1964.

WHO IS DETROIT LEE?

(What Has He Done?)

"Detroit Lee was born in Texas and received his education in that state and Tuskegee Institute. He boast a total of twenty-seven years of clerical and administrative experience, first with the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Tuskegee Army Air Base and, for the last twenty years, with the Veterans Administration Hospital. He is currently first vice-president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

Mr. Lee has worked untiringly for the extension of equality and justice in the community. In 1944, he organized, and was the first president of the local chapter of the NAACP. During World War II, he aided in the initiation of an investigation by the F.E.P.C. to eliminate racial discrimination in employment at the Tuskegee Army Air Base. Under the auspices of the TCA, he was active in seeking legal redress for citizens illegally imprisoned. He was also one of the twelve plaintiffs in the successful Tuskegee Gerrymander Case.

More recently, Detroit Lee has been striving to make democracy a reality in employment and education. As early as 1956, he made a survey of downtown merchants relative to the employment of Negro youth in clerical and sales positions. He is currently the sponsor of the Tuskegee Youth Organization which continues efforts to increase employment opportunities for youth. Moreover, Mr. Lee initiated, organized, and promoted the desegration of the Macon County public schools and serves as the chairman of the parents group that filed the initial school suits in the federal courts.

Mr. Lee has played a substantial role in the business life of the communinty. In 1945, he revitalized the Tuskegee Commercial Association and motivated a group of business and professional men to organize the Pioneer Finance Company which did a profitable business for several years. He was co-organizer of Typewriter Sales and Service, a firm which has grown steadily under new management. He also organized and was first president of Tuskegee Enterprises, Inc."

"Mr. Lee's record demonstrates his interest in the community. He will render effective, efficient service as your next Judge of Probate." [1]

Mr. Lee helped to organize the Non-Partisan Voters League of Macon County. This is another organization for civic education, improving the quality of democracy, improving the quality of governmental administration, improving the quality of public services, promoting community growth, ministering to youth and the aged, and the improvement of the cultural tone of the community.

Last but not least, most recently, in fact on City Election day, August 11, 1964, Mr. Lee acted as chief watcher of an integrated group of poll watchers who were instrumental in obtaining a fair counting of the votes.

QUALIFICATIONS OF MR. LEE

May I submit to each one of you the following qualifications for your prayerful consideration in my candidacy for the Office of Probate Judge of Macon County: (First, I want to make this point very clear, especially to our Negro citizens, it is not necessary to be a lawyer nor even to have studied law to be qualified for the Office of Probate Judge in Alabama and Macon County.)

10. Ordering, checking, sorting and inventoring of supplies and equipment.

DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF THE PROBATE JUDGE OF MACON COUNTY.

A. ADMINISTRATIVE FUNCTIONS—(75% of time spent)

1. Issuing and collecting fees for various kinds of licenses.
2. Making various reports relating to the sales of these licenses.
3. Accounting, reporting and being responsible for certain fiscal records and funds.
4. Being familiar with certain election rules and regulations.
5. Keeping current voting statistics and poll tax lists.
6. Collecting and reporting certain taxes.
7. Procurement of supplies.
8. Make various kinds of appointments.
9. Make certificate of purchase.
10. Certifies, records and files documents authorized by law to be recorded for record.
11. Maintain records and files required by law.
12. Keep minutes of the Court of Probate.
13. Keep indexes for instruments filed and recorded in his office.
14. Keep a registry of liens of judgements and decrees with indexes to them.
15. Keep large and well-bound books for recording, word for word, conveyances of property and all other instruments authorized to be recorded, together with acknowledgements, proofs, schedules, plats, surveys, as other necessary attachments. Some of the records are: Deeds, mortgages, deeds of trust, bills of sale, contracts and any other documents purporting to convey any right, title, easement, or in any real estate or personal property, etc., etc.

B. JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS OF THE PROBATE JUDGE—(25% of time)

1. He is responsible for certain officials to be bonded.
2. Maintains petitions for judicial proceedings.
3. Maintain Court Dockets of hearings.
4. Appoint and remove guardians, executors and administrators.
5. Probate wills and administrations of estates.
6. Require Surety Bonds.
7. Other judicial procedures in which the Probate Judge has authority: Allotment of dower, advancements, exemptions, property and conveyances, lunacy inquisitions, guardians, admission to mental institutions, adoption and legitimatization of children, change of name, correction of marriage licenses, facts of birth, paupers, eminent domain, drainage districts, burial places, sale of land for delinquent taxes, refund of taxes, municipalities, public improvement authorities, closing streets, mine surveys, compliance orders, interment of bodies, contested elections and rites of marriage.

C. SOURCE OF INFORMATION—(The sources of information for the explanation of these duties may be found in the following books):

1. A manual for Alabama Probate Judges.
2. Code of Alabama, its supplements and local acts.
3. Court decisions.

I wish to state that I am familiar with these references and their use.

Through several visits to the Court House and in the Office of the Probate Judge I have seen, examined and become familiar with samples and excerpts of all the duties performed by the Probate Judge. In reality, the clerical, administrative, supervisory and judicial duties of the Probate Judge are essentially the same as those in which I have had experience and training. Therefore, I conclude that I am well qualified or better qualified to perform the duties of the Probate Judge in a more efficient manner than my opponent. I do not hesitate in asking each of you for your VOTE and ACTIVE SUPPORT for me in my candidacy for the Office of Probate Judge, Macon County, Alabama.

If you want efficiency, sincerity, courtesy, courage, honesty and sympathetic understanding, HELP ELECT DETROIT LEE and put these qualities in office. The date is TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1964. Please VOTE, but VOTE FOR DETROIT LEE to be your next Probate Judge of Macon County, Alabama.

DON'T let ME down, DON'T let your CITY down, DON'T let your COUNTY down, and above all, DON'T let YOURSELF down for this NATION and the WORLD have their eyes on us and are rightfully expecting us to handle our destiny wisely and POINT THE WAY!!

MY CREED (Excerpts)

And finally and most importantly my brethren (men and women, black and white together) just because of necessity I have entered into politics PRIMARILY to give our school children and community at large a better chance at safety and SECONDLY to foster the ideals and principles of the most eminent Dr. Booker T. Washington who spent a lifetime of service for the upbuilding of this community, likewise I will let no man, black or white, drag me so low as to make me hate him. At the same time I must fight the good fight. Also I cherish the ideals and principles of the late Dr. W. E. B. DuBois who was one of the founders of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). It is my belief that the aims of these two noble benefactors were the same, but were approached from different directions according to their location in life—one from the north and the other from the south. I further subscribe to the program principles as practiced by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Just because of necessity I have entered into politics I will not forsake the Christian principles that I was nurtured in and have successfully practiced all of my adult life. I purposely and am determined in my campaign to mix Christian ethics with politics. If elected I further plan to carry Christ into office with me. It is my firm belief that more Christianity in politics may be our paramount need in this modern age of crises.

At the risks of security, conveniences or my life I will not deviate myself nor be deviated by any powers that be from doing what I think will be in the best interest of my people and country. Win or lose in the election I shall press forward in words and deeds in the endeavors I think will help ALL people. In this election, I will gladly accept the will of the Lord. Yes, I believe in the first law of nature which is self preservation, but in addition, I also believe more so in a greater law which is to give myself as a ransom for many and thereby I will save myself, finally, and many others as well.

Your VOTE for ME under these circumstances will be appreciated for the common good of ALL. I WILL NOT let YOU down! Therefore, DON'T YOU let ME down!

Thanks,

DETROIT LEE

Negroes Gain In Congress, Legislatures

By TED POSTON

The Negro representation in Congress increased its ranks to six Tuesday, with the election in Detroit of J. J. Conyers, a Democrat.

Conyers, who ran abreast with President Johnson in sweeping his Paradise Valley district, joins a follow Detroitor, Rep. Charles Diggs, and four other Negroes, all Democrats, in Congress.

The others are Reps. Powell, New York City; Dawson, Chicago; Nix, Philadelphia, and Hawkins of Los Angeles.

The election of Conyers highlighted the Negroes' biggest political advance since Reconstruction. In last Tuesday's election, Negroes won seats in four state legislatures for the first time, and gained at least 10 seats in other legislatures where Negoes had previously served.

Gain for Equal Rights

Citing those gains and others, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive director, said that the landslide vote for Johnson expressed not noly aroused Negro opposition to Sen. Goldwater "but also an awareness of the impact upon the nation and upon their lives of such vital issues as peace, prosperity and the anti-poverty program."

Other Negro gains, scored in a national election in which more than 6,000,000 Negroes were registered to vote, in cluded:

The 2-1 re-election vote for Massachusetts Attorney General Edward W. Brooke, the highest ranking Republican elective office held by a Negro, despite Brooke's repeated and public rejection of the Goldwater candidacy.

The first Negro member of Tennessee's General Assembly and the first New Jersey Assemblyman outside Newark; also the first two members of the Iowa House of Representatives; three members of the Oklahoma House of Representatives, a State Senator in Delaware and another in Kansas.

Colorado elected its first Negro district judge and four Negroes were elected to county office for the first time in Macon County, Ala.

Negroes also picked up more seats in the Legislatures of Indiana, Oklahoma, Georgia, California, New York and Massachusetts. They also reelected incumbents in Washington, Ohio, Arizona and Nebraska.

Atlantan Wins Seat In Oklahoma Legislature

Atl Wrld 11-5-64

By GEORGE M. COLEMAN
(World City Editor)

A young Atlanta Negro, who was figured in virtually every civil rights movement in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma for the past four years, beat out a white political opponent in Tuesday election, and won a seat on the state legislature, it was learned yesterday.

Archibald Hill 29, a young Democrat, won over his white Republican rival in a predominately white district, despite last minute movements by pro-Goldwater forces, and his record as a civil rights fighter.

Attorney Hill, the son of Mrs. Juanita Hill, an employee of Citizens Trust Company, was elected to the Oklahoma House of Representatives by a wide margin of more than two to one.

The representative nominate, who lost a decision last May, had run a second time in September after a federal court order threw out the election, calling for reapportionment of districts.

Mr. Hill's district is comprised of 11 precincts, seven of which are all white. . . three predominately Negro, and one about half and half in population.

The young attorney had been a practicing attorney in Oklahoma City for the past four years.

During this period he has handled litigation for most of the civil rights cases brought by Negroes in a push for equality.

In addition to this he has led numerous demonstrations, and at present is the President of the Congress on Racial Equality

In the Democratic primary last September Mr. Hill won over four white Democrats and one Negro for the nomination. In the general election he polled 2,506 of the available 3,300 votes in the small district, winning in all eleven precincts, while Jack R. Brown, his rival polled only 450 votes.

He won despite a last minute effort of literature placed in white neighborhoods dealing with his record on civil rights.

Mr. Hill is a graduate of Morehouse College, the North Carolina University's Law School. He is married to Mrs. Lovie Hill, and is the father of three boys, Archie, Jr., Pal and Mickie.

Ark. First Negro School Official Outlines Views

Atl. Weekly 11-11-64

LITTLE ROCK — (NPI) — "I believe that the educational program provided should adequately care for the development of skills in the tools of learning and the arts of communication," said Mrs. Sylvia Tallier Caruth, an experienced authority in the field of education and the first Arkansas Negro to hold an administrative post in the public school system. Mrs. Caruth was recently appointed supervisor of elementary education by the Little Rock School Board to fill an administrative vacancy.

Having been in the Little Rock school system since 1939, Mrs. Caruth is a strong advocate of placing "special emphasis upon the application of purposeful approaches to the education of youth in the lower grade levels.

She contended statement recently that "an educational program should instill understanding of the world as it is, and of man's efforts to achieve mastery over his own destiny: the strengthening in each young person of his intellectual power to cope with his environment and serve with his fellows."

She further believes that the young person's skills and understanding should be developed to that point where they will contribute to successful home and community life.

Economic self-reliance, creative citizenship and controlled emotions and habits of dealing with other people to strengthen personality and character, are high points of Mrs. Caruth's advocacy in the field of education.

After a tenure in office of only a few months, Mrs. Caruth has gained credible respect from other members of her official family and special commendation from Little Rock Supt. Parsons.

After receiving her master's degree from Columbia University in 1948, Mrs. Caruth's activity and prestige in the field of education has steadily mounted. She is a member of both the National and American Educational Associations, and is presently secretary of the Educational Research Association of her district.

The wife of prominent Prince Hall Mason, M. J. Caruth, she is the mother of two daughters, Mrs. Carmelite Caruth Smith, a college senior and Phyllis, a ninth grader whose scholastic record is one of the highest in her school.

"In order for American education to be successful, it must be purposeful in every respect, and opportunities must be equally accessible to all Americans," she said adding, "Equality is achieved through effort and demonstration of ability, and not a gift or special consideration."

280 Negroes Hold Elective Offices In 33 States; New Voter Registration Drives Are Planned

Greenville News Bureau
132 Third St., S. E.

By LEE BANDY

WASHINGTON — The growth of Negro voters throughout the country is mushrooming into a political power which must be reckoned with in future state and national elections, a top Democratic party official says.

Louis E. Martin, deputy chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said proof of that is the fact a number of Negroes were carried into national, state and local offices on the coattails of President Johnson.

A study just completed by the national committee revealed that there are 280 Negroes in elective positions in 33 states, including Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. All are Democrats except 10.

The report shows the colored race gained 33 seats in state legislatures bringing the total to 90 — 88 are Democrats and two are Republicans.

The fact more than 90 per cent of the colored voters went for Johnson has given the Democrats "no illusion that Negroes are in the pocket of the Democratic party," Martin said.

"VERY MATURE"

The committee official, a Negro himself, contended the colored voter is a "very mature and sophisticated" person and "is going to vote for the candidates and party which, in his judgment, is sincerely trying to move all Americans forward."

The presidential campaign demonstrated the total involvement of the Negro leadership in political action, Martin said.

He attributed the colored voter response to a massive registration program which started in 1961.

"The work done over this three-year period by the national committee and such volunteer agencies as the voter education project of the Southern Regional Council, the National Urban League and the NAACP contributed to the greater political awareness of Negroes," Martin said.

Though the program was conducted on a non-partisan basis, he noted, "the actions of the Republicans leadership in literally kicking Negroes out of the party angered many Negroes who had been loyal over the years. This fact coupled with the strong civil rights position of President Johnson and the administration led to the record turnout and the election of Negro candidates to offices in all but 17 of the 50 states."

SWEEP DIXIE

NAACP, CORE and other similar Negro groups hope to have enough Negroes registered for the 1966 and 1968 elections to sweep Dixie segregationists out of office.

Unconfirmed reports here say the Negro organizations have already collaborated and are now working together to raise $10 million for the purpose of registering colored voters throughout the country, particularly the South.

Their aim is to have enough registered to have a more powerful voice in both the '66 and '68 elections.

There main targets two years from now are Sens. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Richard Russell of Georgia, leader of the Senate Dixie Bloc.

The South Carolina NAACP chapter has already met and started mapping plans to unseat Thurmond, Dixie's only Republican Senator.

The Negroes are bragging about their recent victories in the South and foresee more in the future.

In the last election, Negroes were elected to Congress from Michigan, Pennsylvania, Illinois and New York.

Two were elected justices of the peace in Macon County, Ala. In the same county, a colored man won a seat on the Board of Revenue and another was elected to the Board of Education.

In Georgia, one Negro won a seat in the state Senate and another was returned. Tennessee elected its first Negro to the state legislature since reconstruction days. In Houston, Tex., a colored man was elected a member of the school board to join an incumbent Negro member.

Democrats Report Record Total Of 280 Negroes in Elective Jobs

(WP)

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

Special to The New York Times 12-23-64

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22 — The number of Negroes in elective office increased between a quarter and a third as a result of last month's election, the Democratic National Committee reported today.

The committee attributed the gains by Negro candidates throughout the nation to President Johnson's landslide victory. Lending substance to the claim is the fact that all but 10 of the record total of 280 Negro officeholders are Democrats.

Acoording to figures compiled by the Democrats, the 1964 election produced these Negro gains.

¶Negro candidates picked up 33 seats in State Legislatures, an increase of 58 per cent over the 57 they formerly held.

All told, there will be Negroes holding elective office in 33 of the 50 states after Jan. 1.

The five present Negro representatives, who were all re-elected, are William L. Dawson of Chicago, Charles C. Diggs of Detroit, Augustus Hawkins of Los Angeles, Robert N. C. Nix of Philadelphia and Adam Clayton Powell of New York City.

A number of the Negro gains were made in Southern states. According to the national committee's survey, two justices of the peace, a member of the County Board of Revenue and and a member of the County Board of Education were elected in Macon County, Alabama, the home of Tuskegee Institute.

In Georgia, a State Senator was elected and one re-elected. In Tennessee, the first Negro since Reconstruction was elected to the Legislature. In Texas, a second Negro joined the school board. In Oklahoma, four Negroes were chosen for the Legislature.

Of the 280 Negroes who will be serving as a result of the election, 28 are women. All of these, the national committee noted with satisfaction, are Democrats.

Senator Ward Says He'll "Play Role Of Freshman"

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
(United Press International)

State Sen. Horace T. Ward, the second Negro to sit in the Georgia legislature in more than 50 years, said Sunday he planned to play the role of a freshman lawmaker during his first term.

But Ward, who spent seven years attempting to enter the Unversity of Georgia, also said he would not hesitate to speak out in the General Assembly on issues he feels strongly about.

Ward, 37, represents Atlanta's 39th senatorial district. He defeated Republican Robert Shaw by more than 4,000 votes in a district that has 12,500 white and 9,000 Negro registered voters.

"I intend to sit back and watch and study the situation during my first term," Ward said.

Ward, an attorney, said he was pleased with his committee assignments in the Senate, given out by president of the senate, Lt. Gov. Peter Zack Geer. Ward said he was assigned to two of the four committees he requested.

ASSIGNMENTS

He will be on the committees of County and Municipal Government; Health and Welfare; Business, Trade and Commerce, and Penal and Correctonal. He said he had asked for the first two, and also for Judiciary and Labor and Industry Committees.

"The committees I got were not precisely what I had asked for but I think they are very good. There are so many senators, some with seniority, all asking for the same committees," he said.

Ward said he had no specific legislation he planned to introduce during the first session, although something may come up. He said it was more likely that he would have bills to offer during his second term.

"There will be plenty to do. There are so many problems facing the state," he said.

LIKE JOHNSON

Ward's initial period in the Senate may very well resemble that of Sen. Leroy Johnson who will occupy the seat next to Ward's in the upper chamber. Johnson was the first Negro elected to the Georgia legislature in half a century.

During his first term in 1962 Johnson was seldom heard from but did all his homework. Since then he has become one of the most respected lawmakers in the General Assembly, and progressvely has taken a move active and vocal role in legislative affairs.

It was in 1950 that Ward filed the granddaddy of all applications by Negroes to enter the University of Georgia. The legal tilt between Ward and the State of Georgia continued until 1957, after Ward had come out of the service and tried to resume his efforts to enter the school.

He lost when a federal court upheld a university requirements that said returned veterans must renew their application attempts if a certain amount of time had passed.

FINALLY WINS

That rule was eventually nullified in another legal battle undertaken by Donald J. Hollowell, Ward's present law partner, but Ward did not benefit by it. He graduated from Northwestern University School of Law in Chicago.

The attorney said he favors a reapportionment plan that would redce the present 250 members in the Georgia House.

"Anyway it's done, I feel there will be some Negro members in the House eventually," Ward said.

Ward is married and has one son.

The opening of the 1965 General Assembly was significant for Ward in marking the first time a Negro sat in the Georgia upper body at the same time.

JOHNSON BY HIS SIDE

As Ward took his seat in the senate chamber he was being reassured and encouraged from the next seat by Senator Leroy Johnson, who was going through the same jitters (even more so) two years ago as the first Negro state legislator in Georgia in over 100 years.

He was greeted and warmly welcomed along with the other new Senators. He felt ten feet tall as he took the oath of office from Judge Robert Russell along with such other members of the delegation which included Senators James Westberry, Dan MacIntyre, Johnson, Ben Johnson and Frank Miller.

He listened devoutly as Senator Leroy Johnson delivered the address seconding the nomination of Senator George P. Stewart as secretary of the body and forcsaw himself in a similar role someday.

When the session adjourned Ward remarked: "Its a privilege to be a member of this great body and be of service to the people of my district, city and county."

"I am going to enjoy my work because I'm impressed with the courtesy extended to be by other members of this Senate." "I plan to work diligently at my job here, and I feel I will be given the amount of respect that my achievements demand."

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS

Ward has already been appointed to four committees within the Senate. They include the Penal and Corrections, Courts and Municipal Government, Business, Trade and Commerce, and the Health and Welfare Committee where he shares membership with Sen. Johnson.

Senator Johnson too, has been appointed to four key committees and is being considered for a possible fifth. He has been appointed to the Judiciary, Education, and Appropriations committees.

Johnson in his remarks seconding the nomination of Sen. Stewart as Senate Secretary said ... "It is my pleasure to second the nomination of a man who has so ably and honestly distinguished himself as a public servant."

He then quoted excerpts from John Dunn's poem "God Give Us Men," and then said it applied to Senator Stewart.

EOA APPOINTEES SHOULD REPRESENT ALL RACES

When Gov. Carl Sanders appointed six men to the staff of the Georgia Office of Economic Opportunity, Thursday, we searched the list in vain to find the name of at least one Negro.

Duties of the appointees include planning and development programs for 16 areas in the state — and act as regional consultants to supply technical assistance to communities receiving benefits under the Economic Opportunity Act.

The six men have been appointed to the Coosa Valley, Mounfains and Northeast Georgia area, Central Savannah River, Oconee and South Central area; Macon and Chattahoochee area; Altamaha, Coastal, Slash Pine and Coastal Plains area; Lower Chattahoochee, West Georgi and Southwest Georgia area.

Georgia's woeful overlooking the tenor of the federal legislation encased in the Economic Opportunity Act must be called to the attention of Gov. Sanders as well as all other state officials.

Georgia has enjoyed a reputation of being progressive in the area of racial relations. We want to see Georgia live up to that reputation.

The EOA plainly explains that the program must include qualified representatives from all racial groups, on all levels, meaning from the planning level down.

We urge Gov. Sanders to take immediate steps to correct his oversight — that of not including a member of the Negro race among the appointees, to make it truly representative.

To Request EOA Appointment For Negroes

By Thaddeus T. Stokes
Associate City Editor

Senator Leroy Johnson told the Atlanta Daily World Monday that he is seeking an appointment with Gov. Carl Sanders to request that he appoint some Negroes to the staff of Georgia Office of Economic Opportunity immediately.

Gov. Carl Sanders, last week, appointed six white men to plan and development EOA programs for 16 areas in the state and become regional consultants to supply technical assistance to communities receiving benefits under the War On Poverty.

Sen[illegible] paper "I concur with an editorial (Jan. 10) appearing in your paper, urging [illegible] appoint some Negroes. The editorial is correct in substance and intent."

He went on to say "these jobs pay $10,000 a year. And 75 percent of the poverty in the State of Georgia, of necessity, has to do with Negroes. These programs are suppose to include all people of the community from top, down."

Senator Johnson continued;" It is inconcievable that Gov. Sanders failed to appoint some Negroes as regional administrator in the first place.

The EOA clearly explains that all such programs must include qualified representatives from all racial groups.

OPA-LOCKA RUNOFF

Negro Sees Proof Of Brotherhood

The first winning Negro candidate in Opa-locka said today his victory in a City Commission primary is proof of the Miami suburb's "concern for brotherhood."

But Albert W. Tresvant, foreman in a dry cleaning plant, said if he wins one of the commission seats in the runoff April 21, he plans to "demonstrate at the commission table instead of in the streets."

His primary goal then, he added, will be an end to racial discrimination he said exists in Opa-locka restaurants and Protestant churches.

Tresvant, who has lived in Opa-locka 13 years, polled 470 votes in Tuesday's primary to run fourth. He said he had expected "maybe another 200 votes in white precincts" even though he did little campaigning there."

Incumbent Richard Bennis, owner of a printing firm, polled 200 more ballots than Tresvant to lead the 10-man field into the runoff for the three commission seats at stake. There are five members in all.

Grocer Frederick O. Bates was second and a contractor; Don Mongiello placed third.

pected, worked in favor of both Owens and Bowman. In two predominantly Negro wards of the city, the Third and the Sixth, Owens netted 790 votes. The leading white candidate in the same two wards received only 35. This was out of a total vote of 825.

Bowman's heaviest single-shot votes came in the three precincts of the Seventh ward and the Eighth ward.

The strategy behind the single-shot ballot is that by voting for only one candidate the chances of any other candidate on the ticket are considerably lessened.

Winners Give Thanks

Approximately 280 more voters cast ballots in the runoff. The estimated total vote was 4,569 compared with 4,289 in the initial election. Bowman had 187 additional votes, Andrews 301, and Owens 289.

Owens said in a post-election statement that he hoped his actions on the council would "not be viewed as a Negro councilman for Negro citizens but a councilman who happens to be a Negro with an interest for all citizens."

The three incumbents in a joint statement expressed their thanks to city voters and said they hoped "that voters in Petersburg will be happy and satisfied with the selections they have made."

Bowman said "naturally" I am quite flattered by the outcome. . . . When I was asked if I would serve if elected I responded in the affirmative but pointed out emphaticall ythat if success was ours I would belong to no man or any group of men." He added that he would "continue to stand on my convictions as I have in the past regardless of the consequences to myself

Charter Changed

The city's charter was changed in 1962 by an act of the General Assembly to eliminate the need for a primary election unless called for by the central Democratic committee. That same revision incorporated the majority vote provision for the first time.

After the initial election there was some question about Bowman's name being placed on the run-off ballot. But Attorney General Button said, in answer to a query from the local electoral board, that a write-in candidate has the same status as one who qualifies under regular election law procedure.

Bowman was drafted as a candidate only a week before the June 9 balloting by a citizen's committee. He was chosen because of his stand on racial issues. Eleven days after Negro civil rights groups began a boycott of the central business district the city's biracial committee adopted a resolution over Bowman's objection, urging an end to segregation in public accommodations. Ensorsements quickly followed from the city council and retail merchants association. These endorsements were branded as attempts to "intimidate and compel" businessmen to accede to the demands of "a certain group of dissidents." Bowman said council's endorsement was "ill - advised and of questionable propriety."

"Pressure" Charged

A major issue arose after Bowman's supporters distributed campaign literature alleging that outside pressure had been brought to bear on the biracial committee and the city council to adopt the resolutions.

The three incumbents issued an immediate denial of the charge as well as the chairman of the biracial committee. Bowman himself later said he had not approved the literature before its distribution.

The incumbents countered that Bowman's supporters were guilty of "baseless rumor-mongering" and of using tactics unheard of before in the community.

Less than a week before the run-off, two of the incumbents, Gill and Jacobs, told a reporter they were considering withdrawing from the race. Both later issued statements of their intentions to run.

The boycott, which started much of the campaign charges, was lifted last Sunday after six weeks.

MEET THE CANDIDATES

of the

NON-PARTISAN VOTERS LEAGUE

OF MACON COUNTY

As a group of public spirited citizens we, the undersigned, are happy to endorse and present the candidates of the Non-Partisan Voters League of Macon County who solicit your support in the municipal elections of August 11, and the County elections of November 3, 1964. These candidates are well qualified for office by experience and education. They are prepared to give time, money, and energy to identify the needs of the total community, and to work toward realistic solutions based upon expert information and advice. They stand for the creation of an interracially administered governmental system working in the interest of all citizens. They believe in the innate equality of all persons and will seek the realization of this principle in administering the affairs of the city and county.

We believe that the next several months will be crucial in the life of our community. As you know, the struggle to secure the vote for Negroes has been very difficult. It is now possible to use this voting strength effectively to achieve worthwhile public goals. More than one hundred years has passed since Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation was issued. With your active help and support, the upcoming elections can mark the beginning of a new emancipation which will free both Negroes and whites of the fetters of strife and inequality. To this end, we invite you to vote for the candidates of the Non-Partisan Voters League.

Mrs. Quinn is a native of Tuskegee and a life member of the Tuskegee Civic Association. She received her secondary education at Tuskegee Institute High School and graduated from Alabama State Teachers College with a major in Elementary Education. She did further study at the University of Cincinnati and graduated from the Salmon P. Chase College of Commerce and Law, Cincinnati, Ohio with an A. S. C. degree.

Mrs. Quinn has had wide experience in a variety of fields. She is a former school teacher and has served as a columnist for the Cincinnati edition of the Cleveland Call and Post. She also worked with the Cincinnati Police Department for several years and has served as a secretary in budgeting and housing. She is currently a retired civil service employee, but remains active as a church organist and pianist. Her community spirit, in large measure, is exemplified by her participation as a defendant in the Tuskegee Gerrymander Case.

Mrs. Quinn has been very influential in community affairs in Ohio. She is especially proud of the accomplishments of the East Fork Community Council in Cincinnati where, largely through her efforts, it was possible to secure the extension of utility service lines, the construction of additional briges, sidewalks, and necessary street improvements. As a result of Mrs. Quinn's leadership, the East Fork Community was able to establish a modern, efficient fire department to protect the property of that area.

If elected, Mrs. Quinn will bring to the Council a broad practical exeprience in the solution of community problems. She pledges her best efforts on behalf of all citizens.

PAUL L. PURYEAR ..... Alderman (City Council) Place No. 1

Paul L. Puryear is Associate Professor of Political Science and Director of the Department of Social Science Research at Tuskegee Institute. A native of Newark, New Jersey, he has lived in the Tuskegee community for three years. He holds the B. A. degree from Talladega College and the M. A. and Ph.D degrees from the University of Chicago with specialties in urban government, and constitutional law. He also has done post-doctoral study at the University of Mysore in India under a Fullbright grant. Presently, he is a Teaching Fellow of the Danforth Foundation and the Society for Religion in Higher Education.

Paul Puryear has been active for several years in getting students and adult citizens interested in political activity. While a member of the faculty of Virginia State College in Norfolk, he sponsored the Civic Youth League and lectured regularly to church and community groups on problems of political organization and action. He currently serves as a faculty advisor to the Community Action Crop and a student political club at Tuskegee Institute. He has also been interested in problems of political corruption and, in 1956, worked with a research team to uncover voter registration fraud in Chicago, Illinois.

Dr. Puryear's research and writing has centered around the problems of the Negro in American life. In a recent article published in the Harvard Educational Review, he devoted special attention to the legal problems of public school desegregation. Among other things, he is now at work on studies of the implementation of federal voting rights laws and the political behavior of Negroes in several Southern states.

Paul Puryear believes that the academic "ivory tower" is a thing of the past. He pledges all his special knowledge of governmental administration in unselfish service for the common good.

WILLIE JOHNSON ..... Alderman (City Council) Place No. 2

Willie Johnson is a long-time resident of the State of Alabama. He was educated in the public schools of Elmore County and at Tuskegee Institute. He has lived in Tuskegee for twenty-two years. Currently, he is a certified Occupational Therapists Assistant at the Veterans Administration Hospital.

Willie Johnson has rendered yeoman service to the community as a counselor and builder of youth. He helped to organize the Little League in Tuskegee and has served as coach for that group for seven years without compensation. He has also been active with the Boy Scouts.

Mr. Johnson has devoted considerable time and energy in fostering community improvement projects. In recent years, he has served as chairman of a citizens committee to identify community problems and to seek redress through local government to secure more adequate street paving, street lighting, and improved garbage disposal practices. Consequently, he is well acquainted with the crucial needs of the community.

Willie Johnson is a member of the Tuskegee Civic Association and Greenwood Baptist Church. He has dedicated himself to public service for the early amelioration of community problems.

MRS. FANNYE J. HARRIS ——— School Board (Place No. 1)

Fannye Harris was born in Greenwood, S. C. She was educated in the public schools of Columbia, S. C. and earned her B. S. and Masters degrees at Tuskegee Institute. Presently, Mrs. Harris is Head of the Circulation Division of Hollis Burke Frissell Library at the Institute.

Fannye Harris, the mother of three children, has lived in Tuskegee for 20 years and is known widely for her interests in the educational development of youth. Aside from the distinguished service she has rendered to college students, she is a popular figure in the Children's Room of the Tuskegee library. She is currently Director of "Ride the Winged Horse," a summer reading project sponsored by the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority for community children.

Mrs. Harris has participated very actively in a variety of community affairs. She has served as chairman of the Mother's March of Dimes, the Cancer Crusade in Macon County, and St. Anne's Guild of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church. She is a past president of the Chambliss Children's House PTA and currently serves as a member of the executive committee of United Church Women. Mrs. Harris is also President of the Tuskegee Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, and chairman of the Faculty-Staff Committee for the National Fund for Tuskegee.

Mrs. Harris' long record of community service with youth and adults makes her an ideal choice for the School Board. She pledges herself to work diligently to keep the schools open and to improve the quality of education for all children.

DETROIT LEE ——— Judge of Probate

Detroit Lee was born in Texas and received his education in that state and at Tuskegee Institute. He boasts a total of twenty-seven years of clerical and administrative experience, first with the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Tuskegee Army Base and, for the last twenty years, with the Veterans Administration Hospital. He is currently first vice president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

Mr. Lee has worked untiringly for the extension of equality and justice in the community. In 1944, he organized, and was the first president of the local chapter of the NAACP. During World War II, he aided in the precipitation of an investigation by the F.E.P.C. to eliminate racial discrimination in employment at the Tuskegee Army Base. Under the auspices of the TCA, he was active in seeking legal redress for citizens illegally imprisoned. He was also one of the twelve plaintiffs in the successful Tuskegee Gerrymander Case.

More recently, Detroit Lee has been striving to make democracy a reality in employment and education. As early as 1956, he made a survey of downtown merchants relative to the employment of Negro youth in clerical and sales positions. He is currently the sponsor of the Tuskegee Youth Organization which continues efforts to increase employment opportunities for youth. Moreover, Mr. Lee initiated, organized, and promoted the desegregation of the Macon County public schools and serves as the chairman of the parents group that filed the initial school suits in the federal courts.

Mr. Lee has played a substantial role in the business life of the community. In 1945, he revitalized the Tuskegee Commercial Association and motivated a group of business and professional men to organize the Pioneer Finance Company which did a profitable business for several years. He was co-organizer of Typewriter Sales and Service, a firm which has grown steadily under new management. He also organized and was first president of Tuskegee Enterprises, Inc.

As a church worker, Mr. Lee has acquited himself well. He is an ordained Baptist deacon and organized and served as first principal of the city-wide Vacation Bible School. Additionally, he has served as Sunday School Superintendent, B. T. U. leader, church clerk and treasurer, and a prime mover in church building projects.

Mr. Lee has held a number of responsible posts with local and national organizations. He is a past vice-president of the TCA and currently serves the American Veterans Committee as national board member at large. Additionally, he serves as adult sponsor for the Tuskegee Institute Advancement League and is a member of the board of the Institute YM & YWCA.

Mr. Lee's record demonstrates his interest in the community. He will render effective, efficient service as your next Judge of Probate.

THE PLATFORM

If elected the candidates of the Non-Partisan Voters League promise to work together to implement a clear and reasonable precise set of goals for community development. Presented below are excerpts from the League's proposed platform.

To Improve the Quality of Democracy

In order to promote the dignity of all citizens, the League will endeavor to assure that there is no discriminatios against any race, white or Negro, in determining eligibility for public employment, in the provision and use of public facilities, and in contracting for goods and services required by local government. Moreover, the League's candidates on the Board of Alderman (City Council) will move for the immediate appointment of an official citizens committee representative of all races and groups in the community to help bring an end to racial misunderstanding and to promote the economic growth of the community. The League pledges further that it will promote free and open discussion of all issues by citizens of the community. Every effort will be made to assure that City Council meetings, School Board proceedings, and administrative hearings are open to the public. Periodic printed reports will be circulated to keep citizens informed about what their governmental officials are doing.

To Improve the Quality of Governmental Administration

The League will work diligently to assure that all municipal positions and all appointments to official boards and committees are filled by persons well qualified by education and experience. Efforts will be made to have a full study made of current administrative practices to eliminate inefficiency and duplication. When necessary, the advice of outside experts will be sought.

To Improve the Quality of Public Services

The League supports the substantial improvement of public services and includes among its objectives the following:

1. The establishment of a salaried full-time fire department augmented by part-time emergency personnel to cope with all kinds of fires.
2. The improvement of police protection and police methods. Short courses and police institutes will be conducted regularly to train policemen in modern police methods, new legal developments, and the sociological aspects of crime.
3. The provision of paved streets and sidewalks, mercury lighting, and adequate sewerage and drainage facilities where these are not now available.
4. The construction of more low-cost housing for low-income groups.
5. The provision of better and less crowded school facilities.
6. The development of vocational education programs especially for unemployed youth.
7. The improvement of school libraries and special remedial services for school children.
8. The establishment of a central public library.

To Promote Community Growth

The League believes that the local economy must be diversified and the rate of economic growth accelerated to provide more employment opportunities especially for the large number of youth who come into the labor market each year from the high schools and colleges in the community. The candidates of the League endorse the following steps:

1. The full utilization of federal funds and technical assistance in promoting community growth.
2. The development of new techniques to encourage progressive industries with fair employment practices to locate in Tuskegee.
3. The creation of an industrial park to facilitate the location of new industry.
4. Encourage the establishment of new federal government installations in the city and county.
5. The acquisition of federal loans for the establishment and expansion of small businesses and for the inauguration of urban renewal projects.
6. The development of a municipal land-use plan for the long-range industrial, commercial, and residential development of the city.
7. The expansion of the present city limits to increase municipal revenues and to provide better public services to the wider community.
8. The study of municipal fiscal policies to assure that present tax assessment measures effectively utilize community financial resources.

To Minister to Youth and the Aged

The League believes that the welfare of our youth and our senior citizens is a matter of utmost urgency. If elected, the candidates of the League will seek the following objectives:

1. The expansion of public recreational facilities and the establishment of a city sponsored youth center.
2. The establishment of a juvenile rehabilitation center for juvenile delinquents.
3. The creation of vocational retraining programs in cooperation with local educational institutions.
4. The erection of a rest home for the aged, blind, chronically ill, and destitue.

To Improve the Cultural Tone of the Community

The League feels that the stimulation of the esthetic and intellectual character of life is a public as well as a private responsibility. Independently, and in cooperation with other institutions and organizations in the community the candidates of the League will sponsor concerts, lectures, art exhibits, and theatre productions. Special emphasis will be placed upon the promotion of outdoor concerts during the summer.

The Non-Partisan League Needs Your Help. Will You Help? . . .

The candidates of the Non-Partisan Voters League urgently solicit the vote of every registered voter. We likewise seek the support and goodwill of those who have not yet registered to vote but feel concerned about the future of our community. Your voice and influence on behalf of the Non-Partisan Candidates mentioned in this brochure will be invaluable. We all want clean streets, decent homes, mutual understanding among the races, and a good climate for growth and prosperity. To achieve these goals, progressive, honest, and imaginative government is necessary. The Non-Partisan League needs your help. Will you help? . . . . Will you persuade your friends to help? . . . . . Will you give your vote to the candidates of the Non-Partisan League?

ALL AMERICANS MOVE FORWARD

WITH THE PRESIDENT LEADING

MOVE FORWARD

PRESIDENT KENNEDY signs a bill making the home of Frederick Douglass, the abolitionist, a national monument. Looking on, from left to right, are: Sen. Philip A. Hart of Michigan; Speaker of the House John McCormack; Mrs. Rosa Gragg, president of the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs; Rep. Charles C. Diggs of Michigan; Mrs. Mary E. C. Gregory, chairman of the Douglass Trustee Board; and Joseph Douglass, great-grandson of the man honored.

PRESIDENT John F. Kennedy, in less than two years of his Administration, has accomplished more in the field of civil rights than any other President of this century.

For the first time in history:

- A Negro, Dr. Robert C. Weaver, heads an independent agency of the Federal Government, the Housing and Home Finance Agency.
- Two Negroes, Judge James B. Parsons of Chicago and Judge Wade McCree of Detroit, are Federal District Judges.
- Two Negroes, Cecil Poole of San Francisco and Merle M. McCurdy of Cleveland, are full U. S. Attorneys.
- A Negro, Andrew T. Hatcher, is an Associate Press Secretary to the President.
- A Negro, John B. Duncan, is a Commissioner of the District of Columbia.
- A Negro, Carl Rowan, is Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs.
- A Negro, Christopher C. Scott, is Deputy Postmaster General.

Discrimination in the federal service and in employment on Government contracts is being fought by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, which has more "teeth" than any predecessor agency.

Discrimination on all major means of transportation—bus, air and rail—is ending due to action by the Department of Justice.

Discrimination in schools is ending, as this Administration pursues a desegregation policy that, in many places, works with much less fanfare and much greater effectiveness.

If color discrimination were to disappear overnight, the Negro's low economic status would still handicap him.

Therefore, the Negro knows that politically he must seek out the party that does not make promises simply to obtain the support of every possible group.

But he must seek out the party that stands for both civil rights and the improvement of the economic and social well-being as part of its broad policy, not just an election year "gimmick."

That party is the Democratic Party.

VOTE DEMOCRATIC!

"... America stands for progress in human rights as well as economic affairs, and a strong America requires the assurance of full and equal rights to all its citizens, of any race or color. This Administration has shown as never before how much could be done through the full exercise of executive powers – through the enforcement of laws already passed by the Congress – through persuasion, negotiation and litigation, to secure the Constitutional rights of." —*PRESIDENT JOHN F. THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD: ACTION

The Right to Vote

The Department of Justice has moved swiftly and vigorously to bring legal action when citizens have been denied the right to register and vote because of race.

A total of 30 court actions—20 in the past 15 months—have been brought to uphold this right.

This is more than twice the number brought in the previous eight years.

Of the new court actions, eight have been in Mississippi—the first suits ever brought by the Federal Government in that state.

A striking example of voting rights action is Macon County, Alabama, a rural county that is the home of Tuskegee Institute.

At the beginning of 1961, only a handful of Negroes were being allowed to register in Macon County.

In March of that year, the Department of Justice obtained a voting rights injunction. Today, more than 2,800 Negroes are registered to vote in the county.

The Department also won relief from the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals to protect Negroes who were registering to vote in Haywood and Fayette Counties, Tennessee. These Negroes faced economic reprisals through evictions and other means.

This year in Congress, both the Senate and House, acting on the leadership of President Kennedy, passed bills that outlawed the

This year in Congress, both the Senate and House, acting on the leadership of President Kennedy, passed bills that outlawed the poll tax.

When ratified by three-fourths of the State Legislatures, this bill will become the 24th Amendment to the Constitution.

The Administration is pledged, too, to eliminating the so-called "literacy" tests as a prerequisite to voting in some states.

Transportation

The Administration has made substantial progress in eliminating discrimination in all three major means of public transportation—bus, air, and rail.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has issued regulations that desegregate more than 100 bus terminals used in interstate travel.

When some Southern communities gave precedence to local laws, the Department of Justice filed eight suits seeking compliance with the regulations.

Five of these resulted in travel segregation laws in Mississippi and Louisiana being declared unconstitutional.

The rail transportation, 18 railroads have agreed to desegregate all their terminals in Southern cities. Several hundred terminals have taken this action.

Similar action has resulted in the elimination of racial distinctions in all but four of the airports of the nation. Suits have been filed against these four.

Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson chats with Dr. Mabel Murphy Smythe, member of the U.S. Advisory Commission on Education Exchange.

In the spring of 1961, the Administration sent 600 Federal marshals to Montgomery, Alabama, to protect the lives of the Freedom Riders and to restore order.

School Desegregation

The fall of 1962 marked the second consecutive year in which every public school being integrated for the first time made the transition without any public disorder.

In implementing the 1954 Supreme Court ruling, the Kennedy Administration has worked to preserve court orders and prevent violence.

It has taken significant new legal steps as well as providing positive moral and political leadership.

Local officials and community leaders have been encouraged to desegregate their schools and have been given federal assistance.

In Atlanta, New Orleans, Little Rock, Memphis and Dallas, schools were integrated without violence in the fall of 1961, as Federal officials worked quietly and informally with officials in these cities.

In New Rochelle, New York, the Department of Justice advised, upon court request, the proper way of eliminating racial discrimination.

In New Orleans, the Department took all possible steps, including court action, to see that teachers in desegregated schools received their salaries when they were withheld.

The Department is also seeking to intervene as a plaintiff for the employment.

They have also increased by extraordinary dimensions the number of professional, managerial and supervisory jobs now held by qualified Negro employees.

In July, for example, an agreement was concluded in Birmingham, Alabama with Tennessee Coal and Iron—the largest industrial unit in that city.

Under this agreement a dual system of seniority is going to be eliminated, and Negro employees will be on the same footing in layoffs and promotions as their white fellow employees.

What is true of Federal contractors is even more true of the Federal Government itself.

Under a new executive policy on employee unions, only those unions that do not discriminate will be recognized.

Negro students no longer are ignored by the Civil Service Commission, but are sought out and recruited.

And most important, the Negro you meet in Washington today is no longer certain to be a messenger, chauffeur or janitor.

He could be a Federal judge, a U. S. attorney, an Assistant Secretary of State or the head of a federal agency.

Legislation

Legislation cannot change a person's prejudices.

But it can work to eliminate conditions that handicap the Negro.

Other examples of Administration policy in this area:

- By September of 1963, no children on military installations—either Negro or white—will be forced to attend segregated schools.
- For the first time in 86 years, the Coast Guard Academy will have a Negro student.
- The National Science Foundation will not hold its summer institutes in colleges with discriminatory admissions procedures.
- Desegregation was initiated in the impacted area schools surrounding the Key West naval base when Federal authorities negotiated with school officials.

Jobs-Equal Opportunity

President Kennedy issued Executive Order 10925 on March 6, 1961, establishing the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

This committee has more "teeth" for enforcement than any predecessor agency.

A by-product of this order has been the Voluntary Plans for Progress, covering 85 major companies who do business with the Federal Government.

These programs have not only widened the opportunities for Negro of professional, managerial and supervisory jobs now held by qualified Negro employees.

In July, for example, an agreement was concluded in Birmingham, Alabama with Tennessee Coal and Iron—the largest industrial unit in that city.

Under this agreement a dual system of seniority is going to be eliminated, and Negro employees will be on the same footing in layoffs and promotions as their white fellow employees.

He could be a Federal judge, a U. S. attorney, an Assistant Secretary of State or the head of a federal agency.

Legislation

Legislation cannot change a person's prejudices.

But it can work to eliminate conditions that handicap the Negro.

Toward this end, all the significant legislation of the Kennedy Administration has benefited many segments of the Negro community.

There have been these bills:

- Anti-Poll Tax—a bill that outlawed the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting and that, when approved by three-fourths of the State Legislatures, will become the 24th Amendment to the Constitution.
- Area Redevelopment Act—a bill to rehabilitate the pockets of depression that dotted 900 urban and rural counties which have a total population of 28.6 million persons.
- Housing Act—a bill that provided the most comprehensive housing and slum clearance program ever proposed, including public housing for 100,000 low-income families.
- Manpower Development and Training Act — a bill for a three-year program to train unemployed workers who need new skills to meet the threat of automation.
- Minimum Wage Improvement—a bill that increased wages for 23.9 million workers, including 3.6 million workers never before covered. This was the first expansion of coverage since the original Act in 1938.
- Extension of Unemployment Compensation—a bill that extended up to 13 weeks longer the compensation paid for 2,350,000 workers who had exhausted their benefits.
- Aid to Dependent Children of the Unemployed—a bill that provided over $200 million in aid over a 14-month period to help over 750,000 needy children whose parents had exhausted their unemployment benefits.

In addition, Congress passed a bill proclaiming the Washington home of Frederick Douglass, the great abolitionist, a national monument.

MERIT AWARDS TO NEGRO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JUDGES and UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS FOR DISTINGUISHED ACHIEVEMENT

Since 1914 when the late Edward H. Wright (Cook County Board Commissioner 1896) founded the Cook County Bar Association, Awards of Merit have been presented at Annual Installation banquets honoring our Judges - our first elected Judge was Judge Albert B. George in 1924 - and distinguished members.

The year 1961 has been eventful, and particularly significant for it historically records the first appointments of Negro Federal District Court Judges - Judges James B. Parsons and Wade H. McCree Jr. by President John F. Kennedy. Equally epoch-making, this good year marked the first Presidential appointment of Negro United States Attorneys by President Kennedy - United States Attorney Cecil F. Poole for the Northern District of California and United States Attorney Merle M. McCurdy for the Northern District of Ohio.

An additional Federal Court appointment by President Kennedy gave us our second Negro United States Court of Appeals Judge — Judge Thurgood Marshall now awaiting confirmation by the Senate.

These distinguished lawyers we honor with our Awards of Merit for their outstanding achievement.

JUDGE JAMES B. PARSONS

JUDGE JAMES BENTON PARSONS - the first United States District Court Judge in the Continental United States was nominated by President Kennedy on August 8th at the opening of the 36th Annual Convention of the National Bar Association in Los Angeles, California. This organization and our Association labored successfully for this appointment. Some Comments to our association concerning our esteemed member's interesting career will render unnecessary further description:

THE WHITE HOUSE — WASHINGTON
September 18, 1961

Dear Mr. Toles:

Your letter thanking the President for the appointment of Honorable James B. Parsons has been received and is greatly appreciated. The President asked that I send his best wishes.

Sincerely,

Lawrence F. O'Brien,
Special Assistant to the President

From Senator Paul H. Douglas:
United States Senate — September 6, 1961

Dear Mr. Toles: I deeply appreciate your letter and I am very happy that you approve of the nomination of Judge Parsons. I feel confident that the Judge will make a splendid record on the bench and that he will be fair, scholarly, just and merciful. I am proud to have suggested him and worked for his appointment. My very best wishes to you, Faithfully yours, Paul H. Douglas.

From Senator Everett M. Dirksen: Sept. 19, 1961

Dear Mr. Toles: In case you missed it I thought you might want to take note of the observations I made on the Senate floor with respect to Judge Parsons. His appointment has met with universal favor. I am indeed grateful for your good letter. Sincerely, Everett M. Dirksen.

From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 30, 1961, page 16336, the following appears:

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGES

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of U.S. district judges.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these nominations be considered en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations will be considered en bloc; and, without objection, they are confirmed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, Judge Parsons adds to not a long line but, at least, an illustrious line of Negro judges which began with the appointment of William H. Hastie by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to be judge of the U.S. District Court for the Virgin Islands in 1937. Judge Hastie served in that post until 1939, when he resigned to become dean of the Howard University Law School. Subsequently he became Governor of the Virgin Islands and then was appointed to the Third Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, where he is at present serving.

Judge Hastie was succeeded on the bench in the Virgin Islands by Herman E. Moore, of Chicago. Judge Moore resigned in 1957. It was my pleasure to know Judge Hastie and Judge Moore quite well.

In 1958, President Eisenhower appointed Walter A. Gordon as Judge Moore's successor on the bench in the Virgin Islands, and Judge Gordon occupies that judicial position at present.

Also serving at present on Federal courts are Judge Ervin C. Mollison and Judge Scovel Richardson, both of whom were appointed to the U. S. Customs Court in New York.

When James Benton Parsons takes the oath of office, he will be the first Negro to have become a U.S. district judge within the continental limits of the United States. His appointment differs a little from some of the other appointments, in that it is for a life term.

Judge Parsons has had a distinguished career. He became a doctor of jurisprudence as a result of his work in the study of law at the University of Chicago. Singularly, he was the head of the Music Department of Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo., and then became supervisor of music in the city schools of Greensboro, N.C. He was also a bandmaster in the Navy for 3 years. Judge Parsons has been in the private practice of law. I am glad to say that when I nominated Robert Tieken to be U.S. district attorney in Chicago, he placed on his staff James Benton Parsons, who served there in a distinguished way for a period of several years, and then was elevated to the superior bench in Chicago.

I have talked with the judges in Chicago who know Judge Parsons quite well. Every one of them holds him in the highest regard. They think he is one of the ablest judges who ever sat on any of the State courts of Illinois and believe that he will fully carry on that great tradition when he serves as a U.S. district judge.

I wish Judge Parsons well. I know he will succeed in a great way which will reflect credit on the appointing power and upon all those who had anything to do with the advancement of his career and his ultimate assignment to the Federal bench.

JUDGE WADE HAMPTON MC CREE, JR. was born in Des Moines, Iowa, and lived in Hilo, Hawaii, Chicago, Illinois and Boston, Massachusetts prior to establishing residence in Detroit, Michigan. Following graduation from the Boston Latin School, he attended Fisk University where he received a Bachelor of Arts degree, summa cum laude. His professional training was at Harvard Law School, where he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws.

Following four years of military service, including two years of overseas combat infantry duty, he was discharged as captain and commenced the general practice of law in Detroit.

In 1952, he was appointed to the Workmen's Compensation Commission where he served until October, 1954, when Governor Williams appointed him to fill a vacancy on the Wayne County Circuit Court. He was elected to complete this term in April, 1955, and was subsequently re-elected to a full six year term in April, 1959. In September, 1961, he was appointed United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Michigan, by President Kennedy, and confirmed without objection by the Senate. He was inducted in office in October, 1961, and presently serves in that capacity.

Judge McCree is a member of the American Bar Association, the Michigan State Bar Association, the Detroit Bar Association, the Wolverine Bar Association, the American Judicature Society and other professional organizations. He is active in many community endeavors, including serving as Vice-President and member of the board of United Community Services; board member, Michigan Welfare League, Franklin Settlement, Community Health Association, Metropolitan Hospital, TB & Health Society. He is a trustee of Fisk University and a member of the Steering Committee of the United Negro College Fund. He is a member of the First Unitarian-Universalist Church and currently serves as trustee and as a member of the church school faculty. He is married and has two daughters and a son.

Sept. 23 — President Kennedy nominated eight new Federal judges today including Thurgood Marshall to the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. Marshall is chief counsel to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He has participated in the legal conduct of court cases involving that organization and the rights of Negroes since 1938.

His nomination, which was sent to the Senate today, is for a life term at a salary of 25,500 a year.

Pierre Salinger, the White House press secretary, said it was doubtful that the Senate would have time to firm Mr. Marshall at the session, since Congress was rushing toward adjournment.

In that case, he said, Mr. Marshall, a Negro, would receive an interim appointment enabling him to serve on the Second Circuit bench. His nomination still would be pending before the Senate when the Congress reconvenes in January. The Second Circuit covers Vermont, Connecticut and New York.

All the judicial nominations were to judgeships created this year by Congress.

Mr. Marshall's nomination was the tenth the President has made to a circuit judgeship, and it completed filling the circuit positions open to him. With the district judgeships announced today the President has filled 40 of the 63 places available under the new legislation.

Senate Fight Expected

The naming of Mr. Marshall, a New Yorker, was expected to be highly controversial. He is likely to be opposed by a number of Southern Senators. The opposition may be particularly heavy in the Judiciary Committee, which must recommend his confirmation to the Senate.

Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, is chairman of the committee and its deliberations often are dominated by Southerners.

Thurgood Marshall

Great-grandchild of Negro slaves . . . outstanding civil rights lawyer for nearly two decades . . . chief counsel to National Association for Advancement of Colored People . . . director counsel for its Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., since 1940 . . . has won twenty-five cases before Supreme Court covering broad areas of civil rights . . . during the last two years has worked with Southern lawyers on arrests of Freedom riders, sit-ins and pickets . . . turned down all earlier approaches on bench appointments . . . at 53, apparently ready to retire from strenuous career as lawyer . . . first ambition to be a dentist . . . received Bachelor's Degree from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania . . . decided on law after experience at segregated theatre . . . took law degree at Howard University . . . Has two small sons by second wife the former Cecelia Suyat of Hawaii . . . is a Protestant Episcopal Vestryman, a Thirty-third degree Mason and a sought-after speaker.

The NEW YORK TIMES editorialized the following on September 25th:

THREE GOOD NOMINATIONS

The President has shown good judgment in nominating Thurgood Marshall to the Court of Appeals for the Second District, and two other well-known citizens, Dudley B. Bonsal and Irving Ben Cooper, for the Southern District of New York.

Mr. Marshall, a third-generation descendant of Negro slaves, has been chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and has won twenty-five civil rights cases before the Supreme Court. For this reason he will be opposed by some Southern Senators. Because of his high intelligence, his scrupulous respect for the law and the judicial qualities evident even in his briefs and pleadings he ought to be confirmed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY CECIL F. POOLE — first Negro United States Attorney in the Continental United States was appointed by President Kennedy on April 15th, 1961 on the recommendation of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy. At the time of his appointment to the Northern District of California at San Francisco, he was a member of California's Governor Edmund G. Brown's Cabinet serving as Executive Clemency Secretary. In this position Mr. Poole had three commissions under his jurisdiction in addition to his duties as extradition and clemency secretary—the Commission on Problems of Insanity in Criminal Cases (he prepared plans for the organization of this agency) Criminal Commission on Narcotics and the Commission on Juvenile Justice. A graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, he holds a Master of Law degree from Harvard Law School. He is a former Assistant District Attorney and the first Negro chief prosecutor in San Francisco, California. He has also served with the Federal Housing Authority, National Labor Relations Board and Selective Service Board. He is 48, married and has two daughters.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY MERLE M. McCURDY — Was the second Negro United States Attorney appointed by President Kennedy. He was sworn in on October 6, 1961 to the Northern District of Ohio at Cleveland. He is a graduate of Western Reserve University and Western Reserve University Law School in 1947. Engaged in private practice for five years, he served as Assistant County Prosecutor for eight years. A record of 44 consecutive Jury convictions has been unequaled. In March, 1960 he became the first Public Defender in the newly created position in Cuyhoga County. He is 49, married and the father of two daughters.

NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION 37th ANNUAL CONVENTION MEETS IN INDIANAPOLIS AUGUST 29 – SEPTEMBER 1, 1962.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE – Assistant Deputy Attorney General Joseph F. Dolan addressed the 36th Annual NBA Convention at Los Angeles on the subject "Survival in the Sixties" August, 1961. Excerpts from his excellent address in connection with additional Judicial positions and placement of lawyers in the department are as follows:

The role of the American Negro lawyer is a key one.

As a lawyer he has been trained to live, and to counsel others to live, by rule of law. As a Negro, he has witnessed injustices and denials of legal rights that cry out for immediate and violent retribution. Yet, he must know when to counsel moderation, when to counsel two steps forward, and when to counsel one step back. He must be willing to wage a relentless, untiring and patient struggle for progress. A part of that role can be played by carrying out the objectives of your association.

When you strive "to improve the administration of justice and to preserve the independence of the judiciary," you strengthen America; when you "work for a more equitable representation of all racial groups in the judiciary" or "promote legislation that will improve the economic condition of all Citizens of the United States," you are an active soldier in the fight for freedom.

Fight for these objectives, and an era of accelerated progress for the Negro in America is inevitable.

Your national government stands ready to be a partner in this era of progress. The Kennedy Administration has plans for action, plans for deeds. The President, the Attorney General, and all of us who play any role in the administration will surely be judged by our deeds, not by our words. We are willing so to be judged. This week, on the recommendation of Attorney General Robert Kennedy, the President nominated the first Negro District Judge in the Continental United States. Judge Parsons is first, he is not the last. From among his colleagues of the Negro bar of this country will come other qualified federal judges. There must be, and there will be, more Cecil Poole's in our United States Attorneys offices. Employment opportunities for Negro attorneys in the Department of Justice and in other agencies of government should be, and are being, significantly enlarged. By these steps we shall make progress.

Another way to progress is for you to assist others to come along the successful road which you have traveled. You have achieved the enviable professional status so sought by others in your community. By reason of that status, you can foster the general advancement of the American Negro more efficaciously than can your less privileged fellows. Progress for the American Negro lies not alone in your self-advancement. To a great degree, it lies in the broadening of the base on which you stand by having other new Negro lawyers join you. To swell your professional ranks, it will be necessary for you to reach down to help to lift others up to the plateau which you have reached. At times, this aid must be given at the sacrifice of self-advancement. But the cause is just, and the need is great. You cannot fail. Too much depends on your success.

THE NUMBER OF NEGRO JUDGES – has increased from 58 to 69 since our last publication. Four Judges have been removed through death, resignation and election as follows: United States Customs Court Judge Irvin C. Mollison, Chicago, Illinois and Judge John E. Prim, Seattle, Washington by death; Judge Boce E. Barlow, Hartford, Connecticut by election and Judge Lawson E. Thomas, Miami, Florida by resignation.

Fifteen additional Judges include the following:

1. Judge Thurgood Marshall, U.S. Court of Appeals
2. Judge Otis M. Smith, Supreme Court of Michigan
3. Judge Charles Farmer, Detroit, Michigan
4. Judge Richard A. Harewood, Chicago, Illinois
5. Judge Vaino Spencer, Los Angeles, California
6. Judge Arthur O. Fisher, Dayton, Ohio
7. Judge Clay E. Hunter, Canton, Ohio
8. Judge G. Bruce Robinson, Boston, Massachussets
9. Judge James Flanigan, Denver, Colorado
10. Judge John R. Hargrove, Baltimore, Maryland
11. Judge Moxie A. Rigby, Nassau County, New York
12. Judge William S. Diguid, St. Louis, Missouri
13. Judge John W. Harvey, St. Louis, Missouri
14. Judge Harry Hazlewood, Newark, New Jersey
15. Judge Joseph Waddy, District of Columbia Municipal Court

VICE PRESIDENT RUSSELL R. DE BOW has been appointed Deputy Commissioner of Investigation by Mayor Daley. A graduate of Illinois State Normal University in 1935, De Bow attended law school at Georgetown and DePaul universities. He was an administrative assistant to Gov. Michael V. DiSalle of Ohio when DiSalle was director of the Office of Price Administration 1951-1953. For the past seven years he has served as assistant to Rep. Barratt O'Hara (Dem. Ill.) while O'Hara was Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Africa. He has made three trips to Africa during 1960-1961 the last tour with the International Cooperation Administration. He is a member of the Panel of American Arbitrators mediating labor disputes. A native of Lovejoy, Illinois he is married and has one daughter.

JUDGE RICHARD A. HAREWOOD was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County on April 10, 1962 to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge James B. Parsons. He was a member of the University of Illinois board of Trustees and he has served two terms as a state representative—1937-1938 and 1957-1958. He was a former assistant corporation counsel and an assistant states attorney. At the time of his election he was a Commissioner of the Municipal Court hearing small claims and rent cases. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois and the University of Chicago Law School.

Four members of the Cook County Bar Association have received their respective party nominations in the primary on April 10th for the November 6th election this fall.

JAMES D. CROSSON an assistant to Municipal Court Chief Justice Augustine Bowe has been nominated on the Democratic slate for Municipal Court Judge. For several years Crosson, a John Marshall graduate and vice president of the Cook County Bar, has served as referee of the Traffic Court.

JAMES T. HORTON — a past president of the Cook County Bar Association and a former assistant state's attorney—has been nominated on the Republican ticket for the Municipal Court; PHILANDER S. NEVILLE, a former attorney for the Registrar of Titles, is also a candidate on the Republican ticket for the Municipal Court this fall.

ROBERT H. HOLLOWAY has been nominated on the Republican ticket for Clerk of the Appellate Court. A former assistant States attorney, he has previously run for election to the Municipal Court.

ARCHIBALD JAMES CAREY, former third ward Alderman, Delegate to the United Nations, and member of former President Eisenhower's Federal employment committee, for the first time in the history of Cook County has been nominated for Judge of the Probate Court of Cook County on the Republican Ticket for election November 6.

LEAH BROCK McCARTNEY, former Illinois assistant to Congressman William L. Dawson, has joined the Florida A. and M. University college of Law as Assistant Professor. She is a graduate of Lincoln University (Mo.) and George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

RADCLIFFE O. WOOLFORD, a graduate of Lincoln University (Pa.) and John Marshall Law School, has been appointed an Attorney with the Veteran's Administration.

PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY appointed the second Negro in history to serve as a United States marshal within the continental area of the country. He is Luke Charles Moore, an assistant United States Attorney in the District of Columbia, and will become Marshal for the District of Columbia. Frederick Douglas was the first Marshal for the District from 1877 to 1881.

MICHIGAN STATE SUPREME COURT JUSTICE Otis M. Smith, a Flint, Michigan attorney who became the first Negro chairman of the Michigan Public Service Commission and the State's first Negro Auditor General was appointed to the Michigan Supreme Court by Governor Swainson. The first Negro State Supreme Court Justice was Judge Jonathan Jasper Wright who was elected in 1870 to a full six year term as Associate Justice of the South Carolina Supreme Court.

ARCHIBALD LeCESNE was appointed as an Assistant United States attorney by United States Attorney James P. O'Brien of the Northern District at Chicago, Illinois. The former Assistant States Attorney's addition to the staff brings the number to two Negro assistants. Frederick McLendon was the first appointment.

OWEN RALL, PRESIDENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE BAR ASSOCIATION, spoke at the March 23rd meeting of the CCBA on the proposed Judicial Article which is to be submitted to the voters at the November 6th election. The association adopted a resolution approving the Article and the active support of each member to work for passage. George N. Leighton was appointed Chairman of the Committee to work for passage of the Article which provides for consolidating all courts at the trial level, reapportioning the Supreme Court, establishing an independent Appellate Court, providing for centralized administrative control of the court system and introducing a system of judicial tenure under which judges would stand for retention in office against their records.

GOVERNOR AND MRS. OTTO KERNER formally opened the campaign for passage of the Judicial Article with a Buffet Luncheon at the Executive Mansion at Springfield on March 19th. President Toles attended with other bar leaders.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE SPECIAL SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE to create 18 additional Superior Court and 18 Municipal Court Judges was given by President Toles in Springfield last October with the largest group of Bar Associations from Chicago. Seventeen Superior Court Judges were created by legislation and will be slated by the two Party conventions in August. The Cook County Bar Association will request each Party to slate at least four Negro candidates to augment the inadequate Negro representation on the Cook County Judiciary. There are only 4 Negro Judges of the present 95 Judges; and on November 6 there will be 112 Judges.

NEGRO STATE APPELLATE COURT JUDGES are Associate Justice Harold A. Stevens, Supreme Court Appellate Division, New York, and Justice Edward L. Jefferson, District Court of Appeals, California.

PRESIDING JUDGE of the 57 Judge Los Angeles, California Municipal Court Judiciary is Municipal Court Judge Thomas L. Griffith. The Executive Judge of the ten Judge Recorders Court in Detroit, Michigan is Judge Elvin G. Davenport and the presiding Judge of the Municipal Court in San Francisco, California is John D. Bussey.

MR. KENNEDY'S DELIBERATE SPEED

No other internal problem has caused this nation so much anguish as the racial question. On this rock the republic nearly foundered. Now, 100 years later, it is still our most volatile domestic issue.

We will not be satisfied until every form of public discrimination has been eliminated. Private attitudes and arrangements are a matter of individual conscience, but no citizen of this country should be deprived of full enjoyment of public facilities because of his race. Nor should public funds be used to support institutions that practice discrimination. Until the goals of nondiscrimination have been achieved, this nation will have fallen short of its promise.

So we say the question is not, "Should we work toward these goals?" but, "How best to achieve them?" We believe the answer is: in as orderly a manner as is consistent with good sense. (It is also just about 100 years since Bismarck wrote that "politics is the doctrine of the possible".)

Not long ago President Kennedy invited White House reporters into his living room at Palm Beach and gave them a briefing on the achievements and objectives of his Administration. The President made it clear that he did not intend to press Congress for civil-rights legislation this year. He also indicated that he had no immediate intention of signing an executive order that would bar discrimination in Federally assisted housing, although he had promised to sign it during the campaign, saying that all it would take was "the stroke of a pen."

The President was sharply criticized for these civil-rights pronouncements. The New York Times said he "has not waited for Congress to convene before beginning a retreat from the more challenging elements of his domestic program." The A.D.A. (Americans for Democratic Action) urged the President to reverse himself and undertake an "all-out assault on racial segregation and discrimination in the coming session of Congress." Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., called the President's announced policy "a basic error."

At the outset of his Administration the President decided to concentrate first on executive rather than legislative action on civil rights. He simply felt that "if we could enforce the laws we already have, we'd have a much better situation."

We believe that the Kennedy Administration has made a good record on civil rights, and even Roy Wilkins admits as much. The President has brought qualified Negro leaders into the Government, including Robert Weaver, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency; Clifton Wharton, ambassador to Norway, and Thurgood Marshall, judge of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. The President has moved to create a Department of Urban Affairs and Housing, and even though it was bound to stir opposition among Republican leaders and Southern Congressmen, he announced his intention to appoint Mr. Weaver to head that department—and incidentally put the opposing Republican Congressmen on the spot with their Northern Negro voters.

The principal agency of executive action, the Department of Justice, has concentrated its main effort in attempting to secure voting rights for Negroes in the Deep South. "Public officials respond to their constituents," an Administration official explains. "If we give a Congressman some Negro constituents, he will be responsive to them."

The pressures, intimidations and fraudulent practices employed in some parts of the Deep South to prevent Negroes from registering are a national disgrace. When the Kennedy Administration came to power, only a dozen of these situations were under investigation or in the courts. Today the Department of Justice is investigating or litigating more than eighty such cases.

Under the Kennedy Administration the Department of Justice petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for regulations that required more than 100 interstate bus terminals to desegregate. Justice Department officials worked out the desegregation of hundreds of rail terminals and stepped into school cases as a "friend of the court." It encouraged and helped local authorities at the McComb, Mississippi, and other explosive Freedom Rider situations. By ordering some 600 deputy U.S. marshals into Montgomery, Alabama, Robert Kennedy's department prevented an ugly situation from developing into a disaster.

An executive agency, the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under Vice President Lyndon Johnson, met with twenty-one of the largest government contractors and worked out an agreement with them to eliminate discrimination in hiring, training and promoting Negroes.

In his State of the Union message the President asked Congress to abolish two age-old barriers to Negro enfranchisements: the poll tax and the literacy test. The President set no timetable for these requests, but Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield later introduced a bill to make a sixth-grade education the only literacy requirement for Federal elections. The Administration's hand was forced on this measure by Sen. Jacob Javits, the New York Republican, who was about to introduce a bill that would apply to not only Federal but also state and local elections. Mr. Kennedy had to support the Mansfield bill.

We believe that the accent on executive action makes for sound policy. While the elimination of literacy test is highly desirable, we think that the timing of the bill is unfortunate. A protracted debate is likely, and that is something that we can ill afford at a time when Congress's agenda includes such critical items as authority for the President to negotiate tariff reductions with the Common Market countries, the projected purchase of half the $200,000,000 U.N. bond issue, medical care for the aged and tax reform.

We think that the President has acted wisely in not stirring up a bigger hornets' nest by issuing the executive order barring discrimination in Federal housing at this time. The President, unlike his critics, must concern himself with all of the nation's problems. By signing the order now, he would weaken his bargaining power with Congress by depriving himself of a potent weapon: the threat to sign the order if Southern Congressmen give him a hard time, say, on the tariff matter.

The President is bound by his campaign promises to sign the housing order. He is fully aware of that commitment. We believe that his critics would do well to show some patience and leave the timing of the order to the President. In the field of racial relations Mr. Kennedy has shown himself a good leader, but in the inexact science of politics—to use another Bismarck term—the leader cannot run too far ahead of the congressional pack. He has a risky lead already.

The Negro Jurist -- A Quest for Equality

By Anthony G. Ward

Loyola Law School graduate, Edward B. Toles is the President of the Cook County Bar Association, a trustee of his church, member of various civic bodies in his neighborhood, a lifetime member of the NAACP and a Negro who in his own words is "realistic" about the future of the Negro lawyer in Chicago and in the Nation.

On October 26, 1961 we met in his office and discussed many topics ranging from "man's inhumanity to man" to the way his 8-year-old son reacted to last year's homecoming at the University of Illinois. However, our conversation seemed to focus on the work that Mr. Toles, the Cook County Bar Association, and the National Bar Association have done in seeking Judicial appointments for Negro attorneys, on the Municipal, State and National level. Relatively speaking, it seems that they have accomplished a great deal.

On June 29, 1959 the Cook County Bar Association Judiciary Committee received permission from the Association to publish a complaint against the Major Political Parties of Cook County seeking more nominations of Negro attorneys for election to Judicial Office in Cook County. The Committee was headed by Mr. Toles. In the elections of that year Mr. Fred Slater was elected the first Negro Superior Court Judge of Cook County. Mr. Toles sees that election as a milestone in the fight of the Negro and the Negro attorney to achieve equal opportunity before the Law in Cook County.

Subsequently, the Midwestern Regional Conference of the National Bar Association met in Chicago on April 30, 1960 and accepted a report from the Committee on Judiciary Report, headed by Mr. Toles. The report dealt with Negro Federal Judges between the years 1868 and 1960 and in short asked for better representation of the Negro attorney on the Federal Bench.

The report pointed out that prior to 1960 only three life-term Negro judges had been appointed to the Federal Bench. The first was Judge Irwin C. Mollison who was appointed to the United States Customs Court by Harry S. Truman in 1945. He was followed by Judge William H. Hastie in 1949, who was appointed by Truman to the United States Court of Appeals and Judge Scovil Richardson, who was appointed to the United States Custom Court by Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1957.

During this period there were only three term appointments for Negroes outside of the Bench of the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia, these being appointments to District Court Judgeships in the Virgin Islands.

The report, written by Mr. Toles, stated that although the number of Negro lawyers in the United States exceeded 4,000, a Negro had never been appointed a Federal District Court Judge although there were more than 235 District Court Judges in 86 District Courts in the 50 states. The members of the National Bar Association, through the able pen of Mr. Toles urged that this situation be remedied.

The National Bar Association didn't discontinue their efforts upon the publishing of the aforementioned committee report but made efforts to take their plea to both men who were in the process of campaigning for the presidency of the United States. They succeeded in being received by both candidates, by Senator Kennedy in August and by Vice President Nixon in October. Representatives of the Association were received by the then Senator Kennedy in Washington on August 31, 1960 who issued a statement to the delegation in which he stated, "I assure you that in a new Democratic Administration there will be far better representation, on the basis of merit, of persons of all our

Mr. Toles was happy to point out to this reporter that this campaign promise of the President was one that he (the President) has taken seriously, the results being, among others, the first appointment of a Negro (Judge James B. Parsons) as a United States District Court Judge in the history of the United States. Subsequent to that appointment on August 9, 1961 two other Negroes have received appointments to the Federal Bench. Wade McCree, who was a Circuit Court Judge in Detroit, Mich., received the second United States District Court Judgeship granted to a Negro and Thurgood Marshall, former legal counsel of the NAACP, received an interim appointment as a United States Court of Appeals Judge. Since his election, the President has also appointed two Negroes to the position of United States District Attorney, one to the Northern District of California and one in Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Toles agreed that these were signs of improvement in the status of the Negro lawyer but added that these appointments constituted a mere percentage of what the National Bar Association and the Cook County Bar Association considered a rightful share of seats on the bench and other legal and semi-legal appointments for the Negro lawyer. Mr. Toles and his associates want more and it doesn't look like they will give up until they get more.

This spokesman for the Negro members of the legal profession in Cook County explained the rationale behind this campaign on the part of the Negro lawyer in this way. He pointed out that in most cases the door to the big corporation and well-known legal firm is closed to the Negro and will be closed to him for some time. He pointed out that most Negro attorneys have few wealthy clients. Their practice is made up mostly of little cases involving the "Little Man" — the Negro, and since the Negro belongs to the "lower-lower-middle class, the laboring class," he needs the advice of counsel only in small cases, i.e. divorce suits, trouble with the law (police) etc. So, in the words of Mr. Toles, the Negro attorney must turn to the public domain for recognition in his chosen profession. It is his view that if the outstanding Negro attorney is going to be recognized for his abilities it will have to be in the form of a seat on the Bench or some government appointment to a position demanding legal background and training.

This reporter asked Mr. Toles what other judicial appointments he and his associates would like to see in the near future. He said that they would like to see a Negro on the Illinois Supreme Court and pointed out that such an appointment would not be without precedent. The first Negro State Supreme Court Justice took a seat on the bench of South Carolina in 1870 and the second was recently appointed in the state of Michigan by Governor Swenson. He noted that there are fewer Negroes in the state of Michigan than there are in Illinois. He also pointed out that there are 40 unfilled appointments to United States District Court Judgeships with vacancies in New York, California, Ohio and Pennsylvania, all states in which the Negro population would warrant a Negro sitting on the District Court. Toles would like to see at least one of these remaining 40 appointments given to a Negro, and maintains that four appointments, one to each of the aforementioned states, would not be asking too much when the Negro population of those states is taken into consideration.

Edward B. Toles is an impressive man, not so much in physical appearance as in quiet courage. Mr. Toles and his associates are courageous in their refusal to be intimidated, to be segregated, in their refusal to accept the status quo of the American Negro. For that they are to be congratulated. For that they ought to be emulated.

In closing the interview, Mr. Toles made this statement, "I believe that this represents the beginning of a new era in the progress of the Negro and the Negro lawyer. The liberal decisions in favor of the Negro by the Supreme Court and the recent appointment of Negroes to the Federal Courts and as U.S. Attorneys by the President of the United States, gives new significance and meaning to our Constitution and, in the language of President Kennedy, 'For no American should be disqualified for any office because of his race, color, religion or family origin. It is time for us to practice what our Constitution preaches. The Federal service should be a model of Americanism, in which there are no traces of any form of arbitrary discrimination.' "

COOK COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION PRESENTS ITS AWARD OF MERIT TO ATTORNEY GENERAL ROBERT F. KENNEDY, FIRST NEGRO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JUDGES, AND FIRST NEGRO UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AT 48TH ANNUAL BANQUET

On Saturday evening May 19, 1962 at the Pick-Congress Hotel CCBA held its 48th Annual Banquet attended by the largest number of lawyers in its history and presented its highest awards to the Attorney General, the Honorable Robert F. Kennedy, and first Negro U.S. Judges and first Negro U.S. Attorneys. With television coverage by WGN-TV, the CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE, May 20, 1962 printed the following account. Congressman Barrett O'Hara (2D, Illinois) extended his remarks in the House of Representatives on May 21 to include the news report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 21, 1962

pp A 3736, 3737:

NEGRO BAR HONORS ATTORNEY GENERAL AND KENNEDY APPOINTEES

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
of
HON. BARRATT O'HARA of Illinois in the House of Representatives

Monday, May 21, 1962

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, I am extending my remarks to include the following news article from the Chicago Sunday Tribune of May 20, 1962:

COUNTY BAR PAYS TRIBUTE TO SEVEN LAWYERS

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and six lawyers and judges were honored by the Cook County Bar Association last night at its 48th annual merit awards banquet in the Pic-Congress Hotel.

Edward B. Toles presented the award of merit to Kennedy, brother of the President, and to James I. O'Brien, U.S. Attorney in Chicago, before a crowd of 500 attorneys and their wives.

Other merit award recipients were Judge Thurgood Marshall, whose appointment as judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, New York City, is pending confirmation by the Senate; James B. Parsons, judge of the Federal district court in Chicago; Judge Wade H. McCree, Jr., of the Federal district court in northern Michigan; Cecil F. Poole, Federal attorney for northern California, and Merle M. McCurdy, Federal attorney for northern Ohio.

Toles, president of the bar group, received the Edward H. Wright Award as lawyer of the year from the association he heads. The award is named after the late Edward H. Wright, a prominent Negro attorney who was elected to the county board in 1896. Toles was presented the award by Russell R. De Bow, vice president of the bar association and deputy commissioner of investigations for Chicago.

Toles told the group that the five Federal judges and attorneys who received the award, all of whom were given their appointments by President Kennedy, "marks a milestone in a national campaign for more adequate representation of Negro attorneys in county, State, and Federal posts."

He said that although there were more than 4,000 Negro attorneys in the country, none ever had been appointed to a Federal district court judgeship before Kennedy's election. He discussed Negro representation in the Federal courts with both Vice President Nixon and Mr. Kennedy before the 1960 presidential election. Toles said, "and I secured written assurances from Senator Kennedy that, if elected, there would be far better representation on basis of merit of persons of all racial groups, including particularly those who in the past have been excluded on the basis of prejudice."

Attorney Charles F. Lane, chairman of the banquet committee and former president of the association, founded in 1914 by Wright, said, "the association will press forward until no American is disqualified for any office because of his race, color, religion, or family origin."

DEMOCRATIC and REPUBLICAN PARTY CENTRAL COMMITTEES SUBMIT CCBA MEMBERS FOR JUDGESHIP SCREENING. OF THE 177 NAMES INCLUDING 27 MUNICIPAL COURT JUDGES, TWELVE NEGRO LAWYERS—ALL ACTIVE CCBA MEMBERS —WERE SUBMITTED TO THE CHICAGO BAR ASSOCIATION TO PROVIDE EVALUATIONS OF POSSIBLE CANDIDATES FOR THE 17 NEW SUPERIOR COURT JUDGESHIPS IN THE NOVEMBER 6TH ELECTION.

Questionnaires were sent to possible candidates but recommendations of the Bar Association to party leaders are not binding it was learned. CCBA members listed are:

1. Hon. Lycurgus J. Conner — Assistant to the Probate Court Judge and Representative General Assembly, 22nd District.

2. Hon. James D. Crosson — Assistant to the Chief Justice, Municipal Court of Chicago, Former Referee, Municipal Court Traffic Division. Democratic Nominee for election Nov. 6 for Judge Municipal Court of Chicago.

3. Hon. Claude W. B. Holman — Master in Chancery Superior Court, Elected Democratic Committeeman, 4th Ward and Alderman 4th Ward.

4. Hon. Sidney A. Jones, Jr. — Judge of the Municipal Court of Chicago. Former Alderman 6th Ward.

5. Hon. Jewel Rogers LaFontant — Member Board of Managers, Chicago Bar Association, Former Assistant U.S. Attorney Northern District, Illinois; Seconded Nomination for President, former vice-president Richard M. Nixon at 1960 Republican National Convention.

6. Hon. George N. Leighton — Former member Board of Managers and Librarian, Chicago Bar Association; former Assistant Illinois Attorney General.

7. Hon. William R. Ming — Former Law School Professor University of Chicago and Howard University Law Schools; former Illinois Attorney General (Illinois Commerce Commission), Associate Counsel NAACP.

8. Hon. James D. Montgomery — Former Assistant U.S. District Attorney, Northern District Illinois.

9. Hon. Edith S. Sampson — Assistant Corporation Counsel; Former Delegate United Nations; Member U.S. Citizens Committee North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

10. Hon. Earl E. Strayhorn — Member Civil Service Commission; Former Assistant States Attorney.

11. Hon. Euclid L. Taylor — Master in Chancery, Superior Court; Former Illinois Assistant States Attorney; Past President National Bar Association.

12. Hon. Edward B. Toles — Former Assistant Attorney, U.S. Housing Authority; War Correspondent Chicago Defender; President Cook County Bar Association; Editor CCBA News; Chairman Judiciary Committee, National Bar Association; Member Judiciary Committee Chicago Bar Association.

CCBA had asked that of the 17 Judges to be elected in November that at least four Negro Candidates be slated by each Major Party to augment the inadequate representation of the Chicago Negro Lawyer. At present there are only four Judges elected - Judge Fred W. Slater elected in 1959 to a six year term on the Superior Bench; Judge Richard A. Harewood elected in 1962 to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Federal Judge James B. Parsons whose term expires in 1963; Municipal Court Judges Sidney A. Jones, Jr. and Henry C. Ferguson. There are at present 95 Judicial positions (112 after Nov. 6, 1962), 20 Circuit Court Judges (all of whom are up for election in 1963), 36 Superior Court Judges (17 additional Judges are up for election on November 6), One county and one Probate Court Judge (both up for election on November 6), One Chief Justice and 36 Associate Municipal Court Judges. 12 Municipal Court Judges will be elected in November; three CCBA members are candidates: Vice-president James D. Crosson on the Democratic slate and Past President James Horton and Philander Neville on the Republican ticket. Former 3rd Ward Alderman and former UN Delegate Archibald Carey is a candidate on the Republican ticket for Probate Court Judge.

CHICAGO BAR ASSOCIATION RATING OF JUDICIAL CANDIDATES under new rules will evaluate each candidate on the basis of a "qualified", "not qualified" or "no recommendation" finding. The entire membership—about 7,600—will vote after an initial screening by a committee on candidates and the board of managers on whether a candidate is qualified or not qualified. The former classification of "well qualified" and "exceptionally well qualified" will no longer be used and the number of votes received by each candidate will not be revealed. The new method recently adopted makes possible that all 34 candidates slated by both major parties could be rated "qualified" and thus leave the final decision to voters.

COOK COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION RATING OF JUDICIAL CANDIDATES, however, has not been changed. CCBA retains its method of endorsement of candidates after they have been selected by the major parties. The system of advising the electorate of CCBA choices has been used since 1914 and was reaffirmed by CCBA board of Directors last July 16, 1962 (CCBA News, Vol. 1, No. 3, 1961, pp. 3,4).

PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY APPOINTS TWO WASHINGTON, D.C. NEGRO JUDGES. Judge Joseph C. Waddy was appointed and confirmed by the Senate to the District of Columbia Municipal Court for a term of ten years at an annual salary of $17,000. This brings the number of Negro Municipal Court D.C. Judges to three. The population of the District is over 54 per cent Negro. A Negro Federal District Court Judgeship with lifetime tenure has long been advocated by the NBA Judiciary Committee (Negro Federal Judges, 1960).

PRESIDENT KENNEDY announced the nomination of the first Negro woman Judge in history on Sunday, August 5th from Hyannisport, Mass. She is Mrs. Marjorie McKenzie Lawson, one of the President's earliest Negro supporters (see Book Shelf). Mrs. Lawson, born in 1912 in Pittsburgh, Pa. was graduated from the University of Michigan (Social Work) in 1933; Robert H. Terrell Law School, Washington, D.C. and Columbia University Law School and has practiced in Washington since 1939. From 1943-46 she was assistant Director, Review and Analysis division, FEPC; General Counsel for the 800,000 National Association of Colored Women; Appointed by President Kennedy Director Civil Rights Commission; Division, Presidents Committee for Equal Employment Opportunity and she has been a Pittsburgh Courier columnist for 14 years. She is married to Belford Lawson, former president of Alpha Phi Alpha and attorney in many Supreme Court Cases (Washington Chain Grocery store picketing and Alpha Phi Alpha Amicus Curiae, Henderson v U.S. Abolishing segregation in Dining Cars. The Lawsons have one son —Belford III, 18. The Washington Post editorialized on August 8: "Mrs. Lawson is an experienced lawyer and social worker and a valued member of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. Her nomination is also important from another view point. Since many of the children coming before the court are Negroes the presence of a well qualified Negro on its bench should notably enhance its capacity for community service. .....The only remaining hurdle is confirmation ... by the Senate. This should be promptly attended to as it entails no complicated search for talent."

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE RICHARD A. HAREWOOD has resigned his elected position as Trustee of the University of Illinois and also the University Civil Service Board. In his letter to Governor Kerner he said "that his Judicial work would make it difficult to discharge adequately his responsibilities to the University." He was elected in 1958 to a 6 year term as University Trustee. Gov. Kerner said: "His years of service to the University have been noteworthy. I accepted his resignation from this important post with great reluctance."

CHICAGO MUNICIPAL COURT REFEREE ERNEST A. GREENE has been appointed to the Traffic Court by Chief Justice Augustine Bowe. He is a former member of the Legislature and a former assistant Corporation Counsel.

STATE SUPREME COURT POST SOUGHT BY NEGRO LAWYERS. Michigan Supreme Court Justice Otis M. Smith is seeking election this fall after having been appointed by Governor Swainson to Michigan's highest Court. He was the first Negro State Supreme Court Justice since South Carolina Supreme Court Justice Johnothan Jasper Wright was elected to a full six year term in 1870.

Z. ALEXANDER LOOBY, Veteran Nasvhille City Councilman is in the midst of a campaign to become the first Negro member of the Tennessee State Supreme Court as an independent candidate against two Democratic incumbents. NBA member Looby's home was blasted and destroyed by a dynamite bomb in Nashville, Tenn. on April 19, 1960 after he had defended lunch counter sitdown students. Eleven days later on April 30th he appeared as one of the speakers on Cook County Bar Law Day Program at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, which was the kickoff campaign for Negro Federal Court Judges.

NEW YORK APPELLATE COURT ASSOCIATE JUSTICE HAROLD A. STEVENS is reportedly being considered as the candidate for the highest New York Court, The Court of Appeals.

FORMER PRESIDING JUDGE JOHN W. BUSSEY of San Francisco's Municipal Court has been appointed by Governor Brown to the Superior Court, San Francisco, California.

CCBA MEMBER EUGENE W. WOOD was installed as President of the Chicago Association of Defense Lawyers at a dinner in the Glendale Country Club on May 29th. He is the first Negro to be elected to the post and succeeds Michael H. Brodkin. President Wood, a native of Nashville, Tenn., was the first Negro vice president of the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s.

THE DEATH OF CCBA MEMBER PHILANDER NEVILLE, a Republican Candidate for Municipal Court caused a replacement on the Republican ticket with the naming of CCBA members George S. Barnes and Robert C. Power. The Democratic Candidate for Municipal Court Judge, James D. Crosson, was elevated to the Superior Court nomination and Hon. Edith S. Sampson was nominated as Democratic Candidate for Municipal Court Judge. She is the first Negro woman ever nominated for Judge in Illinois and if elected will be only the fourth woman judge elected in Illinois. Four other Negro women judges sit in New York, Washington, D.C., Philadelphia and Los Angeles.

CCBA members on the Republican ticket are: Archibald Carey, Jr. for Probate Court Judge: Robert H. Holloway for Appellate Court Clerk; Jewel Rogers LaFontant for Superior Court Judge. George S. Barnes, James T. Horton and Robert C. Power for Municipal Court Judges.

Congressman Sidney Yates and President Toles at Awards Banquet. President Kennedy said, on Fri., Oct. 19, "I come here to ask you to send Sid Yates to the U.S. Senate, a man to stand with Senator Paul H. Douglas and move this country forward."

CHICAGO DAILY NEWSPAPER COMMENT ON THE JUDICIAL SLATES

The Chicago Daily Tribune's George Tagge in the September 28th edition wrote: "Mayor Daley presided over slatemakers who met for three days in the Morrison hotel to interview more than 40 aspirants for the Municipal court positions.

Epton is slated for a full six year term. He takes the place on the Democratic ticket of James D. Crosson, who was promoted to the Superior court ticket.

Horan succeeds Municipal Judge Daniel J. McNamara, Jr. on the city court ticket for another six year term. McNamara also was advanced to the Superior court group of nominees last month.

Matkovic will get two years remaining of the Municipal court term of George B. Weiss, who was promoted to Superior court in the April 10 special election.

Mrs. Sampson, a widow, will also get two years of an unexpired term. This remained when Municipal Judge Irving Landesman was transferred to Superior court by the April 10 election results.

Mayor Daley said racial and nationality factors were brushed aside by the Democrats. His latest group of candidates is composed of a Negro, a Jew, an Irish-American, and a Slavic-American."

And on October 6th the following article by the same author appeared in the Tribune:

"The main chance for Democrats to pull their chestnuts out of the fire lies with the growing Negro vote. In various special elections around the country this year Democrats showed losses in every group except the Negroes. There they showed gains.

A study of Congressional Quarterly, a non-partisan reporting agency, showed five congressional districts here in 1960 with Negro population ranging from 29.9 per cent to 92.1 per cent. All went overwhelmingly Democratic, from 59.1 per cent to 80.5 per cent. And these districts now have large Negro populations.

Governor Kerner reportedly called off his proposed 10 per cent cut in relief after Mayor Daley told him: 'There are six wards we've got to carry big.' These are the 2d, 3d, 4th, 6th, 20th, and 24th, all now with Negro ward committeemen.

Efforts by some Democratic leaders to woo the Negro voters are continuous, even in areas with fewer of them. For example, the Evanston Regular Democratic organization in its current publications lists two meetings to plug for "open occupancy" or "freedom of residence." The Rev. Martin Luther King will address one of these November 13 at Evanston Township High school auditorium.

The Democratic state representative from Evanston, Robert Marks, a candidate for re-election, sponsored and voted for the "open occupancy" bill in the 1961 legislature. This measure requires private property owners to sell or rent without regard to race."

Chicago's American's Charles Finston on August 29th columned the following: "Many qualified Democrats are reported disgruntled because they were sidetracked by party leaders to make way for six Republican defectors on the ticket.

Mayor Daley tried to placate almost 100 disappointed aspirants by emphasizing that more judgeships will be available in the future.

Daley's placating message was delivered after the judicial ticket was selected for the November 6 election at a meeting of the 80-man county committee in the Morrison hotel yesterday.

Today, Daley indicated he referred to 18 Circuit and Superior court vacancies which are expected in the next three years because of the anticipated retirement of over-age sitting veteran judges.

Eight of the Circuit court vacancies may develop in the June, 1963 judicial election.

Also, it was pointed out, there will be available 12 new Appellate court posts and two state Supreme court judgeships in Cook county later if voters approve the judicial reform proposal in the fall election.

Several ward and township committee men angrily left the meeting hall prior to confirmation of the ticket. The usual roll call was not taken by Matt Bieszczat, secretary of the committee."

The Chicago Daily News wrote on October 6th:

"Five Republican candidates for Municipal Court Judge in the Nov. 6 election were listed as "not qualified" Saturday by Chicago Bar Assn. screening officials.

Four others were given a "no finding" rating.

On the Democratic side, three of 17 candidates for Superior Court judgeships were given "no finding" labels.

"No Finding," according to bar officials, means the candidate falls short of being qualified but is not so lacking as to be considered "not qualified." The ratings were made known when the association sent ballots to lawyers asking them to rate the candidates and providing the screening report as a guide.

All other judge candidates were rated as "qualified" in the screening report."

The Chicago Daily Defender editorialized in its October 8th edition:

"THE JUDICIAL TICKET - In a remarkably well-documented article, the Cook County Bar Association pointed out to Democratic and Republican leaders alike, the scandalous disparity in the apportionment of judgeships where Negroes are concerned.

The inequitable representation of Negroes on the various courts of Chicago and Cook County has taken on the aspect of a permanent feature of our local judiciary. Every time a sitting judge retires or dies, his nationality group wastes no time to claim the position. The perpetuation of so indefensible a practice makes it virtually impossible for Negroes to get on the bench.

Seventeen new Superior judgeships were created by last session of the General Assembly and these judges are to be elected in November. Here was an opportunity for Negro lawyers to get equitable recognition. Certainly since the Negro represents 25% of the Chicago population, he should have that percentage of the judgeships.

This consideration is the more compelling since this racial minority is depressingly under-represented on the local bench. At least five Negro lawyers should have been slated. The Democratic Party chieftains should not have to be reminded of their debts to the Negro constituency.

It was the Negro vote that put Mayor Richard Daley in office. And again it was the Negro vote that carried Illinois for Kennedy and thus kept the Presidency from going to Richard Nixon. Perhaps the party's memory is inordinately short.

So worried were the Democratic bosses about under-representation of certain ethnic groups that they placed six Republicans on the Democratic ticket. They are men who had tried in every way to defeat Daley and his party. And we say without fear of honest contradiction that every Republican placed on the Democratic ticket, a qualified, competent Negro lawyer could have been chosen.

After much wrangling and hair-splitting, two Negro lawyers are now on the Democratic judicial ticket. There is considerable doubt on the chances of both of them being elected come November. One is a replacement for a retiring judge, meaning no increase in our judicial representation.

Our political leaders lack courage and independence. They are all vying with one another to prove to Mayor Daley that they are loyal, dependable, trustworthy, and will not rock the boat. "Anything the mayor wants is all right with me," they have been heard to say.

It is a pathetic situation, and that explains convincingly why our political rewards have been so scanty and so few."

New York City with over a million Negro population and with 15 Negro Judges, one Federal Court of Appeals Judge and one Federal Customs Court Judge failed to obtain a Negro Supreme Court Judge according to the following New York Amsterdam account in its September 29th edition entitled, "Who's to Blame in Judgeship Loss?"

"In the political backrooms J. Raymond Jones was blaming Rep. Adam Powell and Powell was blaming Jones and both were blaming Mayor Robert Wagner and Democratic County leader Ed Costikyan for the failure of any Negro lawyer to be included among the five selected for the Supreme Court vacancies at the Manhattan-Bronx Democratic judicial convention last week.

Heaviest blame for the failure to include any Negro lawyer, after one had reportedly been promised to Negro leaders, can be laid at the doorstep of Mayor Wagner, who has yet to appoint or recommend a prominent Negro lawyer for a bench post since his re-election last November. He has had some 18 opportunities to do so, an Amsterdam News study shows.

'This action is a direct slap at the uptown community which is the heart of the voting bloc of the Democratic party in the county. The only way the Mayor can be partially excused would be the immediate appointment of qualified candidates recommended by the uptown leaders to the Mayor,' Powell said. Powell, whose candidate for one of the Supreme Court vacancies was Attorney Jawn Sandifer, said the Mayor had personally promised him earlier this year to appoint a Negro to one of the Special Sessions Court vacancies."

Ebony magazine offers a solution in an editorial, "The Important Black Vote":

"Some 19 million Negroes form better than ten per cent of the population of the United States. The possibility of any one of them being elected president or vice president is laughable. There are no Negro senators. Only four of 437 seats in the House of Representatives are occupied by Negroes. There are no Negro governors, no Negro mayors (except in all-Negro towns) and it is only in the past year that Washington, D.C. (53 per cent Negro in population) got its first Negro commissioner.

A smattering of aldermen and councilmen hold down posts in major cities (Chicago with a 23 per cent Negro population has only six Negro aldermen on its 50 member city council).

There are no Negro sheriffs, only a few Negro police chiefs (none in major cities), no elected district attorneys, secretaries of state, state treasurers, lieutenant governors, etc. There may be a few Negro dog catchers but even this is doubtful.

The Negro, on the whole, must depend upon liberal whites for the initiation and passage of any state or federal legislation to better his cause. These liberal whites are often so busy representing the "liberal whites" that they find themselves "horsetrading" with not-so-liberal whites. The Negro ends up many times being short changed by his friends. It becomes an "I won't vote for Urban Affairs if you promise to vote for lessening of tariffs" kind of thing and the Negro loses out.

The only solution to this dilemma lies in a judicious use of the Negro vote. Every Negro qualified to vote should go to the polls both in the primaries and the general elections. Every Negro not given the right to vote should fight to attain this right supposedly guaranteed to all citizens under the Constitution.

North, South, East and West — the Negro should make a concentrated effort to register all eligible voters and should follow it up with an effective push to actually get them to the polls. It is time for the important black vote to really assert itself.

Getting the Negro vote to the polls is only the first half of the solution. The dilemma will be solved only if these Negro votes are cast for the man, whether he be white or Negro, who will represent the Negro."

Edward B. Toles, Esq.
President, The Cook County Bar Association
100 North LaSalle Street
Suite 715
Chicago 2, Illinois

Dear Mr. Toles:

You will find enclosed a copy of the resolutions relating to the late Judge Irvin C. Mollison, adopted by the Judges of this Court at the Regular Court Meeting of May 28, 1962.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Webster J. Oliver
Chief Judge

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE UNITED STATES CUSTOMS COURT UPON THE DEATH OF IRVIN CHARLES MOLLISON, JUDGE, UNITED STATES CUSTOMS COURT

WHEREAS, On May 5, 1962, the members of the United States Customs Court learned, with profound sorrow, of the sudden passing of their associate, Judge Irvin Charles Mollison, and

WHEREAS, The life and works of Judge Mollison were notable products of the democratic ideals of our country which he so constantly and successfully strove not only to maintain but also to advance, and

WHEREAS, Irvin Charles Mollison was born in Vicksburg, Mississippi, on December 24, 1898, the son of Willie Elbert Mollison and Ida Welbourne Mollison, was educated locally and at Tougaloo Academy, at Oberlin College, and at the University of Chicago, whence he was graduated, with honors, in 1920 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, and in 1923 with the degree of Juris Doctor, and

WHEREAS, From the time of his admission to the Illinois Bar in 1923 until 1945 he practiced law in the City of Chicago, including in a vigorous and fruitful career advocacy in numerous cases involving civil rights and liberties, and

WHEREAS, At the same time he devoted himself unselfishly to public service, as a member of the Board of Directors of the Chicago Public Library, the Board of Education of the City of Chicago, and the Board of Trustees of Provident Hospital and Training School, Chicago, and

WHEREAS, Our late Associate was honored by election to learned societies, including Phi Beta Kappa, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and was admitted to membership in many scholarly and professional societies, including the American Political Science Association, the American Society of International Law, and the American Judicature Society, as well as local, state, and national bar associations, and

WHEREAS, He was especially honored by many civic and professional groups, including the New York Public Library, the National Bar Association, and the Cook County Bar Association, for his work in humanitarian and legal fields, and

WHEREAS, From the time he was appointed a Judge of the United States Customs Court on November 3, 1945, by President Harry S. Truman, until his untimely death, his associates came to respect him for his strong, keenly analytical mind, his clarity of expression, and his legal knowledge, as well as his integrity, dignity, and friendly attributes, and

WHEREAS, During his service as a member of the Court he unstintingly devoted himself to the administrative, as well as the judicial, work of the Court, notable examples of his industry in this regard being improvement of the Court Library, the revision of the Rules of the Court, and the successful compilation and publication of the Customs Law Digest,

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, That the Chief Judge and the Associate Judges of the United States Customs Court do hereby record their high appreciation of the life and character of Irvin Charles Mollison, of the respect and esteem in which he was held, and of the loss which the Court, the Bar, and customs jurisprudence have suffered by his death, and they do hereby express their deep sympathy to his devoted and loyal wife and family upon his passing.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That these resolutions be placed in the minutes of the meeting of the Judges of the United States Customs Court, and that the same be published, and copies sent to the members of his family.

UNITED STATES CUSTOM COURT

Present at the memorial ceremonies and expressing short eulogies were Chief Judge Webster J. Oliver and Customs Court Judges David J Wilson, Jed Johnson, Mary H. Donlon, and Scovel Richardson; Department of Justice Attorney William H. Orrick, Jr. and the President of the Harlem Lawyers Association, Andrew H. Tyler. U.S. Customs Court Clerk Elmer Carey mailed the bound printed copy of the Memorial Ceremonies to CCBA President Toles.

NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION CONVENTION held its 37th annual meeting in Indianapolis, Indiana at the Claypool Hotel, August 29th through September 1st. All officers were reelected including the following new officers: Attorneys Leona Pouncy Thurmon, General Secretary, Kansas City, Mo.; Claudia Shropshire, Assistant Secretary, Detroit, Mich.; Billy Jones, East St. Louis, Ill.; and Edward B. Toles, Chicago, Ill., as members of the Executive Board. Founder C. Francis Stradford was elected President Emeritus. Over 400 lawyers heard Federal District Court Judge James B. Parsons speak at the Judges luncheon; he was introduced by President Toles. Past President of the American Bar Association Charles S. Rhyne addressed the Annual Banquet and was presented along with Vice President Theodore F. Crawley, the C. Francis Stradford Awards by Past President Elmer Jackson for Meritorious Services.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy sent the following telegram to President Toles which was received with tremendous ovation at the banquet: "I am happy to send greetings to the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the National Bar Association. The members of your organization have been a credit to the private practice of Law. They have benefited all our citizens by their advocacy in the cause of social justice, and are now serving the Nation well in many important posts in Government. My best wishes for a productive and pleasant meeting."

J. M. Udochi, Ambassador from Nigeria, United Nations Counsel Mrs. Carmel Carrington Marr, Dean Spottswood Robinson and W. Robert Ming were prominent speakers.

Judges Juanita Kidd Stout, Philadelphia; Roger Yancey, Newark, N.J.; U. S. Judge Wade McCree, Detroit; Thomas Dickens, New York; Mercer Mance, Indianapolis; Robert V. Franklin, Toledo; and Elving Davenport, Detroit attended.

The 38th Annual meeting will convene in Chicago, Illinois August 7th through August 10th at the Sherman House. The American Bar Association meets in Chicago the following week, August 12th through August 17th, and the American Negro Emancipation Centennial Exposition will open at McCormick Place August 16th through September 2nd.

On September 10, DeLong Harris, Washington, D.C., Chairman of the Resolutions Committee of NBA read an association resolution drafted by President Toles to Attorney General Kennedy in his Washington Department of Justice Office citing NBA gratitude for the Administration appointments of various highly qualified individuals to the Judiciary and in the Justice Department based on merit and without regard to creed or color.

The Attorney General was named on October 13 winner of the American Jewish Congress 1962 Stephen S. Wise Award "for advancing human freedom" and will receive the award at a dinner in New York on October 28.

In reply to Cook County Bar Association's letter of appreciation for five judicial appointments to Negro Judges and one re-appointment to the District of Columbia Municipal Court; and for his determined and unprecedented action in the University of Mississippi case, the Attorney General wrote the following on October 4th: "Dear Mr. Toles, Many thanks for your letter of the twenty-ninth. It was nice of you to write and I greatly appreciate your kind remarks about the appointment of Federal Judges and the action taken at the University of Mississippi." Sincerely, Robert F. Kennedy.

PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY APPOINTED FIRST NEGRO LAWYER MEMBER OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION. He is A. Leon Higginbotham, a Philadelphia lawyer, member of the Pennsylvania Fair Employment Commission and President of the Philadelphia branch NAACP since 1959. The first Negro to serve on a federal regulatory agency is 34 and succeeds William C. Kern, a Democrat, for a term of seven years to the $20,000 a year job. He was admitted to the Pennsylvania Bar in 1953 and was formerly an assistant district attorney for Philadelphia County. The NBA adopted resolutions at an Indianapolis Regional Meeting and at Los Angeles' 36th Annual meeting drafted by NBA members George Crockett, Edward B. Toles and Myles C. Stevens asking the President to appoint qualified Negro lawyers to each of the Federal Regulatory agencies.

APPOINTMENT OF A NEGRO LAWYER TO THE U. S. INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION was urged by the NBA Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the President of CCBA in a three page memorandum on November 18th, 1961 to President Kennedy and Attorney General Kennedy. The memorandum noted the NBA resolution and the comprehensive regulations adopted by the Interstate Commission at the request of Attorney General Kennedy on September 22, 1961 which barred segregation in waiting rooms, rest rooms and other terminal facilities as well as on buses and trains. The memorandum citing cases pointed out that "recent incidents and arrests in Southern States from Negro Interstate passengers attempts to use previously white terminal facilities offer compelling reasons why Negro lawyer members of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be appointed."

The following acknowledgements were received: November 27, 1961. Dear Mr. Toles: Thank you for your letter and the attached memorandum regarding the naming of a Negro lawyer to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I appreciate this and also your thoughtful comments regarding my remarks at the Chicago White House Regional Conference. It was good to hear from you, Sincerely, Robert F. Kennedy.

November 28th, 1961. Dear Mr. Toles: Thank you for your letter of November 18, 1961, with enclosures on behalf of the Cook County Bar Association, Inc., urging the appointment of a Negro lawyer to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Since this is a Presidential appointment, we have forwarded your memorandum to the White House. I greatly appreciate your calling this matter to my attention. Sincerely, Byron R. White, Deputy Attorney General

November 24, 1961. Dear Mr. Toles: Thank you very much for your letter of November eighteenth and the enclosed material relative to the appointment of a Negro lawyer to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This information has been made available to the proper persons in the Administration. Sincerely, John Seigenthaler, Administrative Assistant to the Attorney General.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES on Monday October 8, 1962 took the following actions:

Summarily affirmed lower court decisions upholding the validity of a 1961 Interstate Commerce Commission order prohibiting segregation on interstate buses and in all terminals used by them. Georgia v U. S. and Lassiter v U. S.

Agreed to review a Colorado Supreme Court decision that a State fair employment practice law could not be applied to make Continental Air Lines hire a Negro pilot because such application would conflict with the commerce clause of the Constitution. Colorado Antidis crimination Commission v Continental; Green v Continental.

Agreed to pass on the constitutionality of a provision in the Knoxville (Tenn.) desegregation plan allowing any child placed in a school predominately of the other race to transfer out. Goss v Knoxville School Board.

Refused to review a Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals decision validating a county school bond issue despite Negro complaints that building a school addition in a Negro residential area would perpetuate segregation. Alexander v Arlington County Board.

Refused to review the Fifth Circuit decision ordering admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi. Fair v Meredith.

NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND needs contributions to prosecute discrimination. It has had more cases in the Supreme Court in the 1961-1962 term than any other institution except the Federal Government. The Fund, unlike the NAACP, was established in 1940, does no lobbying for or against legislation and can therefore be tax exempt. Of the 29 cases last term, 13 arose from the student sit-in campaigns challenging lunch counter segregation. It has some 102 cases pending around the country including sit-in and Freedom Rider cases with more than 3,000 defendants. Just six lawyers make up the fund's legal staff and eighty lawyers throughout the country do part-time work. With only a few Negro lawyers in the Deep South accepting cases of Negroes and whites who challenge segregation laws and white lawyers refusing to risk their social and economic positions locally by accepting these cases, this situation is going to make civil rights progress slower unless the Department of Justice elects to handle these cases itself. The Department has done a wonderful job intervening in cases like Fair v Meredith and initiating voter actions in Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama.

FEDERAL REFEREE IN BANKRUPTCY ELMER P. SCHAEFER, brother of Illinois Supreme Court Justice Walter V. Schaefer, was sworn in July 2. He is the former chief counsel for the Federal National Mortgage Association. CCBA hopes for the appointment of the next Referee in bankruptcy from Negro lawyers. There are two Negro referees in bankruptcy in the entire U.S.; one in Detroit and one in New York City.

COOK COUNTY BAR ENDORSES THE JUDICIAL ARTICLE. At its October 12th meeting, the Association reaffirmed its action taken initially on March 23rd when Hon. Owen Rall (Past President, Illinois Bar Association) addressed a full membership meeting. Literature, buttons and streamers were supplied to members and volunteers for speaking engagements at churches and forums are asked to contact Chairman George Leighton, 123 West Madison, FR 2-1106 for engagements. Chairman James Rutherford, former Vice President of Prudential Life Insurance Co. and Past President of Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, supplied all of the Blue Ballot advertisements and more can be had for the asking. This amendment must pass on November 6. Our resolution follows:

WHEREAS, the proposed Judicial Article would modernize our court system and its operation by simplifying and unifying its structure, by providing for business-like administration of all courts, by assuring reductions in costs and delays of litigation, and by guaranteeing greater independence of the Judiciary;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the Cook County Bar Association that it endorses the Judicial Article and undertakes to promote its adoption by the voters of Illinois on November 6, 1962; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that each member of this Association is urged actively to support the adoption of the Amendment; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that in implementation of the purpose of these resolutions the President appoint a special committee to cooperate with the Joint Committee on the Judicial Article and with citizens' groups seeking the adoption of the Amendment.

Cook County Bar members George Leighton, Chairman and Edward B. Toles, Cook County Physicians Association President Dr. J. Williams, NAACP Secretary Carl Fuqua, Committee of One Hundred Chairman Ernest Rather and representatives of the Chicago Urban League met at a luncheon in the Chicago Bar Association with President Walter Moses, Past President E. Douglas Schwantes, and Chairman James Rutherford. All organizations went on record as endorsing the Amendment and pledging to work for its passage. CCBA welcomes the prospect of securing one of the three Supreme Court Judges and Judges on the 12 Judge Appellate court provided by the Amendment. THIS AMENDMENT MUST PASS AND LET'S SEE THAT IT DOES. VOTE X FOR PASSAGE!

CHICAGO BAR ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT WALTER MOSES APPOINTS TO COMMITTEE ON CANDIDATES George Leighton and Edward B. Toles. Leighton is a former member of the Chicago Bar Association of Managers, Commissioner of the Supreme Court and former Librarian. Toles is at present also on the Judiciary Committee. Jewel Rogers LaFontant was elected to the Board of Managers. Archibald Carey is on the Committee on Inquiry and William Peterson is on the Committee on Domestic Relations. Other CCBA members serve on other committees.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY SIGNED THE SMATHERS-KEOGH BILL which permits income tax deductions by Lawyers and self-employed persons who establish private retirement funds. But CCBA lawyers whose funds may not afford this plan may find considerable interest and value in the announcement of the AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION ENDOWMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM available to member lawyers throughout the nation. Because of its reasonable cost and opportunity for members who will be joining in order to participate in the ABA convention next August here in Chicago, here is an opportunity and CCBA NEWS publishes elsewhere in this issue the two plans for Lawyers. It is important that CCBA members who are interested in the continued advance of the Negro lawyer for Judgeships and administrative positions to join not only CCBA and NBA but the Chicago Bar Association, American Bar Association and the American Judicature Society (all of whom incidentally have some form of group life and disability plans).

CCBA PLANS AN ANNUAL SCHOLARSHIP FUND BALL. In order to provide a scholarship program for deserving high school and college students in the Chicago area or in Mississippi; a joint venture is being undertaken with the CCBA Women's Auxiliary to begin plans. Mrs. Brunetta Peterson, President of the Auxiliary will appoint a committee to work with CCBA.

THE BEVERLY HILLS (CALIF.) BAR ASSOCIATION with 893 members recently welcomed the first student to be sponsored under its African Scholarship Program. He is Mosurudeen Adebayo Kuku of Nigeria. Kuku, 29, who earned his LL.B. at University College of London, is an advocate and solicitor of the Supreme Court of Nigeria and a member of the International Commission of Jurists. He will attend the University of California at Los Angeles under a one-year program leading to a degree of Master of Comparative Law. Read the excellent article in the October issue of ABA Journal by U. S. Supreme Court Judge William O. Douglas on lawyers needed in Africa.

CCBA SUGGESTS NAMING OF SCHOOLS HONORING DISTINGUISHED NEGRO JUDGES AND LAWYERS. In reply to CCBA letters, General Superintendent of Schools Benjamin C. Willis wrote on July 30, 1962: Dear Mr. Toles: Thank you for your letter of July 27 and the clipping regarding the naming of Chicago public schools in the Sixth Ward in honor of distinguished deceased Negro judges and lawyers. I have noted the names suggested—Judge Wendell E. Green and Judge Irvin C. Mollison. These suggestions have been transmitted to the staff committee working on the selection of school names. We are most appreciative of your interest in our schools. Sincerely, Benjamin Willis.

(Editor's Note: There are only 10 schools named after Negroes out of 500 Chicago schools and none after a Negro lawyer.)

JUDICIAL AMENDMENT

"A lawyer without history or literature is a mechanic, a mere working mason; if he possesses some knowledge of these he may venture to call himself an architect." Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832)

DISTINGUISHED NEGRO GEORGIANS by Cornelius V. Troup, Royal Publishing Co., Dallas, Texas 203 pp – 1962 – 3.50

A collection of short biographical sketches of more than one hundred living outstanding Negro Georgians who have achieved an unusual degree of success in some field of endeavor. The author, a native of Brunswick, Georgia, earned his Doctorate at Ohio State and is president of Fort Valley State College (Ga.). Among many accomplished persons listed are Dr. Martin Luther King, Opera Singers Roland Hayes and Mattiwilda Dobbs, Insurance Executives T. K. Gibson, Sr., George A. Beavers, Jr., Dr. Haley Bell, and Norris Herndon; Publisher John H. Sengstacke, College Presidents James Nabrit, Samuel Nabrit, and Benner C. Turner; Business and Civic Executives, Ralph Metcalfe, Jackie Robinson and Booker T. McGraw. Cook County Bar Lawyers included are Congressman William L. Dawson, Sanitary District Trustee C. C. Wimbish, Judge Sidney A. Jones, Jr., William Henry Huff, Harry H. C. Gibson, James G. Lemon, Jr., and Edward B. Toles.

A CENTURY OF CIVIL RIGHTS by Milton R. Konvitz, New York; Columbia Univ. Press, 293 pp – 1961 – 6.00

A thorough and analytical research of the judicial and legislative foundations of the law of civil rights including recent national legislation and the legal aspects of segregation in schools and public conveyances and other public facilities. The author, an authority and writer on civil rights, professor of law at Cornell, examines the nature of slavery in the South and compares it with slavery in other parts of the world. He states on page 8: "As a result of war or as a consequence of extreme poverty anyone might become a slave. The Israelites in the Promised land did not consider it a badge of shame that their forefathers had been slaves unto Pharoah in Egypt..... The experience of slavery in the ancient world was so common that Plato ventured to suggest that every man has many slaves among his ancestors. The poet Terence and the father of Horace was a slave. It has been pointed out that the very word "slave" is but Slav....." On page 42 appears an historical error when the author states: "Northern Democrats having voted against Lincoln for the Presidency were not ready to accept the idea that the war was being fought to free the slaves. Thus, seven days after the issuance of the proclamation, the legislature of Lincoln's own loyal free state of Illinois adopted a resolution (Ill. State Leg. Jan. 7, 1863) condemning Lincoln's act "as unwarrantable in military as in civil law" as a "gigantic usurpation at once converting the war, professedly commenced by the administration for the authority of the constitution into the crusade for the sudden unconditional and violent liberation of Negro Slaves." The resolution stated that the freeing of the Negro slaves in the Confederate States, was "a result which would not only be a total subversion of the Federal Union but a revolution in the social organization of the Southern states, the immediate and the remote, the present and far reaching consequences of which cannot be contemplated without the most dismal foreboding of horror and dismay." Alderman Leon DePres of Chicago's fifth ward was amazed and doubted the authenticity of this quotation when we discussed this passage. His research proved that the Illinois legislature voted to table a resolution approving the Emancipation Proclamation and then sent a series of resolutions and amendments to committee including the one above quoted and all resolutions and amendments were not passed but died in Committee according to Ill. House Journal January 8, 1863. DePres received a note of regret from the Author and a letter of thanks from the Chicago Historical Society.

Harry Golden writing in the Saturday Evening Post -August 11-18, 1962 edition on "Let's end the Civil War; Refighting yesterday's battles will never solve today's problems" wrote: "Yet the Civil War Centennial is hardly a promotion dreamed up by flag manufacturers. Nor is the centennial merely a project of the enthusiastic city booster to lure the tourist dollar. No city booster anywhere in the South or in the North has any intention of proposing a celebration of World War I or World War II or the Korean War. We celebrate no other war because essentially we believe those wars are over, their outcomes final, the course of history decided. But there are centennial committees throughout the South which would have us think the Civil War is not done with, that it ought to be refought..... The North "knew in 1862 that it was fighting to preserve the Union and free the slaves. Historians may say that the Confederate States did not war against those objectives, but rather were trying to preserve a way of life. Nevertheless, those were the objectives accomplished by the Emancipation Proclamation and the surrender at Appomattox .....The time has come to end the Civil War because we are one country with one economy. We cannot take time out from industrial and urban problems of unemployment, housing, schooling, and civil rights to indulge ourselves in silly excess, celebrating a time that no longer is—and never was. The truth is that, at best the rather expensive centennial provides but a minor amusement for the people who are paying off mortgages and putting by the money to send a son to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill or a daughter to the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor."

GOMILLION v LIGHTFOOT by Bernard Taper, McGraw Hill, 118 pp — 1962 — 3.75

Here is a volume that all CCBA lawyers should read and own for it is a very factual account unfolded

Standing (l.-r.) – Charles F. Lane, Past President and Director; Russell R. DeBow, Third Vice President; Charles Durham, Glenn T. Johnson, Directors; James A. Mclendon, Past President; Levi H. Morris, Financial Secretary; and Theries C. Lindsey, General Secretary.

step by step of the oral argument before the U. S. Supreme Court attacking the denial of Negro voting rights by the gerrymandering of Tuskegee, Alabama boundaries. The Negro Attorneys were NAACP general counsel Robert Carter and Fred D. Gray of Montgomery, Alabama (the latter Alabama Negro lawyer in his first appearance before the Supreme Court). With rare talent and insight the author explores the character of the Justices—especially Justice Felix Frankfurter. Particularly interesting was how Robert Carter explained to the Court the Illinois decision of Colegrove v Green where the Supreme Court flatly declined to consider inequities of Illinois Congressional boundaries. The Court's ruling that an inquiry would place the court into a "political thicket" had to be distinguished to gain the court's ultimate decision that Professor Gomillion was entitled to a hearing in the federal district court on his claim of disenfranchisement. Later the federal district court in Alabama voided the city's boundaries. The argument of these Negro attorneys seemed insignificant on the afternoon of October 8, 1960 but it was the forerunner of one of the most famous decisions of the court—Baker v Carr, the Tennessee apportionment case. In this ruling the court on March 26, 1962 for the second time opened to the scrutiny of Judges the decisive issues of fairness in legislative districts. And at this writing the effects are sounding a telling blow to vote discrimination in the South, for on October 16, 1962, LeRoy Johnson, a Negro attorney in Atlanta, Georgia led a four man race for a seat in the Georgia Senate. Because of the recent reapportionment of the state legislature on the population basis Johnson polled 14,306 votes to 8,657 for his white opponent and two other badly beaten white candidates. He faces a runoff or a court hearing, and if he wins he will face another Negro opponent, T.M. Alexander, a Republican on November 6. When the New Yorker magazine published a two part account of this book in its June 10 and June 17, 1961 issues, it was my first time to read a major publication's account about Negro lawyers except for Katherine T. Kinkead's article, "It doesn't seem quick to me," which appeared in the April 15, 1961 New Yorker. This was a revealing account of a Negro attorney, Floyd B. McKissack, in Greensboro, North Carolina and the sit-in crusade. To be sure there are other articles on the Negro but not Negro lawyers and I remember well my former war correspondent associate's stories like Rebecca West's "Opera in Greenville" about a Negro lynching trial (June 14, 1947) of thirteen white taxi drivers in Greenville, South Carolina or Janet Flanner (Genet) in her "Letter from Paris" on the election of the Negro President of the French Senate (Gaston Monnerville of French Guiana, now in his 17th two-year term) or Joe Liebling's accounts of Negro sports champions and pugilists. Gomillion v Lightfoot must be read to be appreciated.

THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT, 1960, by Theodore H. White - Atheneum Publishers, New York — 400 pp — 6.95

If you haven't read this excellent story of a Presidential campaign, you'd better catch it now running serially in Chicago's American at this writing (October 15) or pick up a paperback for there are some illuminating pages on the rise of the Negro from Southern submergence to a pivotal role in Northern cities. The initial meeting of 16 key persons planning the nomination of President Kennedy on Wednesday, October 29, 1959 had a Negro representative. On page 49 the author states: "The others in the room that Wednesday morning were all of them in one degree or another helpers and useful.....Mrs. Marjorie Lawson, an attractive Negro attorney from the District of Columbia." Most important, however, is the author's treatment of the power of the Negro Vote. On pages 229 through 237 these excerpts appear: "Negroes vote in the North. And they vote predominately in the big-city states which carry the largest blocs of electoral votes in the nation. Among them Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, and Michigan measure out to 132 electoral votes—or almost exactly half the number needed to elect the President. In these states the queen city of each state harbors a Negro vote that may mean the difference between success or failure in a close election...But when in 1948 Harry Truman squeezed ahead of Thomas E. Dewey by 33,-612 votes in Illinois, by 17,865 votes in California, by 7,107 in Ohio, no practicing politician could remain ignorant of how critical was the Negro vote in the Northern big city in a close election." (The Chicago Tribune wrote on October 21, 1962 that when Mr. Kennedy stepped next door in McCormick Place on October 19, 1962 and gazed fondly on 5,000 Democratic precinct captains. He said, "I just wanted to see who did it in 1960." (The state was counted for him by 8,858 votes out of 4,845,319.)

ONE MAN'S FREEDOM by Edward Bennett Williams — Atheneum — 344 pp — 1962 — 5.95

When celebrated defense attorney Edward Bennett Williams gave the principal address at our National Bar Association's 33rd annual convention banquet at Chicago's Sherman House in August, 1958, some 800 lawyers hung on his every word. For he is a master orator and his civil rights speech was clearly good as is this very informative volume. His spectacular career of defending some of the most violently unpopular public figures has been controversial but he has written an interesting and eloquent account of never ceasing perpetual struggle through law and deals with some of the leading problems of civil rights, censorship, the scope and conduct of congressional committees and equality preserved by the 14th Amendment. But his account of the bribery trial of James Hoffa has to be compared with other versions and a tongue-in-cheek appraisal given when he relates on pages 220—221: "One afternoon as I returned to court after lunch I was introduced to a woman lawyer from the west coast. She was a Negro. As I stood chatting with her for a moment, a photographer called to us to look his way and snapped our picture. The incident meant absolutely nothing to me at the time. A few days later I was horrified to see the picture in a full-page advertisement in the Afro-American, a paper having large circulation among the Negroes of Washington. The advertisement recounted in detail Hoffa's long record of friendship for the Negro people and their causes. The jury trying Hoffa was predominately Negro. Obviously, the advertisement had been placed in an effort to influence the jury in Hoffa's favor.

"This was the darkest day of my professional life .....I can honestly say that I satisfied myself that no one directly or indirectly connected with the defense staff knew anything about the appearance of the ad." And about the appearance of Joe Louis at the trial, he states: "This one I knew about...I met with Joe Louis, who had come all the way from Detroit, and explained to him that we were not going to use him and that he was free to go back to Detroit. This took place at a luncheon recess. That afternoon I was genuinely surprised to see him sitting in the back of the courtroom. He had come to court wholly on his own, insofar as I knew then or have ever found out since. I very much doubt whether any juror ever saw him in that packed courtroom..."

"...and when the ballots were tallied by the foreman, the vote was 12 to 0 for acquittal. Negro and white voted alike." The other versions are in the reviews which immediately follow.

THE ENEMY WITHIN by Robert F. Kennedy — Harper & Brothers — 320 pp — 1960 — 3.95

This best-seller written prior to appointment as the Attorney General of the United States by Mr. Kennedy is a report on the work of the Select Committee on Improper activities in the Labor or Management Field, highlighting some of the typical problems and abuses that were discovered. It is based on the record of the investigations conducted by the committee's professional staff of which Mr. Kennedy was Counsel, the sworn testimony taken before the committee and the official reports of the committee to the United States Senate. The book is to be made into a forthcoming movie. The following account appears about the Hoffa trial on pages 62—63: "Under our system of laws, if a jury of twelve good men and true finds a defendant not guilty, he is cleared of the alleged crime against him. He cannot be tried for it again. As a citizen or a lawyer, I accept this, even when I have a personal knowledge of the case and feel strongly about the outcome. That's our system and I wouldn't change it.

"So much has been written and said about this case that most people are aware that the jury consisted of eight Negroes and four whites, that the Teamsters paid the expenses of Joe Louis to come from Detroit to Washington and appear in the courtroom for two days, and that he publicly embraced Mr. Hoffa. It has been overlooked, however, that the judge, in a conference at the bench, took judicial notice of the make-up of the jury, pointing out that while the Government attorneys had selected jurors without discrimination as to race, Mr. Williams, Hoffa's attorney, had used his challenges against white jurors only. This circumstance, taken with the presence of Joe Louis and other events that transpired during the trial, shows a definite effort to influence the judge and jury in other ways than through accepted legal channels. Martha Jefferson, a Negro woman attorney, was brought from California to be at the trial and another reputable Negro lawyer was employed for the same purpose. The law partner of the judge's brother was brought from Arkansas. Ed Williams, one of the nation's top criminal attorneys, hardly needed this legal assistance. And in the midst of the trial Williams posed with Mrs. Jefferson for a picture that appeared in a full-page ad in the Afro-American, a Negro newspaper. The ad praised Jimmy Hoffa as a friend of the Negro race. (Later our Committee heard testimony clearly indicating that Hoffa and his own Local 299 in Detroit discriminated against Negroes.) When it was reported in the press that the ad had been delivered to the doorstep of every juror, that was enough for Judge Burnita Matthews. She locked up the jury to prevent further improper influences. Then, while cross-examining Cheasty, Williams tried to establish that he had once investigated the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. By the time the Government attorneys objected, the jury had heard Williams and it was too late. Cheasty testified that it was completely untrue."

ROBERT F. KENNEDY: THE BROTHER WITHIN
by Robert E. Thompson and Hortense Myers —
The Macmillan Company - 224 pp — 1962 — 4.95

This is the biography of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy (with an introduction by U. S. Supreme Court Judge William O. Douglas), an intimate close-up of the man who is "second only to the President as the most powerful figure in the U.S. Government, the President's closest counselor" and above all, one of the greatest friends of the Negro lawyer and twenty million Negro Americans in history. The authors, Robert Thompson (formerly White House correspondent of the New York Daily News) and Hortense Myers (a correspondent for United Press International), trace the life of the President's brother from his childhood to his present position. His early spiritual training left an especial imprint and he believes his opposition toward religious and racial discrimination has its roots in "my upbringing in religion." "The elder Kennedys never attempted to segregate their children from other youngsters for reasons of racial, religious or financial background. In fact, among the eight or ten regular playmates Bobby had at Hyannisport when he was small were two Negro boys, sons of a laundress who lived about three blocks from the Kennedy house." Of the Hoffa trial the authors said at page 42: "Eight of the twelve jurors were Negroes and Williams attempted in every conceivable manner to influence them from a racial as well as a legal point of view. He brought two Negro attorneys in to aid him, ran former Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis into the courtroom to embrace Hoffa..." Of his first acts in the Department of Justice is this passage on page 54: "Kennedy also despises hypocrisy. Shortly after he became Attorney General, he discovered there were only ten Negroes among the 950 lawyers employed by the Department of Justice. He immediately summoned Charles Smith, a Negro lawyer from Seattle, to work in the Department and began adding other Negroes to the staff. To his assistant, John Seigenthaler, he explained: 'How can we go into the field and tell people to put Negroes in school and let Negroes ride buses if we don't have Negroes in here?' Likewise, in September 1961, the President's brother resigned his membership in Washington's Metropolitan Club because that exclusive organization refused to have Negroes as members or guests. Many other vignettes of the Attorney General's interesting and intensely competitive life are revealed but prominently displayed are his strong stands for civil rights. From his great Law Day speech at the University of Georgia, May 6, 1961, his decisive action in defense of Freedom Riders and the dispatch of Federal Marshals to Montgomery, Alabama including the Deputy Attorney General Byron R. White (now Justice White) and his administrative assistant, John Seigenthaler (who was felled unconscious by the mob), protection of bus riders and Martin Luther King to the intervention in the Prince Edward County, Va. school discrimination closing, his role in history has been made. The Attorney General's action in the University of Mississippi case with James Meredith at Oxford, Mississippi and the dispatch of 23,500 U.S. troops to maintain order in compliance with orders of Federal courts in September, 1962, occurred after publication of this book but no one will forget those memorable prophetic words delivered in Georgia on Law Day, 1961: "And we know that if one man's rights are denied, the rights of all are endangered. In our country the courts have a most important role in safeguarding these rights. The decisions, however much we may disagree with them, in the final analysis must be followed and respected. If we disagree with a court decision and, thereafter, irresponsibly assail the court and defy its rulings, we challenge the foundations of our society."

NEGRO LAWYERS IN ELECTION RACES ELSEWHERE IN U. S. will present the Nation with the first Negro State Senator since Reconstruction and the first Negro Congressman from California's new 21st in central Los Angeles with 80 per cent in both Negro population and Democratic registration (and both Candidates are Negroes). Augustus Hawkins, veteran 28 year State Assemblyman, and Herman Smith, Republican lawyer, are opponents. In New York, former Judge Edward R. Dudley (now President of Manhattan Bourough) became the first Negro chosen for an important state office by a major political party. He is running for the office of State Attorney General on the ticket with famed lawyer James B. Donovan for U. S. Senate who was honored by the Decalogue Society on Law Day here in Chicago and the plaque tendered him bears, with other participating bar associations, the inscribed names of CCBA. In Massachusetts, lawyer Edward R. Brooke is running for the Office of Secretary of State.

AFRICAN ART EXHIBIT IN CHICAGO NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM is being shown through December 9. Seven years before Columbus found America in 1492, Portugese explorers on the west coast of Africa discovered the Kingdom of Benin in what is now western Nigeria. The people of this powerful kingdom were already producing what is now recognized as the most highly developed and sophisticated art of Negro Africa and they continued to do so for another 400 years.

EBONY MAGAZINE AND THE CHICAGO DEFENDER are congratulated on their excellent articles on Negro Judges. Ebony, in its July issue, displayed the pictures of 69 Negro Judges along with an excellent article while the Chicago Defender for almost a half century has championed the campaign for more Negro Judges with editorials and news articles. Last October 17th in an editorial, it said: "Our representation on the bench has been too skimpy. We need more Negro Judges; we are entitled to more. The November 6 election presents an opportunity for Negro voters to exercise their best judgment and make profitable use of their ballot... These are our choices: Democratic candidate for Municipal Judge: Mrs. Edith S. Sampson; for superior Court Judge: James D. Crosson; Republican candidates for Municipal Judge: George S. Barnes, James T. Horton, Robert C. Power; Republican candidate for Superior Court Judge: Mrs. Jewel LaFontant; for Probate Court Judge: Archibald J. Carey, Jr.

ABA STANDING COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL JUDICIARY REPORT states that "since President Kennedy assumed office he has nominated 128 persons to the federal bench, 113 of them to lifetime judgeships. There are nineteen vacancies, making a total of 147 vacancies thus far during the Kennedy administration."

PRESIDENT KENNEDY HAS APPOINTED THREE NEGRO FEDERAL JUDGES who have all been confirmed by the Senate, making a total of five lifetime Negro federal judges. The loss of the late Judge Mollison reduced the number of Negro federal judges from six to five. CCBA, at its October 12th monthly meeting, adopted a resolution endorsing President Edward B. Toles to the President for appointment to the Democratic vacancy created by the death of Judge Irvin C. Mollison as U.S. Judge of the Customs Court. The first Vice President of the Chicago Bar Association, Carl McGowan, was nominated by President Kennedy in September for Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia Circuit, where he will sit with another Chicagoan, Judge David L. Bazelon. The District is more than 54 per cent Negro with four Municipal Court Negro Judges but no Negro Judges on the U.S. District Court or the U.S. Court of Appeals have been appointed.

CCBA expresses its undying gratitude to the President and the Attorney General and hopes for additional Negro Judges for the District and the Nation.

CCBA endorses Blue Ballot Judicial Amendment, with George Leighton, Chairman; Owen Rall, Past President Illinois State Bar Association; President Edward B. Toles and Archibald J. Carey, Jr., Republican candidate for Probate Court Judge, at March 23rd meeting at Ted's Diner where Mr. Rall addressed full membership.

Heroes Of Emancipation

SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD

Born into slavery in Maryland in 1817, Ward became a fugitive while still a child, and fled with his parents, first to New Jersey and then to New York. His education was financed by the wealthy Abolitionist, Gerrit Smith. After studying at the Oneida Institute he became an agent of the New York Anti - Slavery Society in 1839. During this same year, he was also licensed to preach by the New York Congregational Association and at one time led a congregation composed entirely of white parishioners. Along with his religious duties, he traveled throughout New York and the other free states lecturing for the Society.

Traveling in England as so many of his compatriots did, he became internationally known. Upon returning from England, he went to Canada where he became an agent for the Canadian Anti - Slavery Society. He actively aided the various Canadian Negro settlements. Such settlements, composed of industrious individuals, proved that the Negro was equal to the white man. Ward finally left Canada and settled in the British West Indies where he remained until his death in 1867.

Slaves Imported

Richard Allen Turned Career, Founded Church

Richard Allen was born a slave in Philadelphia, February 14, 1760. From Philadelphia he was sold to a farmer near Dover, Delaware. Allen early became interested in religion as manifested by the Methodists. As a spiritual leader Allen impressed his master who was converted under the preaching of the slave. This change of heart led Allen's owner to make it possible for him to obtain his freedom. Allen then educated himself by

John Langston Was Congressman From Virginia

John Mercer Langston was born in Louisa County, Virginia December 14, 1829. His father was a white man and his mother a woman of Indian and Negro blood His father by his will sent him to Oberlin College to be educated. There he finished the course in liberal arts and studied theology. He had made an attempt to study law in New York and Ohio, but could not on account of his color. However, he did study for the profession privately and was admitted to the bar in that state. He settled upon a farm in Brownhelf in Lorain County, Ohio. There he practiced law and was also elected to the town clerkship. He moved to Oberlin in 1856 and was elected there also to a town clerkship. Next he became a member of the council, and then of the Board of Education.

Langston participated as an orator in the anti-slavery conflict and helped to recruit soldiers for the Union Army during the Civil War. He joined General O. O. Howard as an Inspector of Freedmen's schools after the close of that struggle. Next Langston was called upon to serve as professor in the Law Department of Howard University. In 1877 President Hayes appointed him as minister to Haiti where he served in this capacity eight years. He resigned in 1885 and returned to his practice of law, but that year he was made president of the Virginia Normal and Collegiate Institute.

While in Virginia he went into politics; and, much to the dissatisfaction of William Mahone, who with the Readjuster Party was in contro lof most of the Negro voters there, Langston made the race for Congress. The seat was contested for a long time, but he was finally seated a few months before the expiration of the term. While in Congress he made one or two speeches mainly along the line of defending the rights of the Negro. Langston served once as the dean of the Law School of Howard University and for a time as vice-president of the institution.

Nannie Burroughs Organized National Training School

Nannie Burroughs was born of John and Jennie (Poindexter) Burroughs, in Orange, Virginia, May 2, 1883. Her grandfather was known as "Lijah, the Slave Carpenter." The Burroughs and Poindexters were farm owners and mechanics. She sprang, then, from that fortunate class of freedmen whose energy and ability enabled them to start becoming economically independent soon after the Civil War.

In this circle Mrs. Burroughs might have remained indefinitely, but her independence and ambition caused her to take her then three-year-old daughter to Washington for its superior educational advantages. The girl's progress in education was impeded for a while, however, when at the age of seven she was stricken with typhoid fever and had to remain out of school two years. For several years thereafter she made two grades annually and recovered the lost ground. While in high school, too, Nannie felt the urge for literary expression and organized the Harriet Beecher Stowe Literary Society. The Variety of her interests is indicated by the inclusion in her training of a business course and special work in domestic science.

Miss Burroughs had the ambition to teach, but was sorely disappointed when she was not appointed to teach domestic science in the District of Columbia. Out of this disappointment was born the idea that some day she would have a school in Washington that would help every girl to have a chance in life. "It came to me like a flash of light," she says, "and I knew I was to do that thing when the time came. But I couldn't do it yet; so I just put the idea away in the back of my head and left it there."

She left Washington to become bookkeeper and associated editor of the Christian Banner of Philadelphia for one year. Years afterwards her employer said of her, "We have never had her equal. She is a dynamo in an office."

Returning to Washington some time later, she took a position as bookkeeper for a manufacturing house. In this as in other positions she served efficiently, for she was interested not only in "making a living but in making a life." Her motto always was, "Do a thing so thoroughly that no one else can improve on it." Such a woman needed a larger opportunity. This came

Charles Johnson, Social Engineer Of Critical Era

Charles Spurgeon Johnson, president of Fisk University 1946-1956, died at Louisville, Ky. October 27, 1956. He was born July 24, 1893 in Bristol, Virginia and his parents were Rev. Charles Henry and Winifred (Branch) Johnson. His father was emancipated by his owner who taught him Latin, Greek, Hebrew, English and American Literature. Young Johnson read many of his father's classical and theological volumes as a part of his cultural and intellectual inheritance the equal of which possibly no colored scholar in America has had. With this background he entered Virginia Union to study there in the institution's palmy days under such great teachers as Joshua Simpson and graduated in the class of 1916. With the outbreak of World War I in 1917, Johnson enlisted and served in France and also completed a second bachelor's degree with some graduate study at the University of Chicago in 1918. With this formal academic study Johnson began an unusually productive career as a social scientist. Some smug and cynical critics often questioned his stature as a scholar because he did not go on to orthodox insignia in higher degrees which are sometimes inconsistently considered the sine qua non of scholarship. Lester F. Ward and Harold Laski did not have more formal study than Johnson had If "By their fruits ye shall know them," Johnson's harvest was abundant in research and writing on the uniquitous and changing problems of interracial relations in America and the world during his times. How solid and lasting his voluminous findings and writings were time alone will tell, but it is already evident that much of his work is enduring.

Johnson married Miss Marie A. Burgette November 6, 1920 and to them were born three sons, Charles, Jeh, and Robert and a daughter, Marie (Mrs. Clifford) who survive. The family life was happy and Mrs. Johnson contributed much in devotion and loyalty

Randolph Is Pioneer In Labor

ASA PHILIP RANDOLPH

LABOR LEADER—A Philip Randolph was born April 15, 1889, in Crescent City, Florida. He moved to New York City at an early age and attended high school and a few years at New York's City College. He received the LL.D. from Howard University in 1941.

Mr. Randolph was elected the first international president of the AFL's Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters in 1925 and has been re-elected continuously ever since.

Mr. Randolph is the father of the Fair Employment Practices Committee concept, and was instrumental in influencing President Roosevelt's executive order in 1941 which banned discrimination in war industries and apprenticeship programs; and President Truman's executive order in 1948 which banned racial segregation from the armed forces. He is one of the nation's most forceful and uncompromising foes of racial segregation and discrimination.

Mr. Randolph was elected Vice-President of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial organizations on December 5, 1955.

Along with his religious duties, he traveled throughout New York and the other free states lecturing for the Society.

Ward was deeply committed to abolitionism and his position as an agent gave him " . . the ever-to-be remembered pleasure of meeting all classes of Abolitionists, profiting by their suggestions, accepting their hospitalities, rejoicing in their sympathies and sharing their devotions". He was convinced that if the principle be admitted that a black man may be legally, righteously enslaved, so may any other man; that slavery was altogether evil regardless of the color of its victims. Ward believed that one of the methods by which slavery could be abolished was through participation in political action. Thus, he joined the Liberty Party and actively supported it. A very popular orator, this "Black Daniel Webster" as he was called by many, was among the most famous of the Negro Abolitionists.

Traveling in England as so many of his compatriots did, he became internationally known. Upon returning from England, he went to Canada where he became an agent for the Canadian Anti - Slavery Society. He actively aided the various Canadian Negro settlements. Slaves Imported From Africa

More than 10,000 Africans a year were being sold to European colonists by the middle of the sixteenth century, and shipped to the West Indies. Portugese ships were the first to engage in the slave traffic, but it was not long before Spanish, French, Dutch and English slavers took it up.

White indentured workers were imported first, but when it was found there were not enough of them, and Indians refused to work, it was found to be cheaper and easier to import black slaves.

Slaves were bought in Africa, and transported in crowded slave ships.

Richard Allen Turned Career, Founded Church

Richard Allen was born a slave in Philadelphia, February 14, 1760. From Philadelphia he was sold to a farmer near Dover, Delaware. Allen early became interested in religion as manifested by the Methodists. As a spiritual leader Allen impressed his master who was converted under the preaching of the slave. This change of heart led Allen's owner to make it possible for him to obtain his freedom. Allen then educated himself by private study while making a living cutting and hauling wood. Next he began to preach and traveled as an itinerant minister through the Middle States with Richard Watcoat and Bishop Asbury.

Allen reached the turning point in his career when he came back to Philadelphia in 1786. There he began to hold meetings among his own people while preaching occasionally at the St. George Methodist Church. At first he thought of opening a special place of worship for his people, but both races objected. His forceful preaching, however, drew so many Negroes to that church that trouble followed. One morning Allen, Absalom Jones, and other co-workers were pulled

IVAN ALLEN, JR.
MAYOR

My dear fellow Atlantians:

One hundred years ago, President Abraham Lincoln set a new standard of liberty, not only for the United States, but for all humanity. . .when he signed the Emancipation Proclamation.

In the century which has followed that mighty and courageous deed, the people of our city, by their words and deeds, have demonstrated time and time again how right Lincoln was in proclaiming to all the world that our Declaration of Independence meant in action what it said in words. . . "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness."

In this past century, the people of our City, many of them set free by the stroke of Lincoln's pen. . .and many of their children and grandchildren. . .have built a great city. We recognize the importance of the material might of our City, but of comparable importance in its advancement is the strength of friendship between our races. . . which has kept pace with the terrific business and industrial progress.

Not by accident, but by the will and thought and action of our people has Atlanta become the world's first city in Negro education and a city which stands as a fortress of friendship and as a tower of amity in the turmoil of transformed times and changing customs.

As we mark the centennial of Lincoln's momentous act, I look forward to even greater achievements in the century to come. . . .with the help of our Creator who endowed all men with the inalienable rights outlined in our Declaration of Independence.

Sincerely,

schools, and of the tests. When he gets to school, learning for him is really "un - learning;" he has to "unlearn" the sub-standard language habits he learned at home (or in the community), and on top of that, "learn" the standard speech the standard words, the standard language. His chance, therefore, is doubly hard.

(Don't you believe this? Don't you have some non - standard language habit you picked up at home — or in the community — never realizing it at the time — that shows up, every now and then, in your speech, or your writing? Example: do you ever use a plural subject, with a singular noun? — Like, "They is?" Well, I do; maybe not exactly one that flat; but I break the same principle in a more refined and educated way. I learned that non-standard form of language when I was a child; to use it now, is almost second-nature, in fact, I do it so often, that I'd better call it, "first nature;" it's part of me.

Was I born that way? No child is born, knowing the language. Illiteracy is not inherited; but its habits, and "non -standard" words, certainly are handed down from generation to generation —through the family.

Why God should coutenance such a fact, I do not know. But still it exists, I think; that the wicked hand of slavery is still laid upon the children of the victims of Slavery;; even down to the third, and fourth, generation. This is not to mention the wretched schools —if, indeed, any schools at all — the parents, and grand-parents, of these descendants of a wicked system, have had.

To face these facts, is to see how very well, indeed Negroes have done for themselves. Slavery was a fiery furnace; Emancipation, to use Langston Hughes' words, "Ain't been no bed of roses." Both have been tough. To get ahead, the Negro had to be tough; he has had to run twice as hard just to get ahead the few steps he has. The big point is, that he has got ahead; and every teacher, and school-child, should remember that this is the way it has to be, if he is to get ahead in the American "standard" culture.

from their knees at prayer and ordered to the gallery. They withdrew in protest and established the independent body known as the Free African Society.

This body first functioned as a social and business organization; but finally there went out of it certain Christians who with Absalom Jones established in Philadelphia the African Protestant Episcopal Church, but the majority of them joined with Allen in founding a Methodist Episcopal Church. This church was dedicated by Bishop Asbury in 1794. Under the stimulus of Allen and other churches of this stamp were established in the Middle States, and by 1816 there were sixteen of them which came together and established the African Methodist Episcopal Church with Richard Allen as the first bishop.

Richard Allen was the type of man for pioneer work. In the first place, he was a hard worker. Then he was a man of great sincerity or purpose, one who never failed to meet his obligations and an administrator of unusual tact. The work of his church expanded slowly into all parts where it was not actually proscribed as it was in Charleston, South Carolina, as a result of the Denmark Vesey Insurrection in 1822. In the eastern and northern states more success was achieved. Allen died March 26, 1831, but five years later the churches of his connection numbered eighty-six, with four conferences, two bishops and twenty-seven ministers working among 7,594 members and with property worth $25,000. Allen himself was thrifty himself and died in good circumstances.

FIRST NEGRO BAPTIST CHURCH, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

Church Role U. S. Advancement Of Negro

By REV. TASCHEREAU ARNOLD

(World Religious Editor)

What would we be without a church? How cold and sorrowful living would be without heavenly influence over the affairs of men in this world! How refreshing it is to one's very soul to rest under the roof of God's House and pour out the burdens of the soul!

What is more refreshing than to come.. of God's church — a place where we can sing and pray together? There one can surely find rest for the soul, especially when burdened down with the weights of this world's sorrow and troubles.

Let us hasten to come to our subject for a little while. You perhaps know more about it from experience than the writer. Well, you just fill in where we fail to cover.

The Church has meant, no doubt, more to the advancement of the Negro race than any other force in our society. Before and since the days of slavery, she has been administering to the ever - pressing needs of our people in every field of endeavor outside of purely spiritual matters.

Financially, socially, educationally and politically the Church has played well her role in the affairs of Negroes in this country. In a strange land not by his own will at all, but by the will of greedy white men, the Negro has known sorrow in every form and has stood it better than the American Indian who almost passed out fighting the whites.

Why was the Negro able to survive when the Indians went down so to speak? Well, he had and believed in the Church of God. Do you as offspring have that faith stitutions, professional men owe much of their early success to the Negro Church, so to speak. It was the Negro preacher who told our people to have faith and cooperate with our businesses and professional men.

Yet, today one might well form the opinion that some of our successful people have forgotten the role the church has played in their success. That's a sad saga. Despite the church's short comings today and yesterday, it has played well its role of comfort and leadership for the race. No leadership in the Negro race controls the thinking of our people like the church. The average, not the classy, Negro believes in his church and mostly his minister. He does this despite t he fact that some Negro leaders in church are disgraceful to God and man. The day is not far distance when a better leadership will grace the church.

It is with a great degree of pride that we write this article upon the request of the Atlanta Daily World It is proper and fitting that the church's contribution to our people's welfare be old and recognized in this speical Emancipation edition, of which we are justly proud.

This paper from its very inception has had an open mind for the church. Well, it started, if my memory serves me well, in the mind of the late founder of this paper, the late W. A. Scott. Shortly after he started the paper he announced that news of the churches would be printed as a public service without charge.

That policy lasted until time and cost, plus other reasons forced a change in this policy slightly to the effect that today this department has grown to such an extent until promotional publicity in the paper carries a nominal charge for the

FINCH WAS FIRST

and deserted cabins, hardly would any story eclipse that of the Rev. William Finch, pioneer Atlanta people spiritually. She does more than bury the dead, visit the sick, marry and teach. The church, in many cases, helps Negroes business wise.

Many in the Negro race would commit suicide if it were not for the great influence of the Church. Many of us are mistreated all during the week by mean bosses and by those for whom we labor, but how refreshing to the soul is the church — a place where we can leave our troubles with the people of God?

Did you ever think about the fact that some of our early graduates of schools would have failed if the church had not urged our people to use them! Yet, some of our professional people have little respect for the church other than to drum up some business or sales for their wares. That's a sad story, but its a story that must be told to make the book complete. Despite its short coming the church today as she was yesterday, is the Negro's greatest institution. It is the one institution that is not subsidized by the white man. That's something to be mighty proud of; to say the least

What would, I say, the Negro be without the Church? Nothing much is the answer we are giving. Maybe you might have another, but that's the way I see it.

And so we bring this brief article to a close. It has been good to converse with you through the press and especially the columns of this paper. We congratulate the Church, Negro and the Atlanta Daily World on this Emancipation observance. Yes, the Negro church has played well her role in the development of the Negro race as always she will for all races.

AME Minister, who joined an AME Church somewhere in Georgia in 1848, the year that the late Bishop Wesley John Gaines was born. While we were unable to get any relationship or connection between the two great men, it is definitely established that both were born in Wilkes county, where Washington, Georgia is the county seat.

William Finch was the first Negro to be elected to the Atlanta city council right after the close of the civil war through which he himself fought. He was the son of slave parents and when he was 12 years of age he went to live with a Judge Andrews of Wilkes County. Here he was fortunate to imbibe the cultural and refinement of the polished Georgia jurist who manifested every interest in him.

Leaving Judge Andrews he was fortunate to land in the care of Georgia's first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the illustrious Judge Joseph Henry Lumpkin, whose daughter, Martha supplied the second Name of Atlanta, Marthasville.

On March 15th, 1868, he was given Deacon's orders to preach by the late Bishop A. W. Wayman; was later given elders orders by the late Bishop T. M. D. Ward.

FOR WHOM SCHOOLS ARE NAMED

It is noteworthy to state for the benefit of the educational side of this state and city, that William Finch was one of the leaders in the fight to secure Negro teachers among his people where white teachers were doing the teaching, if qualified Negroes could be found. It took great courage in those days when there were mixed opinions on both sides, but Finch stood his ground and led that fight for Negro teachers and finally as a member of the city council he won out.

While we were unable to find out which side on which Finch fought in the civil war, we did establish the fact that he was so proud of

Because of his able fight in his primitive day for Negro teachers, youth should know something about the man who stood up for equal job opportunity in anther era.

The teachers should be eternally grateful to one who espoused their cause and his name shoul blaze across the entrance of one of our finest schools.

Let youth get acquainted with the name. Let youth inquire about him, search the records and old scripts and dig up more facts about this pioneer educator and councilman.

He was a tailor by trade and his uniqueness and bent for art naturally would lead him to design the old flag of the Union.

More should be found out about that flag. It should be located and reproduced and brought back to Georgia where History and art are still in the formative state.

Some day he will illustrate one of our great schools.

indeed, any schools at all — the parents, and grand-parents, of these descendants of a wicked system, have had.

To face these facts, is to see how very well, indeed Negroes have done for themselves. Slavery was a fiery furnace; Emancipation, to use Langston Hughes' words, "Ain't been no bed of roses." Both have been tough. To get ahead, the Negro had to be tough; he has had to run twice as hard just to get ahead the few steps he has. The big point is, that he has got ahead; and every teacher, and school-child, should remember that this is the way it has to be, if he is to get ahead in the American "standard" culture.

What would we be without a church? How cold and sorrowful living would be without heavenly influence over the affairs of men in this world! How refreshing it is to one's very soul to rest under the roof of God's House and pour out the burdens of the soul!

What is more refreshing than to come.. of God's church — a place where we can sing and pray together? There one can surely find rest for the soul, especially when burdened down with the weights of this world's sorrow and troubles.

Let us hasten to come to our subject for a little while. You perhaps know more about it from experience than the writer. Well, you just fill in where we fail to cover.

The Church has meant, no doubt, more to the advancement of the Negro race than any other force in our society. Before and since the days of slavery, she has been administering to the ever - pressing needs of our people in every field of endeavor outside of purely spiritual matters.

Financially, socially, educationally and politically the Church has played well her role in the affairs of Negroes in this country. In a strange land not by his own will at all, but by the will of greedy white men, the Negro has known sorrow in every form and has stood it better than the American Indian who almost passed out fighting the whites.

Why was the Negro able to survive when the Indians went down so to speak? Well, he had and believed in the Church of God. Do you as offsprings have that faith in the Almighty as did the forefathers? If you don't, certainly you have lost something that was precious to those who labored long and hard in the days of slavery and after slavery.

Some of our leading business in- role the church has played in their success. That's a sad saga. Despite the church's short comings today and yesterday, it has played well its role of comfort and leadership for the race. No leadership in the Negro race controls the thinking of our people like the church. The average, not the classy, Negro believes in his church and mostly his minister. He does this despite t he fact that some Negro leaders in church are disgraceful to God and man. The day is not far distance when a better leadership will grace the church.

It is with a great degree of pride that we write this article upon the request of the Atlanta Daily World It is proper and fitting that the church's contribution to our people's welfare be old and recognized in this speical Emancipation edition, of which we are justly proud.

This paper from its very inception has had an open mind for the church. Well, it started, if my memory serves me well, in the mind of the late founder of this paper, the late W. A. Scott. Shortly after he started the paper he announced that news of the churches would be printed as a public service without charge.

That policy lasted until time and cost, plus other reasons forced a change in this policy slightly to the effect that today this department has grown to such an extent until promotional publicity in the paper carries a meager charge for the service of spreading good news and glad tidings about the church. Yet, today about a page and a half of church news is printed free gladly by this paper. We do this graciously for we know that church has and is doing a good job for our

Maybe you might have another, but that's the way I see it.

And so we bring this brief article to a close. It has been good to converse with you through the press and especially the columns of this paper. We congratulate the Church, Negro and the Atlanta Daily World on this Emancipation observance. Yes, the Negro church has played well her role in the development of the Negro race as always she will for all races.

It took great courage in those days when there were mixed opinions on both sides, but Finch stood his ground and led that fight for Negro teachers and finally as a member of the city council he won out.

THE FORT VALLEY STATE COLLEGE

FORT VALLEY, GEORGIA

During the 100 years since President Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation, the Negro in America has made remarkable strides. The Fort Valley State College, along with other institutions of higher learning, takes pride in the fact that it has been instrumental in contributing toward the Negro's record of achievement.

PRESIDENT C. V. TROUP

The Fort Valley State College lists among its graduates and former students many who have been and are now in the vanguard of progress. Now in its 68th year, the Fort Valley State College has achieved significant growth and enjoys a position of respect among American colleges and universities.

As American Negroes turn their faces toward the rising sun of a second century of Emancipation, the Fort Valley State College looks forward to the challenging task of providing its share of educated citizens for roles of leadership in what we hope will be a greater century of achievement.

THE HUBBARD EDUCATION BUILDING

The Aftermath Of Slavery

By HORACE MANN BOND
Dean, The School of Education, Atlanta University

After inspecting hundreds of high schools, some of them slum schools in Northern cities enrolling almost altogether a Negro student body, James B. Conant, former President of Harvard Univeristy, had this to say about the horrible conditions he saw in the schools, and in the communities:

"As I read the history of the United States, this republic was born with a congenital defect — Negro slavery .... We make a great mistake, I believe, if we fail to recognize the rough and weary road we have had to travel in our attempt as a free and independent people to remove the social consequence of the inherited curse of Negro slavery."

And Robert M. Hutchins, the former President of the University of Chicago, and now the President of the Fund - Financed Fund for the Advancement of Education, said this in his recent books, "The political Animal;"

"The Negro in America is not a part of the American society. This is the greatest single crime that the American people have ever committed, and one of the greatest crimes that any people has ever committed."

If this is the sober judgment of two of the greatest "elder statesmen" of American intellectual and public life, why should we who are the victims of this "greatest crime committed by any people" in the history of the world, speak frankly of the wicked, wicked, system that still throws its shadow on twenty million darker people in what is supposed to be the "land of the Free, and the home of the Brave"? It is the intention of this article, to speak about some of the aftermaths of Slavery as we see them around us today.

First a word, as to the essential evils of Slavery. They were countless; only three major ones, that lead to inumerable smaller ones, need be listed here.

First, was the destruction of the FAMILY. The family unit is the basis for morals, habits, manners, and learning. It is in the family that the child learns security and love; learns his first and most important lessons in the use of the language; learns to obey the unwritten, and even written, laws of society; in short, where he first begins to be a citizen of a community, and of a nation, and of the human race.

Slavery could not tolerate the existence of a family. A child could, and was, frequently sold away from a mother; a husband from wife and children; and there was no such thing as a legal marriage, nor respect for the wife and mother, nor any value placed on the ordinary laws of monogamy or sex abstinence.

Say what you will about the African slave; this wicked system tried to make its peace with God and conscience, by claiming that the African was brought to America to be made a Christian, and to be "civilized." But the African had a [illegible] he owned, what he acquired, belonged to his Master, not to himself. True, there were occasional masters who did permit slaves to work for themselves, and even to buy themselves; but these cases were the exception, and not the rule.

The great educator, Horace Mann, thought that the greatest evil of Slavery, was that it deprived slave children of the right to learn. It was against the law to teach a slave how to read or write. Horace Mann called this a "devilish miracle," that a man would prevent a child from learning. So it happened that out of the 4,500,000 Negroes in the United States, the ability to read and write was found only among the half-million free Negroes of the time, and a scattered handful of the slaves.

One Hundred Years Later —

What is the aftermath? Take the family.

In the city of Atlanta, in 1957, 29 out of every 100 Negro births were out of wedlock. The corresponding figure for whites was reported to be 2.1. Even the Census takers warn that these figures do not tell the whole story. Illegitimacy rates follow the amount of money and education of the family — its social class. The better-off families tend to hide their true illegitimacy rates; by abortions, by various devices of concealing the fact of illegitimacy through nursing homes, and even avoiding registration Negroes, comparatively poor, and with rate of illegitimacy due to such inherited, racial factors, as "greater sex drive," "more passionate," etc., etc., etc. — the folk tales that are widely believed?

This writer thinks not. His explanation is, that the wicked institution of Slavery did not permit the family to exist among Negroes; that within the relatively short period of 100 years, the fact that Negroes have generally been able to build up stable families, is almost miraculous.

Prfoperty - Economic Well - Being-Occupations

The owner rate of Negroes in Atlanta is twenty-percent lower than that of whites; and the average house they do own, is worth scarcely half as much as that of the average white owner. The Negro family has an income forty percent lower than that of the average white home owner.

Some of this, of course, is due to rank prejudicial treatment of the Negro in the present generation. But a great deal of it is due to the aftermath of Slavery. Consider, if you will, only Government hand-outs; free lands; bonuses and pensions from the Revolutionary, 1812, Mexican War, even the Civil War. Negroes did serve in each of these wars but in a percentage far below their number in the general population; and because of—Slavery! It is estimated, that some 6,000 Negroes did serve in the War of the Revolution, and some 175,000 in the Union Armies during the Civil War. Their proportion should have been: 60,000 during the War of the Revolution (Negroes were then 20 percent of the population). and 400,000 during the Civil War. A great many white families, and a few Negro families, can count their rise to getting ahead in the World, from land bounties, and pensions, received from these Wars.

gro teacher is not doing a good job!"

Or even: "Negroes simply haven't got the brain power that whites have. These scores prove it!"

This writer thinks not. He thinks that these test scores are an aftermath of Slavery; the Slavery that made it a crime to teach Negroes how to read and write.

Let's take a look at some of these scores. In 1957, the Testing Survey of Atlanta reported these scores for white and Negro children:

Test-Metropolitan Primary Grade 3.4 National Normal Score (In Grade)—3.1 Atlanta White Score (In Grade) 2.9 Atlanta Negro Score (In Grade) -1.8.

Test — Stanford Elementary Grade 4.4 National Normal Score (In Grade) 4.4 Atlanta White Score (In Grade) 4.0 Atlanta Negro Score (In Grade) 2.2.

Test Iowa Every Pupil Grade 8.1 National Normal Score (In Grade) 8.1 Atlanta White Score (In Grade) 7.4 Atlanta Negro Score (In Grade) 4.7.

Now the figures in this Table mean, that both the Atlanta Whites and the Atlanta Negroes, were behind National normal standards as to where the child should be at his grade level. But the Negro children were far behind. Those in the third grade were not up to second grade standards. Those in the Fourth grade were just above beginning second grade standards. Those in the eighth grade were not up to fifth grade standards. And this continues, of course, right through high school.

Does this mean that Negro children were born, with less brains than white children? This writer thinks not.

He thinks that these Negro children are behind, principally, be-

Say what you will about the African slave; this wicked system tried to make its peace with God and conscience, by claiming that the African was brought to America to be made a Christian, and to be "civilized." But the African had a strong and effective family organization; he was brought into slavery that destroyed the family system he had, and would not permit a new family system to be built up. To this extent Slavery was designed to make beasts, not men.

The second great evil of Slavery, was to deprive the Slave of property, and of any right or reason to acquire it. He did not even own himself. All of the habits and ambitions to get ahead in the world through improving his condition through acquiring property, were defeated by the slave system. What class. The better-off families tend to hide their true illegitimacy rates; by abortions, by various devices of concealing the fact of illegitimacy through nursing homes, and even avoiding registration Negroes, comparatively poor, and with less education and sensitivity, are likely to reveal the true illegitimacy rates.

Yet there can be little point in denying that it is a fact, that illegitimacy rates for Negroes are higher than those for whites. Add to this; desertions; abandonments; one begins to see the terrible aftermath of family disorganization among Negroes, coming directly out of Slavery.

Are Negroes basically more "immoral" than white persons? This writer thinks not. Is their higher

A great many white families, and a few Negro families, can count their rise to getting ahead in the World, from land bounties, and pensions, received from these Wars. Here again, the wonderful thing is not that the Negro has so little; but that he has as much as he does have.

Education - Learning - Literacy

A great many people have the idea, that when you provide a child with a school building, and a teacher, that you have given him an equal start with all other children. Therefore, when they look at test scores made by Negro children and compare those test scores with those made by white children — (which are very likely to be higher) — they say: "Ah! The Ne-

The concept of freedom of the human personality, as set forth by President Abraham Lincoln in signing the Emancipation Proclamation January 1st, 1863, (100) years ago, is hailed and saluted in this century period as the basis of true American Democracy but which effectiveness needs strong implementation to bulwark the U. S. Constitution and to assure liberty for all Americans. In commemorating this century of progress since President Lincoln's famous Stroke of the quill to save the union and free the slaves in 1863, we are happy to salute a youth, who was but five years of age when President Lincoln proclaimed freedom for the slaves. A. F. Herndon's concept of Economic Freedom for the Negro (58) years ago was to found a Financial Institution, The Atlanta Life, which we are happy to claim as a heritage and a credit to the American economy. We hail President Lincoln and salute the late A. F. Herndon, Founder.

SPORTS OF THE WORLD

BY MARION E. JACKSON

Abraham Lincoln the Great Liberator is viewed historically and universally as the Great Emancipator. Yet there is a special niche in the freedom Hall of Heroes for the pathfinders of competition who emboldened democracy by their belief in unfettered play. Unencumbered performance without regards to race, creed or color was a crusade with those who lifted the barriers of slavery from competition.

Unchallenged as the No. 1 sports emancipator is Branch Rickey, who opened the doors of organized baseball.

Yet, there were others, who deserve the highest accolade for their contribution to the Negro freedom cause through opening up the portals of sports on a basis of merit, skill and accomplishments.

Rickey, was abetted in his desire for performance on a basis of merit, by Bill Veeck, who signed Larry Doby as the first Negro in the Negro American League.

Paul Brown, who organized the Cleveland Browns of football immortality, is widely credited with pushing wider the door of professional football to Negro gridders.

Cleveland Leigh Abbott, a South Dakota Negro, who built invincible teams in football, track and field, and basketball, pushed the Southern Negro into national sports competition.

H. T. Harvey, who played against former President Dwight D. Eisenhower for Colgate, against West Point, carried the first basketball Negro team North with fabeled Morehouse College gives.

Credit Ted A. Wright, then at Xavier University, for introducing to the nation a new brand of basketball with his unforgettable University Ambassadors.

It was Cleve Abbott, too, that aided in the formation of the American Tennis Association, and who broke the colorline as the first Negro on the United States Olympic Committee.

The Great Liberators of boxing are numerous. You remember Jack Johnson was the emancipator of heavyweight boxing. Joe Louis Barrow, the Brown Bomber or Dusty Destroyer as you may call him won boxing new respectability.

Jack Johnson and Joe Louis were emancipators in a sense that they broke down the stereotypes. Eroded the myths and convinced the Doubting Thomases that a Negro could reign. Add a long list of heavyweight champions and you will see Ezzard Charles, Jersey Walcott, Floyd [illegible] fabled New York Renaissance was the pioneer of barnstorming basketball, and perhaps professional basketball.

One of the fabled teams of the Twenties, the New Yorkers set the stage for such romantic teams as Abe Saperstein's Harlem Globetrotters, Goose Tatum's Harlem Stars and Marques Haynes' Harlem Magicians.

Negro stars like Bill Russell, Wilt Chamberlain, Oscar Robertson, Guy Rodgers, Elgin Baylor, Billy Mc Gill, Zelmo Beaty, are testimonial to the greatness of predecessors in the play-for-play ranks which early embraced minority performers.

Have a long list of old-time Negro stars to credit for their success in professional basketball today.

Yet, the Branch Rickey bit of trailblazing tops all the emancipators who not only preached tolerance but practiced it on the playing field. As president and general manager of the old Brooklyn Dodgers in 1942, he spoke out strongly for adding Negroes to the Dodgers' roster.

So genuinely did Rickey blueprint the destiny of the Negro in sports, but the significant thing is that he did it prior to the May 17, 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decisions and subsequent decrees that set the Negro on the path of the second century of freedom.

There have been numerous U. S. Supreme Court decisions bolstering the position of the Negro in the United States.

However, the most vital of the decisions was neither controlled nor managed but a simple belief that the untapped reservoir of Negro talent would be the savior of competition.

In the play-for-play ranks, as well as sports in general, this has proven to be true.

No finer competitor in the world is to be found than the American Negro who has shaped not only the freedom trend in the United States but throughout the world.

There have been many emancipators

Baseball Pushed Freedom Cause Of Negro Athletes

By MARION E. JACKSON

It has been established that Negro baseball had its roots in slavery and was moving toward some stature as an organized sport immediately following the Emancipation Proclamation. The game gave a massive push to the Negro freedom cause in the United States.

In 1885, appeared the first professional team, which was organized at the Argyle Hotel in Babylon, New York.

From 1887 to 1919 several attempts were made to organize Negro baseball leagues. Most of them failed before anything tangible was done. In February 1920, the Negro National League was organized by Andrew (Rube) Foster, David Wright, Joseph Greene and Cary B. Lewis of Chicago, Ill. Tenny Blount of Detroit, Mich.; Lorenzo S. Cobb of St. Louis, Mo.; Elwood Knox, C. I. Taylor and Charles Marshall of Indianapolis Ind.; J. L. Williamson of Kansas City, Mo.; W. A. Kelley of Washington, D. C.; Elisha Scott of Leavenworth, Kansas and John Matthews of Dayton, Ohio.

Foster was chosen president and secretary and the clubs making up the league were the Chicago American Giants, Kansas City Monarchs, Indianapolis ABC's and Detroit Stars. In December 1920, the New York Bacharach Giants, Cuban Stars, Columbus Buckeyes and Hillsdale Giants joined the circuit.

An Eastern League was organized in 1922 with Edward Bolden as president. Its members were the Harrisburg Giants, the Hillsdales and the Brooklyn Royal Giants.

The first Negro World Series was held in 1924. History was to see both leagues collapse in 1932.

* * * *

The Negro American League was formed in 1935 and was composed of the Atlanta Black Crackers (with headquarters in Louisville, Ky.), the Kansas City Monarchs, the Jacksonville Red Caps (in Cleveland, Ohio), the ABC's, the Chicago American Giants, Baltimore Elite Giants, Homestead Grays, N. Y. Cuban Stars, Newark Eagles, N. Y. Black Yankees, the Philadelphia Stars and the Toledo Club.

* * * *

Negro baseball thrived, its East-West Game in Chicago, drawing thousands until Jackie Robinson broke the color line in 1946.

This heralded the deathknoll of the once powerful Negro leagues that sent Larry Doby, Don Newcombe, Roy Campanella, Satchel Paige, Dan Bankhead and many other greats to the major leagues.

Dr. J. B. Martin today heads a Negro American League that is more of name than fact. Dr. Martin, a Chicago, Ill. Republican and a member of the Sanitary Commission operates the circuit from his office. The league has dwindled [illegible]

CATCHERS: Clarence Williams, Josh Gibson, Ernie Wright and Biz Mackey, and Roy Campanella, John Roseboro and Elston Howard.

OUTFIELDERS: Alexander Ratcliffe, Oscar Charleston, Bingo Demoss, Peter Hill, William Monroe, Oliver Marcelle, Otto Briggs, Edward Douglass and John Beckwith. Larry Doby, Henry Aaron, Vada Pinson, Minnie Minoso, Willie Mays, Bill White, Roberto Clemente, Frank Robinson and Hector Lopez.

INFIELDERS: Jackie Robinson, Ben Taylor, Leroy Grant, Samuel Hughes, John H. Lloyd, Judson Wilson, Leonard Grant, Andrew Jackson, Frank Warfield and Avelino Canarzies, Ernie Banks, Maury Wills, Junior Gilliam.

Today more than 60 Negroes play in the major leagues. To pinpoint the democratic gains since the Emancipation one must note that in the early 1920s,, Negroes were not permitted in the grandstands in Sportsman Park in St. Louis, Mo.

* * * *

Branch Rickey, who opened the doors of the big league game, could not even admit an Ohio Wesleyan friend and teammate who dropped by his office. He was Dr. Charles Thomas, a St. Louis dentist. Rickey then vice president and general manager of the St. Louis Cardinals told Dr. Thomas "Some day we'll have all that changed." While this might be easily regarded as a prophecy, in view of Rickey's integration of the Negro into organized ball some twenty odd years later, he was merely expressing a logical belief that the refusal to sell tickets to Negroes would end one day.

* * * *

Rickey as president and general manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers broke the color line.

He had several Negroes in mind, Marvin Williams, Sam Jethroe, Jackie Robinson, Thomas Piper, Satchel Paige, Silvio Garcia and Josh Gibson. The name mentioned

Negro college football had its beginning in 1892, with Livingstone College and Biddle (now Johnson C. Smith) University playing the first game at Salisbury, N.C., on Thanksgiving Day. Biddle won 4-to-0. In 1894 Howard University, Washington, D.C., and Lincoln University (Pa.) played the first game in the East, and in 1897 Tuskegee Institute (Ala.) and Atlanta (Ga.) University played the first game in the middle or deep South.

"In 1897, only about a half dozen colleges had football teams. Squads were small, and many varsity teams had no substitute players. That year Shaw University organized a team, and for several years thereafter was monarch of all it surveyed. Two years later Morehouse, Talladega, Fisk, Knoxville and Meharry began playing the game, and Negro college football began to grow in popularity. By 1901, many colleges had well organized athletic committees that sponsored interesting sports programs and regular football schedule each fall.

"In 1912, the Colored Intercollegiate Athletic Association was organized, with Hampton, Lincoln, Virginia Union, Shaw and Howard as members. They were joined later by Virginia State, St. Paul, North Carolina A. & T. Morgan, Bluefield and North Carolina State. In 1931 West Virginia State, Wilberforce, Kentucky State, Lincoln (Mo.) and Louisville Municipal formed the Midwestern Association, later taking in Tennessee State and other colleges. Still later, the Middle Atlantic Athletic Association and the South Atlantic Conference, were formed, and they had teams that were great.

So genuinely did Rickey blueprint the destiny of the Negro in sports, but the significant thing is that he did it prior to the May 17, 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decisions and subsequent decrees that set the Negro on the path of the second century of freedom.

There have been numerous U. S. Supreme Court decisions bolstering the position of the Negro in the United States.

However, the most vital of the decisions was neither controlled nor managed but a simple belief that the untapped reservoir of Negro talent would be the savior of competition.

In the play-for-play ranks, as well as sports in general, this has proven to be true.

No finer competitor in the world is to be found than the American Negro who has shaped not only the freedom trend in the United States but throughout the world.

There have been many emancipators of sports.

Negro baseball thrived, its East-West Game in Chicago, drawing thousands until Jackie Robinson broke the color line in 1946.

This heralded the deathknoll of the once powerful Negro leagues that sent Larry Doby, Don Newcombe, Roy Campanella, Satchel Paige, Dan Bankhead and many other greats to the major leagues.

Negro college football had its beginning in 1892, with Livingstone College and Biddle (now Johnson C. Smith) University playing the first game at Salisbury, N.C., on Thanksgiving Day. Biddle won 4-to-0. In 1894 Howard University, Washington, D.C., and Lincoln University (Pa.) played the first game in the East, and in 1897 Tuskegee Institute (Ala.) and Atlanta (Ga.) University played the first game in the middle or deep South.

"In 1897, only about a half dozen colleges had football teams. Squads were small, and many varsity teams had no substitute players. That year Shaw University organized a team, and for several years thereafter was monarch of all it surveyed. Two years later Morehouse, Talladega, Fisk, Knoxville and Meharry began playing the game, and Negro college football began to grow in popularity. By 1901, many colleges had well organized athletic committees that sponsored interesting sports programs and regular football schedule each fall.

"In 1912, the Colored Intercollegiate Athletic Association was organized, with Hampton, Lincoln, Virginia Union, Shaw and Howard as members. They were joined later by Virginia State, St. Paul, North Carolina A. & T. Morgan, Bluefield and North Carolina State. In 1913 Talladega, Tuskegee, Morehouse, Morris Brown, Clark, Atlanta, and Alabama State formed the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Later Wiley, Prairie View, Bishop, Texas and Sam Houston organized the Southwestern "In 1923, the South - Central Athletic Conference was organized, with Alcorn, Haven Teachers, Mississippi Industrial, Tougaloo, Jackson, Rust, Campbell, Okolona and Mount Beulah as members. Later a few other schools joined this union.

"In 1930 Haven discontinued operations, and the conference lost its membership. In 1931 West Virginia State, Wilberforce, Kentucky State, Lincoln (Mo.) and Louisville Municipal formed the Midwestern Association, later taking in Tennessee State and other colleges. Still later, the Middle Atlantic Athletic Association and the South Atlantic Conference, were formed, and they had teams that were great.

"When the United States entered World War II many of these associations suspended competition because the military draft called so Conference

U. S. SPORTS IN FORE FRONT OF NEGRO EMANCIPATION

Amature, Pro Sports Set Pace For World Freedom

By MARION E. JACKSON

U.S. sports were in the forefront of the emancipation of the Negro. This truth was established before the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation by the Great Liberator, Abraham Lincoln.

In amateur contests of skill prior to the Civil War, through honorable service in that sectional conflict, the Negro mastered the techniques and skills of competition.

In military - connected athletics, whether target-shooting, hunting, swimming, wrestling, etc., there are records to show that the Negro was an adversary respected and formidable.

This African heritage athlete gave the spirit of brotherhood to competition in professional boxing, international track and field, baseball, field and stream, swimming and other sports, years before the May 17, 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

LARRY DOBY

Americans had learned a brotherhood of competitive dignity without regards to race, creed or color long before Jack Johnson became the first heavyweight champion of his race.

—0—

Even more remarkably, the old Negro American League and the Negro National League, established major league standards for minority citizens which led for their eventual inclusion into the Great American Game.

—0—

SPORTS EMANCIPATORS

Branch Rickey was the Great Emancipator in organized baseball. Paul Brown was the Great Liberator in professional football. Joe Louis, the celebrated Brown Bomber, emerged as the fistic dusty destroyer who spearheaded the freedom cause.

Jackie Robinson pioneered as the first Negro in modern organized baseball.

Woody Hayes championed the Negro in the modern intercollegiate ranks.

Everyone remembers, Paul Brown after leaving Massillion High School, Ohio State, Great Lakes and forming the Cleveland Browns as a missionary in sports human relations.

Rickey as president and general manager of the old Brooklyn Dodgers in 1942, spoke strongly for adding Negroes to the Dodgers' roster. There was neither complexity nor a sense of crusading in Rickey's plan to pry loose the Negro from the chains of competitive slavery.

He had several Negroes in mind Marvin Williams, Sam Jethroe, Jackie Robinson, Satchel Paige, Silvio Garcia and Josh Gibson. In 1946, Rickey signed Robinson to play with the Montreal Royals.

—0—

In 1947, Robinson was moved up the ladder to the Dodgers as a first baseman and went on to win "Rookie of the Year" honors. Only a year ago, 1962 to be exact, Jackie was named into Baseball's Hall of Fame.

HISTORY OF DENIAL

Roots of chauvinism were deep in the nation's stadiums, auditoriums and arenas. In some northern cities and in all souther towns racial seating embarrassed the Negro competitor.

Boxing, basketball and other indoor competition saw the Negro confined to the peanut gallery.

Even champions caught the barbs and snares of inferiority predicated upon race, but they did not permit their sensitivity over jimcrow to foil their quest for eventual acceptance. Under the pressure cooker of the separate but equal and the agonizing pangs of the "back door approach" the Negro athlete persevered and conquered. Today, he stands at the pinnacle of international acceptance.

—0—

BRANCH RICKEY

Historians tell that Bill Richmond, the first Negro to make an effort for fistic fame went from America to England, perhaps on borrowed money seeking what ever fame he might acquire with a stout heart and mighty fists. He met the remarkable Tom Cribb in 1810, was knocked out and that seemed to end any threat for athletic supremacy by the black race.

Not many years later, Tom Molimeaux, a Negro slave "staked" by his owner invaded England. He, too met Cribb, then a great champion. Molineaux cut Cribb to ribbons for 5 rounds before a crowd of 20,000, before losing.

Isaac Murphy was the greatest of many Negro jockeys. There were many others of great skill.

Jack Johnson became a world's heavyweight champion. So did Joe Louis. Tiger Flower was a champion. Henry Armstrong was a triple titleholder. John Henry Louis was a great champion in his time.

POLLARD WAS FIRST

Fritz Pollard, the only Negro on a team otherwise made of whites, was one of the greatest halfbacks college football has ever known. Paul Robeson soared to fame at Rutgers. Jerome (Brud) Holland and Claude (Buddy) Young started at Illinois, William Lewis was at Harvard in the 1890's and Kenny Washington made history at UCLA.

ALL-AROUND SPORTS

Paul W. Jones, of the Colored Industrial School of Cincinnati, ranked one of America's greatest all-around sports authorities, discussing baseball, contributed the following:

Negroes began playing baseball before emancipation. We are told that games were played between youngsters on the same plantations and farms. They did not know much about the sport, however, they witnessed contests between Union soldiers, stationed here and there, in the South. Teams were picked by 'choosing sides,' and rivalry was keen. Some good games were witnessed by onlookers.

Later even country villages had teams that competed on Saturdays and Sundays, in or near, rural settlements.

"In Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennesse, North Carolina and Florida Negro players appeared who later made foot prints on the sands that are being followed today.

FIRST RACE PROS

"In 1885, appeared the first Negro professional team. It was composed of waiters of the Argyle Hotel at Babylon, N. Y. Its first opponents were white clubs. The leader of this team was Frank Thompson, and he named the team the Cuban Giants. Thompson called his players Cubans in order to enable them to play in towns where Negroes were not welcomed. 'Giants' was a magic name for the next 30 years, scores of Negro teams making use of it in all parts of the country.

Negro sports emerged into the midstream of American culture even before the Emancipation Proclamation

Plans Underway For Tourney Of Champions

Plans are well underway for the second annual Tournament of Champions, sponsored by the Georgia Interscholastic Association, which will be held this weekend.

Tournament Director Frank S. McClarin, principal of South Fulton High School, will make the official announcement and release the names of the competing quints when he returns to the city from the Class AA State Tourament, at Savannah.

Atlanta sports fans will recall that the first annual Tournament of Champions was held last March, at the BTW Gymnasium.

Competing in the history- making hardwood carnival last March were the Luther Judson Price High Wildcats, Class AA champions; George W. Drake High Yellowjackets, Class A champions; R. L. Cousins Maroon Tigers, Class B champions; and the Mary McLeod Bethune Wildcats, Class C champions.

PRICE SWEEPS CROWN

The Price Wildcats swept the Tournament of Champions last year crown by polishing off the Cousins Maroon Tigers, 75-49 and taking the Drake Yellowjackets in camp, 74-46.

The Bethune High Wildcats, of Class C, defeated the Cousins Maroon Tigers, of Class M, 70-61 for the consolations laurels.

Classifications in the GIA are based on the ADA (average daily attendance), and until last year the state Class AA champions automatically got the bid to represent Georgia in the National High School Basketball Tournament, at Tennessee A and I State University, Nashville, Tenn.

The Tournament of Champions now makes it possible for teams in Classes A, B and C to also get an opportunity to compete in the national tournament.

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE

Atlanta 14, Georgia

A FOUR-YEAR LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE FOR MEN

Morehouse College began in Augusta, Georgia, as Augusta Institute just four years after the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation. The Institute was moved to Atlanta in 1879, and was known as Atlanta Baptist College until 1913 when the name was changed to Morehouse College in honor of Henry L. Morehouse of the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Morehouse is a four-year liberal arts college for the education of young men for constructive leadership and service. Strong and vigorous academic programs are offered in sixteen major fields: 1) Art, 2) Biology, 3) Business Administration, 4) Chemistry, 5) Economics, 6) English, 7) History, 8) Mathematics, 9) Modern Foreign Languages, 10) Music, 11) Philosophy, 12) Physical Education, 13) Physics, 14) Political Science, 15) Psychology, and 16) Sociology. A carefully designed minor in Education is available to qualify students for state teaching certificates. A student may also minor in Drama, Library Science, and Religion.

Morehouse has an able faculty trained in the finest universities of the world. Nearly half of the teachers have earned the doc'orate degree.

High academic standards and strong motivation are basic to the nature of education at Morehouse. In the ninety-six years since Morehouse was founded, its graduates have been found in positions of constructive leadership and service all over the world. They have achieved eminence in Education, as administrators (currently nine college presidents) and teachers; in Religion, as clergymen who pastor influential congregations, and who hold high appointive and elective offices in their denominations; in Governmen Service, as elected and appointed public officials, foreign service officers, and other positions of public trust; in Medicine, as dentists and physicians, as diplomates and fellows, as owners and administrators of hospitals and clinics; in Fraternal Organizations, as men in positions of leadership and influence; in Business, as bankers, insurance executives, realtors, scientists, men of industry and commerce; in Journalism and Public Relations, as executives, editors, and correspondents; in Law, as some of the most respected members of the American bar; in Civil Rights, as dedicated leaders who continue to generate great social change. More than thirty Morehouse graduates are diplomates in Medicine and ninety-four Morehouse graduates have earned academic doctorate degrees.

Since 1940, Benjamin E. Mays has been the sixth President. A distinguished educator, religious leader, writer, and scholar, he gives dynamic leadership to the character of education at Morehouse College.

One hundred years after the Emancipation Proclamation, the 800-odd students from nearly every state in the Union and several foreign countries continue to pursue academic excellence in this climate of scholarship, motivation, and achievement.

Many Pioneers Contributed To Atlanta Negro Business

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta today boasts one of the most thriving and successful Negro business empires of the nation, accounting for upwards of $80,000,000 in finance-controlling firms along two blocks of Auburn Avenue, N.E.

Most of presently flourishing businesses, including the remarkable housing developments, succeeded the burst bubble of Heman Perry's dream, or followed in the wake of his genius for organization, far ahead of his associates and time. However, Negroes — ex-slaves and freemen — who came to Terminus, later to be known as Marthasville, and then Atlanta, started contributing to the city's business enterprise years before Heman Perry arrived on the scene from Texas.

The Atlanta Life story, birthed and boomed by the late Alonzo F. Herndon and his successor son, Norris B., parellels and outlives the Perry dream.

It is worthy, therefore to go back to the Emancipation period and pick up a few of the business stalwarts who helped begin the Atlanta story, which has continued to astonish the world.

FIRST PROPERTY OWNER

The first colored person to own property in Terminus was one Mary Combs, where Wheat Street (now Auburn Avenue) meets Peachtree Street. The second was Ransome Montgomery, who had obtained his freedom by saving the lives of more than one hundred passengers during the burning of the bridge over the Chattahoochee river while a passenger train was crossing it. A few other freed persons brought property and organized to deal in services after Atlanta was chartered as a railroad city in 1848, but there is no recorded history of business names during the period preceding Sherman's conquest.

In 1867, when the Constitutional Convention met in Atlanta to map reconstruction of political affairs, there appeared many noble and patriotic leaders of color. The two races, at considerable odds over the result of the Civil War, vied for education, wealth, supremacy or existence.

JAMES TATE, in 1866 began a successful wholesale and retail grocery business on Walton street. He later occupied a two-story brick building on Decatur street.

Other business of this line followed in business dealing in rock-quarrying and dealing in sand and brick. The Cooperative SOUTH VIEW CEMETERY CO. during this period became what is now the oldest incorporated Negro business in Georgia.

The GEORGIA REAL ESTATE LOAN AND TRUST CO., the HON. H. A. RUCKER, president, developed, while the ATLANTA LOAN and TRUST CO., W. C. Redding, president, operated. FRIENDSHIP DRUG STORE ran under the firm of Drs. Asbury, Taylor and Company.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN ORDER, which bulit a fine four-story brick building on Ivy Street, the first Atlanta secret order to purchase real estate, was organized in Atlanta in 1875.

THE COLORED MEN'S PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION was organized by the Rev. N. J. Jones in 1886. It dealt in charitable, as well as business enterprise.

THE ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS, which later figured in construction of Atlanta's tallest Negro business structure, was chartered in 1871.

The Schell Opera House and Hall operated on West Mitchell St.

Associated with Mr. Rucker in the GEORGIA REAL ESTATE LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY were business and building stalwarts J. T. SCHELL, J. N. BLACKSHEAR, ALEX HAMILTON and FLOYD H. CRUMBLY.

WILLIAM C. ROSETTE, was an early real estate and renting agent: Augustus Thompson was a blacksmith in the rear of 69 South Pryor Street. Rev. William Finch was an ex-city councilman and tailor . . . Frank T. Howard, successful undertaker and embalmer, was the eldest son of David T. Howard.

H. A. HAGLER, editor-stationer, managed the ATLANTA TIMES, before starting the "People's Advocate" on his own. His influence resulted in the organization of the Negro Press Association of Georgia. He had associated with him in his job office, Moses Amos, leading Negro pharmacist in the state in the early '90's and who developed several paying enterprises, while owning much Atlanta real estate. The ATLANTA INDEPENDENT was founded in 1908 by Antone Graves, realtist. The ATLANTA POST ran same period.

DR. H. R. BUTLER and DR. T. H. SLATER developed what at one . . . THOMAS GOOSBY, artisan and merchant, followed the carpentry profession, was employed in the erection of the present Kimball House, the State capitol and other notable buildings, before becoming successful as a grocer . . . JAMES LEE HONEYWELL was a cigar maunfacturer and United States letter carrier . . . ELIJAH RICHARD GRAVES, a candy manufacturer, went into business for himself after working many years for the F. E. Block and Company . . . JACKSON McHENRY, hack and cab operator, was also a politician of note . . . JOHN W. WILLIAMS was a successful dyer . . DAVID W. RYAN was a successful picture frame maker and dealer in bronze, oxodized oaks, compositions and mouldings . . . J. O. CONNALLY was a sausage grinder and successful butcher . . . WILLIS SMITH was a progressive mechanic, having followed the trade of bridge-building and housebuilding with several assistants . . . GEORGE W. HATSFIELD conducted a well-paying grocery on Chapel Street . . . AARON PERRY had a "neat, inviting restaurant" on West Mitchell Street in 1889 . . . JAMES SIMONTON was an eminent merchant . . . FELIX BROWN, professor of the culinary art, developed wide trade . . . ALEXANDER HAMILTON, contractor and builder, was ranked as oneof the city's best long before the turn of the century . . . W. A. HARRIS became foreman and salesman for W. J. Willingham, the lumber dealer, developing ownership of cottages on Chapel Street . . . G. M. HOWELL developed one of the largest merchant tailoring businesses in the South . . . WILLIAM DRISCOLL, J. C. LINDSAY and others figured in Union Mutual, which was a forerunner of Atlanta Life.

In the early twenties, W. S. Cannon founded the CANNOLENE COMPANY, which has grown into a national institution. The firm prospered under the management of Mr. Cannon into a national institution. The cosmetics firm has expanded even more under the progressive administration of his son, R. O. Cannon.

These were a few of the older stalwarts . . . In 1905, A. F. HERNDON organized the Atlanta Mutual Benefit Association, predecessor of the present Atlanta Life Insurance Company . . . On Sept. 26, 1916, the company was granted a new charter and is now listed with $6,836,526 in assets . . .

In 1903, HEMAN PERRY organized Standard Life Insurance . . . In 1921 he organized CITIZEN'S TRUST COMPANY . . . The Service Company had been begun by him in 1907, as a corporate . . . still figure in some of the most successful business enterprises of the race, both in Atlanta and the nation . . . W. J. SHAW was another touched by Perry, and who figured in other fraternal and business ventures . . .

The Herndon Building on Auburn was built in 1924, while the Odd Fellows building was constructed in 1912, both tributes to pioneer and emancipated genius . . . Not mentioned, but figuring prominently in the development of Atlanta Negro business, were hundreds of Negro ministers who hold the torch of patronage and cooperation high for their followers in otherwise dark and troublesome days of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century . . .

LUCIUS L. LEE was an outstanding undertaker on Butler Street, while DAVID T. HOWARD's undertaking establishment was the leading facility of the city and

Architect Archie Alexander One Of Profession's Finest

Archie A. Alexander who died January 4, 1958, was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, in 1887. He attended the public schools in Des Moines and made a fine record in scholarship and athletics at West High School and Highland Park College. He entered the University of Iowa in 1908 and received the Bachelor of Science degree in 1912. In 1925, he was awarded an an honorary degree for achievement in his profession. When he was studying engineering, however, the head of the school tried to discourage him by saying that, although he had talent, his color would prevent him for finding employment.

For two years thereafter he was fortunate enough to get employment as a foreman for a bridge construction firm, and out of that experience became inspired to go into business for himself. His many jobs of construction work included several million-dollar projects. The first was in the building for his alma mater its heating plant and a system of tunnels under the Iowa River. This, he said, was the one project he was proudest of because it enabled him to convince his instructor that his race was not a bar to success in the field of engineering. In fact, the instructor was among those who recommended him for the job and took pride in the accomplishment.

Another million-dollar project was in building the sewage disposal plant of Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1930, one of the finest sewage disposal plants of any city in America. The plant lies along the bank of Grand River and covers a space of fifty-two acres. It is capable of handling over 40,000 gallons of sewage daily.

In 1920 he studied abroad at the University of London, and toured the British Isles, France and Belgium.

LOS ANGELES ATTORNEY NAMED TO JUDGESHIP

LOS ANGELES — (ANP) — Sherman W. Smith, Los Angeles Negro attorney, has been named to a Los Angeles county municipal judgeship by Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown.

Smith is a West Virginia State college graduate and an honor graduate of Howard University's school of law. He has practiced law in San Diego and here since passing the California bar in 1949.

He is a member of the NAACP, the Urban League, Omega Psi Phi fraternity and the American Legion.

Smith and his wife, the former Dr. Helen Marie Guenveur, have three children.

In accepting the appointment, Smith said:

"I am grateful to Gov. Brown for the confidence which he has reposed in me. I shall acquit myself in a manner that the Governor and the people of California will be proud of my career as a jurist. I welcome this new opportunity and challenge."

J. McKINLEY developed a large business [illegible] Atlanta's earliest Negro business structure, was chartered in 1871.

The Schell Opera House and Hall operated on West Mitchell St.

Associated with Mr. Rucker in the GEORGIA REAL ESTATE LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY were business and building stalwarts J. T. SCHELL, J. N. BLACKSHEAR, ALEX HAMILTON and FLOYD H. CRUMBLY.

WILLIAM C. ROSETTE, was an early real estate and renting agent; Augustus Thompson was a blacksmith in the rear of 69 South Pryor Street. Rev. William Finch was an ex-city councilman and tailor . . . Frank T. Howard, successful undertaker and embalmer, was the eldest son of David T. Howard.

H. A. HAGLER, editor-stationer, managed the ATLANTA TIMES, before starting the "People's Advocate" on his own. His influence resulted in the organization of the Negro Press Association of Georgia. He had associated with him in his job office, Moses Amos, leading Negro pharmacist in the state in the early '90's and who developed several paying enterprises, while owning much Atlanta real estate. The ATLANTA INDEPENDENT was founded in 1908 by Antone Graves, realtist. The ATLANTA POST ran same period.

DR. H. R. BUTLER and DR. T. H. SLATER developed what at one time was referred to as the largest retail Negro drug establishment in the nation . . . JAMES C. ODOM was a thriving grocery merchant, having bought out his partner's share in Goodlett & Odom . . . LEWIS H. COX became a successful merchant after careers of shipping clerk and stenographer . . . J. W. COX developed the hack and shoemaker's businesses . . . GREEN W. WILSON was a successful butcher on Tattnall Street, having opened the business in 1891 . . . MORGAN McNAIR repaired sewing machines, after an apprenticeship with Singer Co., his place of business being at 43 West Mitchell street . . .

JOHN OLIVER ROSS engaged in grocery business after 1889, later developing other enterprises including the Atlanta State Savings Bank (failed in 1921) . . . CORNELIUS KING, son of a Cherokee Indian mother in Mississippi, founded Atlanta's still successful real estate firm, following a varied career in government and service wide trade . . . ALEXANDER HAMILTON, contractor and builder, was ranked as oneof the city's best long before the turn of the century . . . W. A. HARRIS became foreman and salesman for W. J. Willingham, the lumber dealer, developing ownership of cottages on Chapel Street . . . G. M. HOWELL developed one of the largest merchant tailoring businesses in the South . . . WILLIAM DRISCOLL, J. C. LINDSAY and others figured in Union Mutual, which was a forerunner of Atlanta Life.

In the early twenties, W. S. Cannon founded the CANNOLENE COMPANY, which has grown into a national institution. The firm prospered under the management of Mr. Cannon into a national institution. The cosmetics firm has expanded even more under the progressive administration of his son, R. O. Cannon.

These were a few of the older stalwarts . . . In 1905, A. F. HERNDON organized the Atlanta Mutual Benefit Association, predecessor of the present Atlanta Life Insurance Company . . . On Sept. 26, 1916, the company was granted a new charter and is now listed with 56.836,526 in assets . . .

In 1903, HEMAN PERRY organized Standard Life Insurance . . . In 1921 he organized CITIZEN'S TRUST COMPANY . . . The Service Company had been begun by him in 1917, as a corporation . . . Subsidiary organizations included SERVICE REALTY CO., SERVICE ENGINEERING AND CONSTRUCTION CO., SERVICE PRINTING COMPANY, SERVICE PHARMACY, SERVICE FARM BUREAU, the CITIZENS COMPANY, and holdings in STANDARD LIFE, CITIZENS TRUST, PENNY SAVINGS BANK in Augusta and in the NATIONAL FUEL CORPORATION . . . This gigantic empire failed, after stimulating the West Side Boom of 1923 and other adventures and pressures . . . Among the men who helped Mr. PERRY make the Citizens Standard Service into a reality were J. B. BLAYTON, W. H. KING, J. R. PINKETT, DAVID JONES, CHAS. SHAW, AARON DAY, H. C. DUGAS, C. R. YATES, L. D. MILTON, JOHN COOK, M. A. GRAHAM, SIDNEY and OSCAR BROWN, T. J. Ferguson, JAMES ARNOLD, CHARLES ARNOLD, W. F. BODDIE, A. M. WILKINS, A. L. LEWIS and DR. JOHN HOPE . . . The names of the living mentioned here still figure in some of the most successful business enterprises of the race, both in Atlanta and the nation . . . W. J. SHAW was another touched by Perry, and who figured in other fraternal and business ventures . . .

The Herndon Building on Auburn was built in 1924, while the Odd Fellows building was constructed in 1912, both tributes to pioneer and emancipated genius . . . Not mentioned, but figuring prominently in the development of Atlanta Negro business, were hundreds of Negro ministers who hold the torch of patronage and cooperation high for their followers in otherwise dark and troublesome days of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century . . .

LUCIUS L. LEE was an outstanding undertaker on Butler Street, while DAVID T. HOWARD's undertaking establishment was the leading facility of the city and held forth for a long period as one of the most outstanding organizations in the South. OSCAR MURPHY, the outstanding grocer, was established and properous at the Bradley and Decatur St. location . . . J. S. SPRATLIN, the first dry cleaner of record, was located on Auburn and Ivey . . . I. P. REYNOLDS SR. was the outstanding mercantile man in the section called Reynoldstown. . .

Another million-dollar project was in building the sewage disposal plant of Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1930, one of the finest sewage disposal plants of any city in America. The plant lies along the bank of Grand River and covers a space of fifty-two acres. It is capable of handling over 40,000 gallons of sewage daily.

In 1920 he studied abroad at the University of London, and toured the British Isles, France and Belgium.

Clark College

Founded 1869

NEARLY 100 YEARS OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE TO AMERICAN HIGHER EDUCATION

"Culture for Service" is the motto of Clark College. It is basically the guiding philosophy of the institution — handed down for nearly a century — firmly a part of the lives of thousands of Clark graduates the world over. It is a motto and a tradition. It has guided the steady growth of Clark through the early years and dominated the explosive growth of the college in the past two decades.

The founders of Clark College would be proud to see their school now; for it is a prominent and widely-respected institution known for its productivity, its program and its deep-rooted educational philosophy.

When the college celebrated its 94th anniversary last week it looked back on a panorama of the people and events which provided the base for Clark's educational prominence; it looked ahead to already-blueprinted growth in the future; it hailed the present year as another colorful chapter in a history crammed full of glowing episodes.

It was merely six years after Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation that Clark College had its birth. It was unheralded and came modestly in little Clark Chapel Methodist Church in the Summer Hill section of Atlanta. Its growth was steady and the institution was never out of touch with the events which unfolded on either side.

Now approaching its centennial year, Clark has returned the investment of its friends and supporters with prideful increment. Its graduates have been sent throughout the land and abroad, making productive contributions wherever they are located. Its present students are reaping the benefits of a foresighted administration and a dynamic faculty.

The Emancipated Negro American: Progress, Opportunity, Challenge In The Years Ahead

By ALONZO T. STEPHENS

The United States of North America is a great nation of many peoples, ideals, traditions and concepts. It is a land where each of the following terms in some degree explain what the country was, is, and will become. Regionalism, sectionalism, evolution, revolution, slavery, and freedom and many more words describe the great republic. The United States of North America is a world melting pot. European — Spanish, French, Dutch, English, German; Asian — Chinese, Japanese; African — Natives of Central and West Africa; South American; Native American Indians and Eskimos; and many more in smaller numbers from all sections of the earth find opportunity for work and a chance to live in the United States.

It is inevitable that there must be conflicts and problems when so many people from so many lands and cultures mix to find a way of life in such a short period.

In 1607, the first permanent English settlement was made in Jamestown, Virginia. In 1619 Negroes representing a foreign and alien race came to that settlement. It was perhaps natural that they would work only a few years as indentured servants, later to be converted to complete slave status. In the following year, 1620, the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, Massachusetts. In time the two settlements — Virginia and Massachusetts became symbols of two great but distinct economic, social, political and intellectual sections, the South and the North.

As both sections grew, the South more agricultural and the North more industrial, it was inevitable that only a crisis would bind them together. Compromises failed to unite the two giant forces. The Compromise of 1788 — the three-fifth representation clause, the pledge to re-examine the slave trade in 1808; the provisions of the Northwest Ordinance (in regard to slavery North of the Ohio River); the Compromise of 1820 (Missouri-slave and Maine-free) and no extension of slavery North of 36 degrees and 30 minutes; the Compromise of 1850 (which extended the concept of 1820 by making all persons North or South, East or West, Slave or Free, responsible for the reporting and recapture of a run away slave, all only delayed the day in which a solution would have to be made on the question of Negro slavery and of the two contesting economic systems.

SOUTHERN PRESIDENTS

From 1789 to 1860, except in a few cases — John Adams and John Q. Adams, Martin Van Buren, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce and James Buchanan — the executive branch of the United States was dominated by Southern Presidents. After 1860 the situation is reversed and only three men — Thomas Woodrow Wilson, Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenernment — Senate and House of Representatives, was in the hands of the South, even though in some years they formed the minority. Moreover, before 1860 the Supreme Court was packed with Southern men but since 1860 the men of the North gained positions in the Supreme Court. The above outlined composition of the United States of North America's chief governmental branches explains why the revolution, as it affected the Negro, took certain turns at different times in United States history.

April is an important month in the history of the United States. April 12, 1861 the Confederate bombardment of Fort Sumter began at 4:30 a.m. Before the last surrender of the Civil War (General E. Kirby in Texas on May 26, 1865) would be accepted the Negro would become a liberated man who would begin a long, bitter and upward climb to full freedom of opportunity and challenge and resposibility.

"One-eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the union, but localized in the Southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was somehow the cause of the War. To strength, perpetuate, and extend this interest was the object which the insurgents would rend the Union even by War, while the Government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it. Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained."

INTENTION OF RESTORATION

Lincoln's second inaugural message indicated that his intention to restore Southern states quickly and without recrimination is one of the great truths of his administration. The quoted portion above and the extracted portion below attest to the humanitarian spirit of the Great Emancipator.

"With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to fin-

The Civil War after four years of destruction and construction ended in April 1865 and President Abraham Lincoln was shot the same month. One-hundred years later the Negro was not yet free. Job, residence, education, social and other types of discrimination, too numerous to mention, were very much evident throughout the land. Progress could be seen in almost every facet of American life but much of this progress could be measured and seen and accepted by the present generation of whites and Negroes.

World War II after four years ended in 1945, the formation of the United Nations in the same year, the rapid growth of Russia, with a hope of extending itself over all areas of the world, the independence agitations of African, Asian, Latin American and other underdeveloped or former colonial peoples, the development in practical religious action the great educational, cultural and economic advances; the Supreme Court, Federal, State and Interstate Commerce Commission decisions rendered in behalf of the Negro, plus a desire on the part of the nation to maintain its position as a leader of the West and of the world all worked in favor of new steps in the right direction for all people. The Negro perhaps benefitted the most, but the United States gained much in the period 1945-1962.

THIRD REVOLUTION

The Civil War was America's third great Revolution. The American Revolution, 1770-1783 and the Jeffersonian-Jacksonian Revolution, 1800-1840 were the first and second great changes in American's political life before the War Between the States. Not only was the vote extended but Negroes gained freedom, citizenship, and the right to marry, own property and to have a business and develop a family of his own. To be more exact the Civil War gave the Negro the right to be a human being in the land of the free and home of the brave, and the right to have opportunity and responsibility for his own life and for the life of his great nation .

Moreover the Civil War united the United States for the first time because the destruction of the Confederacy settled one great constitutional issue — the nature of the Union. After 1865 millions of small white farmers and citizens who formally did not work for wages, send their children to school or have any real hope for advancement in the land of great promise found that they too were citizens of the great nation. By 1900 when the United States had become the greatest industrial na-erick Douglass but all was not completely bright for a revolution of such great change and magnitude takes time. One author put it this way.

"In Mrs. Stowe's day the caste system could not look quite so evil because the American Negro had not yet had reasonable opportunity to show what was in him. The raeists' position as of 1850 had not yet been riddled by the examples of writers like James Weldon Johnson; statesmen like Ralph Bunche; judges like William L. Hastie; scientists like George Washington Carver; Negro organizers like Booker T. Washington and Lester Grainger."

The changes in America and for the Negro, since the Emancipation Proclamation, in spite of handicaps and opposition, have been great and phenomenal. Thousands of young men and women now work and study toward jobs and positions in the main stream of economic life. Negroes are gaining seats in local, state and national government son merit and there are indications that the year 1963 will be a year of new gains, accomplishments and of new orientations, faith and dedication to the American dream, even in greater proportion than any could fairly predict ten years ago.

The nation, except in a few instances, has come to view the Negro as a partner, and an asset, rather than as an alien or liability.

to the accomplishments of her husband.

The ten years of Dr. Johnson's administration at Fisk University represent progress and a contribution to that illustrious institution's distinguished tradition. This has been unique in many respects of cultural and scholastic eminence. The loyalty and devotion of the Fisk Alumni have no parallel or equal among similar institutions. Recently, there have been some comparisons on the relative distinctions of alumni of some colored colleges. Those of Fisk are so outstanding that the mentioning of four names only is sufficient to rest the case for Fisk—DuBois, Franklin, Haynes, and Wesley (Charles).

Dr. Johnson developed at Fisk one of the most comprehensive centers of record for the scientific examination of interracial relations. Each year he brought to Fisk outstanding authorities in this difficult field to conduct seminars which probed into the intricacies of Negro-white problems. The summaries and announcements have been guides during recent years for the most perplexing social problems which have faced the South since the Civil War. These investigations and exchanges had the calm judgment and statesmanlike leadership of Charles Spurgeon Johnson to guide the specialists whom he secured for the Institutes of Racial Relations which he founded and directed. While DuBois originated the ideas in his Atlanta University studies and publications a generation earlier, Johnson assembled his in a series of his books. That what he did was of paramount importance at critical times and since 1954 needs no comment.

MORRIS BROWN COLLEGE

SALUTES THE CENTENNIAL
of the
EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION

DR. FRANK CUNNINGHAM
President

It is quite fitting and proper that Morris Brown College should join the Atlanta Daily World in saluting the one hundred years of Emancipation.

Morris Brown is symbolic of the struggles and travail of the Negro in this country. It was founded in 1881 by underprivileged people whose aim was to educate our people, thus freeing them from poverty, superstition, racial inferiority and second-class citizenship.

Since its founding Morris Brown's course has been up-stream, its battle against the tide. It has had to depend for the most part upon the meager support from Negroes, almost all of whom are poor.

In spite of the uphill struggle that has been Morris Brown's, it has become a first-rate college, holding unconditional membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Its graduates have excelled in education, religion, business, law, medicine, journalism, and other fields.

Morris Brown College is a by-product of the movement began by Richard Allen in 1787, which was the founding of the A.M.E. Church. It is significant that the movement started in the same year and in the same city where the United States Constitution was set in motion. Both were efforts at achieving freedom for Americans. It is also noteworthy that Richard Allen planted the foundation upon which Abraham Lincoln based his Proclamation of Emancipation in 1863.

In fine then, Morris Brown College happily joins the Atlanta Daily World in observing 100 years of freedom.

Organizations Kept The Negro "Inchin Along" For Equality

By GEORGE M. COLEMAN

Individual freedom for the American Negro has been "A Hard Row To Hoe," in stark contrast to the wonderful words of the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution, but unlike the ambigious charge of Southern politicians that the dark man is satisfied, history has shown a steady flow of organizations to "Keep Inchin Along" until the distant star of equality one day is reached.

This has been true, although the nation's historians have cleverly avoided enough detail to show that the racial struggle has been an active thing since the first slave was whipped, the first Negro woman was violated.

Of course, truly organized efforts came with the patient crusade of Booker T. Washington, and were brought into a far more liberal focus with the victory of Dr. W.E. B. DuBois over the outdated ideals of the President of Tuskegee Institute.

And Atlanta, strong in national leadership today, was no less a vibrant force in the battle for equality at the turn of the century when forces were established to lay the ground work of much of what is being done today.

BEGUN BY SLAVES

But the idea of organization to oppose racial indignities seems to have begun with rebellions against slavery itself by slaves, who although they held no conventions, passed no resolutions, are remembered by Negroes for their often futile efforts.

And while names of great white leaders, who fought and died for freedom, should be recalled, it is the emergence of Negroes fighting for themselves to which this article is dedicated.

One of the first organizations to be formed was the National Negro Business League, formed by Mr. Washington at the turn of the century.

Washington, a disciple of Civil War General Samuel Armstrong, first President of Hampton Institute, had placed his emphasis on developing the Negro to become strong in industry to increase his power.

The West Virginian had accepted that desegregation and full equality were long way off, and his famous speech delivered in Atlanta in 1895, declared "When your head is in the lion's mouth, use your hand to pet him."

Georgia's West Point Graduate Flipper Honored

Henry Ossian Flipper died May 5, 1940. He was born in Thomasville, Thomas County, Georgia, March 21, 1856. He was the eldest of five brothers. His mother was the slave of the Rev. Reuben Lucky, a Methodist Minister. Henry Ossian Flipper's father, Festus Flipper, was a shoemaker and carriage-trimmer owned by Ephriam G. Ponder, a slave trader. Young Flipper learned to read in 1864 in a night school; but, when Sherman's Army came, the school had to flee. Flipper attended the Missionary Schools of his area after the Emancipation and finally advanced far enough to study at Atlanta University in the College Department.

Flipper reached the turning point in his career when he secured through J. C. Freeman, the Congressman from his District, an appointment as a cadet at the West Point Military Academy. He passed the entrance examination, was admitted, and made a good standing in his studies. He met with all sorts of insults and discrimination in the worst form, aggravated by newspaper comments that he would be "slaughtered" before graduation. Flipper, however, paid no attention to these persons and their comments and kept on studying. He was graduated with honor with the class in 1877. Of the courtesy and kindness shown him by the professors and officers at West Point Flipper spoke most highly.

Flipper met outside of West Point the same general hostility to a Negro Army Officer which he met as a cadet at the Academy. Wherever he went, military honors were give him only begrudgingly. While the Negroes were highly elated to have him referred to as the first Negro product of West Point, the whites bore it very grievously that a black man had been thus elevated. Flipper did not remain long in the service before charges of misconduct were lodged against him — such charges that one cannot easily refute or prove. General Shafter, it is said, did not like Flipper. He heard that Flipper was spending money rather freely as canteen officer of the regiment. He ordered Flipper arrested and called upon him for an accounting. Flipper produced some of the money for which he was responsible and informed Shafter that the balance was on deposit. Shafter wanted to know where, but Flipper refused to say. He did produce the balance in a few days, but he was dismissed just the same. Under similar circumstances before the Civil War General U. S. Grant was allowed to resign when his friends made up the missing funds. Flipper's friends say that he was "framed." Be that as it may, however, his superiors accepted those complaints as true and he was dismissed from the United States Army.

After leaving the army Flipper worked as an engineer and made a good reputation in this sphere. He operated chiefly in Latin America. Near the end of his career he made his home in Atlanta with his brother, Bishop Joseph Simeon Flipper, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. There the former Lieutenant died May 5, 1940.

JOHNSON IS FIRST GEORGIA SOLON SINCE RECONSTRUCTION

This Emancipation Centennial year of 1963 is being made epochal by the election of Attorney Leroy R. Johnson to The State Senate of Georgia as the first Negro to be a member of The State Legislature of Georgia since Reconstruction Days. He is representing the newly-created 38th District in Metropolitan Fulton County which is result of the reapportionment effort and in which Negroes constitute a 60% majority of the population.

Born in Atlanta on July 28, 1928, Atty. Johnson graduated from B. T. Washington High School in Atlanta in 1945. He received the Bachelor of Arts from Morehouse College in 1949 and the Master of Arts degree from Atlanta University in 1951. At Morehouse his major-minor was Sociology and History while at Atlanta University, his major was Political Science. He subsequently received the LL.B. degree from the North Carolina such appointment.

In his profession of Law, Attorney Johnson has achieved honors and a record of distinguished service. In 1955-56, he was president of the Law School Student Bar Association. He was the first person of color to hold the position of Vice president of the 4th Circuit of American Law Students Association, which is composed of Law Schools in the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Citizens' Democratic Clubs, Chairman of the Fulton County Citizen's Democratic Club and Vice President from Georgia of the Southern Conference of Democrats.

JOHNSON IS FIRST GEORGIA SOLON SINCE RECONSTRUCTION

This Emancipation Centennial year of 1963 is being made epochal by the election of Attorney Leroy R. Johnson to The State Senate of Georgia as the first Negro to be a member of The State Legislature of Georgia since Reconstruction Days. He is representing the newly-created 38th District in Metropolitan Fulton County which is result of the reapportionment effort and in which Negroes constitute a 60% majority of the population.

Born in Atlanta on July 28, 1928, Atty. Johnson graduated from B. T. Washington High School in Atlanta in 1945. He received the Bachelor of Arts from Morehouse College in 1949 and the Master of Arts degree from Atlanta University in 1951. At Morehouse his major-minor was Sociology and History while at Atlanta University, his major was Political Science. He subsequently received the LL.B. degree from the North Carolina School of Law at Durham in 1957.

For four years (1950-54) Atty. Johnson was a teacher of Social Science in the Atlanta Public School System. For the past five years (1957-1962) he was employed as a Criminal Investigator on the Solicitor's General's Staff for the 5th Judicial District — Fulton County — as the first Negro in the Southeastern States to have such appointment.

In his profession of Law, Attorney Johnson has achieved honors and a record of distinguished service. In 1955-56, he was president of the Law School Student Bar Association. He was the first person of color to hold the position of Vice president of the 4th Circuit of American Law Students Association, which is composed of Law Schools in the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland. He is a member of the Georgia Bar Association and Vice President of the Gate City Bar Association.

In Political activities, his wide participation includes membership on the Executive Committee of the Atlanta Negro Voters League, one of the three founders of Atlanta's Junior Voters League, Vice President of the Georgia Association of Citizens' Democratic Clubs, Chairman of the Fulton County Citizen's Democratic Club and Vice President from Georgia of the Southern Conference of Democrats.

In Atlanta, he is a member of Wheat Street Baptist Church, an original member of the Board of Directors of The Atlanta Inquirer, member of the Board of Directors of Campfire Girls, Inc., and member of the Executive Committee of The Atlanta Committee for Corporative Action.

Myth Of The Separate But Equal Status In The U. S.

By DR. T. J. FLANAGAN

"SEPARATE BUT EQUAL"

Well have many court decisions been handed down to the effect that separate education is by no means equal. Strange indeed how on earth could those who devised the term felt that such a fallacy could long endure in the sunlight of reason and truth.

For many years we have had with us those separate projects for education of Negro youths. These were located in Negro communities where the Negro population was dense and were built with all their inferior effects so as to suggest to those who sought a haven there for education, that they were being given inferior advantage in the area of education. Still those faithful teachers among us carried on brilliantly and with such as they had, did a good job.

Today it is a far cry from the "separate but equal" shanties—shanties that cursed Atlanta and the South for many generations. We saw them dotted from Summer Hill all through Pittsburgh, Darktown, Reynoldstown, Roach Street, Mitchell Street and elsewhere. There were a few brick structures here and there like the old Gray Street School, the Summer Hill School and a few where whites moved out and Negroes came in. The Walker Street School, the Ashby Street (later named E. R. Carter, the Capitol Avenue, The Whitefoord Street and so on.

It is encouraging to note that in a later day when the conscious of the city was worrying it and growing pains ached on every side, there came into being a move for the modernization of the system. Schools began to bear names of educators, upstanding citizens, clergymen and business and professional men. This not only gave a new touch, but a better taste and something for youth to strive after.

The H. R. Butler School, on Yonge Street was named for one of Atlanta's first physicians, who not only practiced medicine but was dean of a Nurse Training School at the old Morris Brown College plant on Boulevard. The Thomas H. Slater School was named for another pioneer Negro physician, Dr. Thomas H. Slater who made his footprints on the sands of professional and civic endeavors.

The Charles L. Harper School is one of the finest projects to be found anywhere in the city. It well symbolizes the hard work and true worth of Principal Charles L. Harper who made such a fine record as principal of Booker T. Washington High School in Atlanta, our finest high school in the system.

No name among us in the educational arena shines brighter than that of Mrs. M. Agnes Jones, who was for years Supervisor of Atlanta Negro School System. Mrs. Jones was a former principal and gave the major portion of her life to education in this community and state. The school in West End not only bears her illustrous name, but the street bounding the property on the east is known as Agnes Jones Place.

The old Davis Street School proudly bears the name of Mary McLeod Bethune, that fine South Carolinian who made such a fine contribution in the field of education. She founded the Bethune-Cookman College at Daytona Beach, Florida, and proudly Atlanta has erected a monument to her memory.

On Holly Road, we have the Clarissa Clement School, named for the mother of the Atlanta Board of Education, Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University. The Henry McNeal Turner High School out Anderson Avenue, was named from one of the AME Bishops who was a pioneer Missionary spirit right after the Civil War. He was a great soldier, crusader, member of the General Assembly of Georgia and powerful preacher.

DR. T. J. FLANAGAN

The old Gray Street School has been re-christened the Robert L. Craddock School, pioneer citizen and insurance man, who lived and worked so long in that community. The I. P. Reynolds School is out at Reynoldstown and named for one of Atlanta's pioneer realty operators, who made his home and developed the area bearing his name. On Richardson Street will be found the Edwin Percy Johnson School, named for a pioneer Baptist Minister who was one of Atlanta University's early graduates. The A. F. Herndon School on Simpson Road is another project bearing the name of a wealthy and worthy citizen of Atlanta who not only operated a chain of barber shops, but founded the Atlanta Life Insurance Company.

The beautiful John Hope School on Irwin Street and the Archer School out at Perry Homes are two projects bearing the names of two presidents of Morehouse College. Near the Perry Homes is the Carrie Pitts Elementary School, bearing the name of one of Atlanta's early school teachers and civic leaders. The Jessie Mae Jones School was named for an Atlanta Principal, the late Jessie Mae Jones who made a long and brilliant career in the teaching profession.

The Ashby Street School, taken over for Negro children living in the community was named for Rev. E. R. Carter who was minister of Friendship Baptist Church for 62 years.

Another fine project commemorating the blessed memory of a hard worker, a former educator and business and civic spirit, is the Rosalie Wright Elementary School.

The Charles Gideon School in the old Pittsburgh section is an appropriate memorial to one of Atlanta's top educators of his time.

A fine county school out in the Fairburn section would be the W. A. Fountain School, named for one of the Bishops of the AME Church, who was born at Elberton and who

THE CENTENNIAL OF THE NEGRO-PROGRESS OR CHANGE

By HEMAN M. SWEATT
Associate Director, Southern Region Urban League, Inc.

The period spanning the last twenty-five years has given the Negro in America more "firsts" than he has experienced in the whole of his history. Television, radio, newspapers and magazines remind us daily of these break-throughs, and each such development is accepted as evidence per se of the Negro's climb to equality.

It, therefore, comes as a shock to our equalitarian thesis when the more meaningful balance sheets reveal that these "firsts" have in reality created a mirage by bringing us face to face with the fact that almost negligible change is taking place in the economic gap between the Negro and his fellow citizens.

In evaluating the true economic status of the Negro in America, it is pertinent therefore not only to analyze the level of living of the Negro but also to investigate the difference between Negroes and whites.

This, at any period or in any comparison of periods, leads to a consideration of such related questions as whether Negroes have better or poorer facilities than whites; e. g., whether they have to pay more for the same kind of houses, whether the public economy represents a net benefit or the other way around, etc.

Moreover, it involves a comparative analysis of the number of wage earners per family who are involved in amassing the economic resources for heightening family income and unit standards of living.

Add to this criteria the results of an accurate inquiry into the job inlets that are developing for Negroes as they relate to classification changes constantly taking place in industry, and a host of related factors pertinent to a tally sheet from which to draw proper distiction between change and progress. They are not one and the same; nor does the one flow inevitably from the other.

Therefore, the centennial of the American Negro's change in national legal status is apt to produce, for a period, the largest outflow of "progress reports" on the economic and social status of the American Negro than we have ever witnessed, though most of them will reflect preoccupations with change rather than fundamental improvements as measured against the aforementioned gap.

Interesting enough, the centennial of the Negro's "freedom" arrives at a period of the most problematical industrial transition of the Nation's history —— Automation!

All to suddenly, therefore, the demands educationally, in training and experience, are shifting increasingly distant from the quality of education to which the Negro has been exposed, the training of most pronounced past discrimination and [illegible] experience [illegible] the greatest roadblocks.

The present then tells us much about the past and its impact upon the present "progress status" of the Negro.

As Negro citizens for generations have not benefited equitably from the billions of dollars of public funds spent for federal, state and local programs in employment, housing, health, welfare and education, the question arises as to the extent to which he is any more equitably situated today for the onsetting transitions than he was for the others of the past.

True he stands on the threshold of rights and respects long denied. But rights and respects are empty symbols unless they can be translated into tangible social, economic and cultural gains.

However unpleasant the reminder, the Centennial of Negro "emancipation" finds us too heavily burdened with an 80 percent population that falls between a 20 percent, itself divided between the highly trained and skilled and the hopelessly scarred, permanently demoralized and destined for chronic dependency.

This eighty per cent who fall between these extremes range from below -average to the level of potential genius, who, unless something is done about them, face a midnight of horror and disillusionment unparallel in our history.

Unless we can begin to get entrance jobs into all types of employment, available middle-income housing, good, comprehensive, educational opportunities, this period of centennial observance will prove to be truly the era which Dr. Covant rightly calls "social dynamite' and which in this setting, assumes the potential of a nuclear explosion. Change or progress? A cause for celebration or a warning of the short time ahead to de-fuse the powder-keg?

A New Birth Of Freedom

By E. PAULINE MYERS

The efforts of the Negro to give substance to this freedom, while arousing mixed emotions and provoking much controversy along some fronts, have made their appeals to the noblest aspirations of American life and to the highest precepts of the Judeo-Christian conscience.

They have given rise to the relinquishing of special privileges, the development of concepts of human dignity and individual worth, the widening of opportunities and the lowering of barriers. These values are of the very essence of democracy. The drive and spirit of moral and religious forces to extend the areas of freedom in America and to restore ethical practices abroad must be attributed in a very large measure to the irrepressive and heroic a struggle of the Negro minority to secure these rights to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The fight for Civil Rights — the concept of equality and freedom for all is an American concern in the truest sense of the word. This has been the Negro's historic mission not because he is a saint, not because he is a courageous lover of freedom, but because he is a victim.

Some day when the "clash of color" ceases to exist, someone may write an Odyssey about the Negro's contribution to human progress and his part in the American [illegible] most impressive folk-epics of human history.

To comprehend the Negro in America one must trace his path for eight or nine human generations through a long inferno of chattel slavery and purgatory of testing struggle and development. This must be seen not as something to be explained away, but as a part of the phenomena of history to be approached with scientific objectivity.

EPOCHAL ADVENTURE

Pursued against great odds and oppositions, favored at certain critical times by saving alliances with the forces of social and moral liberalism, the Negro's unending struggle to achieve first-class citizenship has been an epochal adventure. The late James Weldon Johnson has paraphrased it in these immortal lines:

"We have come over a way that with tears has been watered. We have come treading the paths through the blood of the slaughtered. Out of the Gloomy past 'till now we stand at last, where the white gleam of our bright star is cast.

might prevail.

The dedication of inspired, consecrated humane men and women to the causes of Negro freedom, advancement ,equality and human rights, generally, has helped to provide one of the richest spiritual experiences of American life.

In the midst of a hostile world, hardened by custom, and weakened by cowardice, these men and women were among the first to claim on our behalf certain inherent and inalienable rights that we can no longer do without.

HUMAN RIGHTS

With their toil, suffering and blood, they claimed these rights for others not for one race, nor one class — but for all humanity. They recognized, quite simply, a human duty which would have been dishonorable for them not to fulfill — and they fulfilled it. That is where the real value of human rights lies. Some were inspired by conscience, some by reason, some by science, some by charity and others because they were victims — but they all knew that they would not live to see the end of the struggle nor celebrate a victory. Now they are gone, are we therefore to regard these rights as free gifts?

Historians of the future may record this 20th Century as the era of liberation of colonial and sub- [illegible] peoples all over the world. As

NEW YORK — Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, will deliver the Louis T. Wright Memorial Lecture at Harlem Hospital Center, Wednesday, March 6.

This is the tenth annual observance honoring the former director of surgery at Harlem Hospital. Dr. Wright served the hospital for more than thirty years.

He also served as chairman of the NAACP Board of Directors from 1932 to 1952. Dr. Wright pioneered in the fight to secure staff positions for Negro doctors in New York City hospitals.

An authority on the treatment of accidental injuries, particularly fractures of the skull, Dr. Wright also pioneered in cancer and antibioti research.

He was president of the Harlem Hospital Medical Board at the time of his death in 1952. In addition, he was the 25th recipient of the NAACP Spingarn Medal "for his contributions to the healing of mankind . . ."

Disfranchisement Halted Negro Vote

When federal military occupation came to the South at the end of the Civil War, about 70,000 Negroes were added to the voting rolls. Negroes flocked to the polls and many freedmen participated in municipal and state governments.

There were black majorities in Alabama, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi, and the Republican Party took full advantage of the situation and with Negro votes broke the Democratic strong hold.

A good example was the so called "Radical Members" of the South Carolina legislature, elected about this time. Fifty of them were Negro and 13 were white.

Louisiana elected 32 Negro state senators and 95 representatives. Not all the Negroes in Southern politics were illiterate former bondsmen. Some had been born free. Some were even highly educated.

In most cases they worked willingly with whites at law making. A good example of this was Beverly Nash, who in addressing the Constitutional Convention of South Carolina, declared, "We recognize the Southern white man as a true friend of the black man .... In these public affairs we must unite with our fellow citizens."

The first Negro elected to the National House of Representatives was John Willis Menard, of Louisiana. His seat was challenged, and he never served. The first Negro representative to be seated was Jefferson P. Long, of Georgia, who served from 1869 to 1871. Between that time and 1876 thirteen other Negroes were elected to the House from Southern states.

But Southern reaction set in, and with such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan becoming active, disfranchisement arrived. Negro leaders attempted to hold back the tide, but as the century ended the Negro found politics had become all but an impossibility for him in Dixie.

Many have enlisted in the struggle to obtain first-class citizenship for Negroes; some have fallen in the ranks as martyrs to the Great Cause; and others may yet be sacrificed before social justice and consistent democracy are achieved as a practical way of life.

Even today the non-violent movement among Negroes is attracting many white recruits. Notable examples are the sit-ins and freedom riders who have been stoned, beaten and cast into prison for making common cause with Negroes. So, down through the past in every movement for social progress, Negroes and whites have cooperated in order that democratic freedoms might prevail.

They will have made many worthwhile gains, and suffered some agonizing losses. They will know that while much remains to be done, we will never go back.

Now it remains for us the living, to mark this way by which we have come and to rededicate ourselves to the "Unfinished Task" which lies before us:

Partial Freedom In 1863; Full Freedom Today's Goal

(FROM THE NEGRO HISTORY BULLETIN)
By ALBERT N. D. BROOKS

Negro history evaluates both the partial freedom bestowed upon Negroes in 1863 and the steps toward a more complete freedom in 1963. Negro history examines the heroic self-sacrifice of those seeking a fuller freedom in Albany, Georgia, in 1963, as well as the majestic stroke of Abraham Lincoln, which removed the yoke of slavery from millions of Negroes in 1863.

Emancipation is not a static thing. Like freedom, it must be constantly refined. It has been said that Lincoln's battlefield decree of emancipation was a thing of convenience, to promote Union chances of winning the Civil War.

It did not free all the slaves, but only those in states still in rebellion against the United States. Whatever the intent, it had happy results. It gave new hope and strength to anti-slavery forces. Nothing could hold back the crusading zeal which sponsored the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution, and the programs of reconstruction, which were designed to make Negroes free men and citiens.

Nothing, that is, except the "deal" which made Rutherford Hayes President of the United States in 1876. The supporters of Rutherford Hayes sought to appease the former rebels by giving the Ku Klux Klan a free hand, and by using every possible device to discredit the programs of the Reconstruction.

The program of reaction following the Civil War needed justification. Textbook writers cited the works of pro-slavery historians as authority on slavery and reconstruction. Whereas the military forces had stood firm in the face of these evil forces of slavery, many politicians and educators surrendered principles of freedom to the South. Education was producing bigoted whites and Negroes with inferiority complexes, as well as sub-standard education.

Definite progress had been made during Reconstruction prior to 1876. Negroes used the franchise to elect many of their race to state legislatures, and to send a score of their readers to the national Congress. The character and education of many of these Negro legislators compared favorably with that of the white legislators of the period. Several of these Negroes had attended schools of higher education in England and in the North. Others had demonstrated qualities of character and ability based on native intelligence.

White people who came South to help the Negro during Reconstruction were labeled "Carpet Baggers," while liberal southern whites were called "Scalawags." It made no difference to their detractors that many of these whites were in fact educational missionaries, who helped found and operate early schools and colleges for Negroes in the South. Any person who helped Negroes gained a reputation of dishonor.

The first progressive laws in the South were passed during Reconstruction by the so-called "ignorant Negroes, Carpet-Baggers and Scalawags." This maligned group was responsible for establishing the first public school systems and the first public health and works programs in the South. Of course, these great benefits to man are not free as air, so naturally large sums were spent. The chant of the reactionaries of that day was similar to that of their modern counterparts during the administration of F. D. Roosevelt. They accused the Reconstruction legislatures of wasting and stealing public funds in the South, just as the "New Deal" has been accused of waste and corruption in recent times. In both cases, little mention is made of the value to the public of the programs created, which became important features in the American way of life and are accepted as a matter of course today. It is unfortunate that only the related scandal is featured in slanted accounts which have become a part of the so-called history taught from many textbooks. Such is a phase of so-called education, which has persisted to our day.

Between 1876 and 1896, most of the gains of emancipation and reconstruction were lost to Negroes. During these years, Negroes in the South saw the franchise and other rights of citizens denied them by state governments, lawless night rights, and a hostile Supreme Court. "Grandfather" clauses limited the vote to persons whose grandfather could vote. This automatically eliminated the descendants of former slaves. Lest any descendants of free Negroes might seek to exercise the franchise, economic intimidation and lawless brutality constituted an effective bar. By 1896, the South had gained by various subversions what it had not been able to gain on the field of battle. It had relegated the Negro to the category of second-class citizenship and had seen its stand sanctioned by the Supreme Court in the decision in Plessy vs. Ferguson.

The legal sanction of second-class citizenship for Negroes in 1896 all but destroyed the freedoms gained by Emancipation and the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution. To this day, freedom for Negroes has never been fully attained. From Plessy vs. Ferguson to 1954, the marks of second-class citizenship for Negroes were: restricted employment, with most Negroes in menial occupations or jobless; restricted movement, with Negroes denied access to places of public accommodation, or "Jim Crowed"; restricted housing, with Negroes denied the right to purchase or rent properties in most favorable areas; restricted franchise, with the Negro denied the right to vote and hold office; and restricted education, as well as many other restrictions to full enjoyment of citizenship. In varying degrees, many of these restrictions against Negroes are still practiced in many parts of our country, and not in the South only.

The first half of the Twentieth Century witnessed the rise of freedom movements designed to secure a true emancipation and a more complete freedom for Negroes. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) has waged battles in the courts to secure Negro rights. After many years of frustration, NAACP lawyers gained a series of legal victories, highlighted by the Supreme Court's Brown vs- Board of Education decision in 1954. The NAACP has never ended its legal battles in the fight to secure Negro rights, and it still is taking this fight to the state and federal courts on every level.

The National Urban League is engaged in a constructive program to improve opportunities for employment for Negroes in all communities it can reach. In recent years, labor unions, churches, and other organizations have attacked this problem either independently or in cooperation with the Urban League, Although action groups might make spectacular gains in this field, to the Urban League must go the credit for acquainting communities with the facts which arouse clamors for remedies of conditions. The League must get credit also for its part in preparing Negroes for better jobs and in educating employers in the wisdom of hiring Negroes for other than the most menial occupations. The Urban League has rendered, and still is contributing, a great service in the fight for a more complete freedom.

Since 1916, the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History (A.S.N.L.H.) has engaged in research to find and publish the true accounts of the life and contributions of the Negro in this country, and the real nature of the forces that have caused him to be what he is. For those who assert that the Negro is inferior by nature, the A.S.N.L.H. inquires why "Black Code" laws were necessary to prevent Negroes from learning. Why were laws necessary to cause the ears of a Negro to be clipped for learning to write, or for a white man to be punished severely for teaching Negroes to read and write? Negro history has the answers to refute hypocritical stereotyped beliefs.

Aside from its contribution to the intrinsic worth of educational truth, which is of benefit to all mankind, Negro history has a functional value for Negroes. A sense of racial and individual pride comes from the knowledge of the contributions of the Negro to the building of our nation, and especially of the extent of participation by Negroes in all our country's wars. This knowledge can extend to the present, when our fine athletes in baseball, basketball, football and track belie the stereotype of the Negro physical weakling. What should the Negro student believe? Will he accept as fact the material about Negroes wracked with venereal disease, which he sees on a handbill distributed by a white citizens council, or will be he thrilled by the fact that Negroes won victories for the United States in the last Olympic games far out of proportion to their numbers? Or, will the Negro student wonder how a race of physical degenerates can produce the most perfect male athlete, Rafer Johnson and the best female athlete, Wilma Rudolph Ward?

The apparent backward social conditions of Negroes were not self-imposed. From the "Black Code" laws to the most recent racial restrictions, our society has been responsible for the undesirable traits of Negroes about which it now complains. The five hundred thousand free Negroes in the South suffered restrictions to movement and education which were formidable indeed. Millions of slaves were subjected to a designed system of mis-education. The slaves were indoctrinated in ignorance and immorality to the extent that one hundred years of some formal education has not been able to erase all of its vestiges. Progress has been limited further by restrictions to Liberty for Negroes and enforced second-class education up to recent times. Those who understand these past problems are equipped better to solve the problems of the present and the future. To this end, the A.S.N.L.H. has helped to make knowledgeable and to orient the new Negro fighters for freedom.

Emancipation in 1963 is in the hands of the new Negro fighters for freedom. The weapon is non-violence. This movement was begun by southern Negro students who cannot reconcile their educational status with second-class citizenship. Martin Luther King, CORE many clergymen, and others have taken leadership in this movement, which has been joined by many whites. The NAACP and other groups cooperate in various phases of this movement. Although there is much overlapping in efforts, work is advancing in registering Negro voters, protesting segregated public facilities, and fighting legal battles. Albany, Georgia, and Oxford Mississippi, are the fields of battle, where liberty is at the crossroads.

Many gains have been made by Negroes in the past decade. Negro hirings and appointments in government are no longer merely symbolic. The days are gone when two or three plums to Negro leaders wil lsatisfy faithful Negro voters. For example, the large numbers of Negroes in high positions in government under the Kennedy Administration as a far cry from the days when appointment as D. C. Recorder of Deeds was a prime political reward. Advances in desegregation of public schools an dof public accommodation have been encouraging in many areas. Little progress has been made in the area of desegregated housing. Finally, in two or three southern states, there has been no progress at all. A Negro still is restricted. He cannot go to all parts of his country and enjoy its wondrous natural resources and places of public accomodation.

In evaluating Emancipation, Negro History examines and seeks public acclaim for those who have contributed to freedom, whether in 1863 or 1963, or in the years between. At the same time, Negro History seeks to expose the roadblocks to freedom, to point out the conditions which produce second-class citizenship. Although gains for the Negro have been significant, the basis for the theory of gradualism has been discredited. The fight for full Emancipation is not over, in fact, it is really just starting.

Marian Anderson Termed Greatest All-Time Singer

Marian Anderson was a poor girl, born in Philadelphia and brought up in poverty. She was fortunate in having the opportunity to attend a good elementary and a secondary school in that city, and she finished high school at the age of eighteen. She began singing in the choir of the Union Baptist Church, and persons delighted to hear her. A few of them, realizing the greatness of her voice, assisted her in Hayes sought to appease the former rebels by giving the Ku Klux Klan a free hand, and by using every possible device to discredit the programs of the Reconstruction.

The program of reaction following the Civil War needed justification. Textbook writers cited the works of pro-slavery historians as authority on slavery and reconstruction. Whereas the military forces had stood firm in the face of these evil forces of slavery, many politicians and educators surrendered principles of freedom to the South. Education was producing bigoted whites and Negroes with inferiority complexes, as well as sub-standard education.

Definite progress had been made during Reconstruction prior to 1876. DR. RUFUS E. CLEMENT

In the year 1865, the year of "The Surrender" at Appomattax, two mighty impluses began their work for the education of the newly emancipated freedmen in Atlanta. One impulse was from within, the desire of the freedmen themselves to acquire learning. The other was from without, the effective help of friends in the North who were interested in their welfare.

The pioneer missionary to Atlanta was Rev erend Frederick Ayer, who came with Mrs. Ayer from Belle Prairie, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Ayer reached Atlanta on November 15, 1865. Three weeks later they were joined by two young women, sisters, the Misses Rosa and Lucy C. Kinney. The conditions which they found were these:

In an old church building on Jenkins Stre et, now Armstrong, not far from the present City Auditorium, was a small private school which h ad been opened by James Tate and Grandison B. Daniels, two ex-slaves. This was the first school in Atlanta for colored children.

In another part of the city, about four blocks west of the Carnegie Library, fronting north towards Ellis Street, was a railroad car which had just been purchased at Chattanooga by the Association for $310 and brought to Atlanta to serve as a school.

In these two places, far from ideal but the best that could be obtained, the work began. Mr. Ayer and Miss Lucy C. Kinney at the Jenkins Street School, and Mrs. Ayer and Miss Rosa Kinney taught at the Walton Springs School, popularly known as the "Car-Box."

But the ideals of these early workers could not be satisfied with this alone. They felt that the best possible was none too good for the new citizenry of Atlanta and of Georgia. And so a charter was asked from the Superior Court of Fulton County, in which Atlanta is located, for a University. It was signed by eleven men, some white, some colored, in part residents of Atlanta, in part officers of the American Missionary Association. Two of the names were those of Edmund Asa Ware and Frederick Ayer, and a third, Erastus M. Cravath, became later the president of a sister school, Fisk University. This petition was approved and the new corporation, The Trustees of the Atlanta University, came into existence October 16, 1867.

Today, the latest catalog of Atlanta Univer sity lists five schools with various programs for candidates for the Master's Degree: Arts and Sciences, Social Work, Business Administration, Education, and Library Service. All programs of the schools are fully accredited. It lists a faculty of 53 full-time and 14 part-time teachers, 33 of t he full-time ones holding the Ph.D. Degree. It describes a full schedule of cultural events, a lib rary, art collection, and laboratories. It cites publication of Phylon, the nation's leading journal on race and culture.

In the Annual Report of the President of the University, 1962, Dr. Rufus E. Clement wrote:

"The people who were educated at Atlanta University have made substantial contributions in many fields of American life. They have been leaders in education and religion; they have served their fellowmen in law, medicine, dentistry, business and government; they have been nationally recognized spokesmen pleading and working for extension of full democracy to every American citizen, they have gone out into rural areas of our Southland to teach and to inspire the rising generation; they moved into depressed areas of our cities as angels of mercy and of light carrying the gospel of the good life and ministering to the needs of the troubled and dispossessed. On national platforms, under the hard white glare of the spotlights, they have rendered a service to the nation by calling attention to the conditions under which many of its citizens had to live and at the same time have interpreted the hopes and aspirations of a large minority group in its population. They have walked quietly and humbly in unpublicized paths of dignity and service to improve the literacy, skills, living conditions, behavior and attitudes of their fellowmen. All of this and more can be seen in the record of the achievements of those who have been educated in Atlanta University."

Among the names which stand high among the graduates of the University are James Wendell Johnson, author, Walter F. White, author, Richard R. Wright, educator and banker, and Lucy Laney, educator.

DRED SCOTT DECISION BROUGHT A WAR TO REVERSE IT

ON YOUR 100th ANNIVERSARY

Two Major Innovations Of Decision Still In Effect

By JOEL E. COHEN

(Harvard University)

The Dred Scott Decision helped bring about a war to reverse it. Yet two of its major innovations still stand. The first established the power of the Supreme Court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional so as to affect a judicial decision.

The second applied the "due process" clause of the Fifth Amendment to the substance of laws rather than to formal legal procedure for the first time.

Editor's Note: Authorities, such as Homer Carey Hockett and numerous others, state that the "case of Marbury vs. Madison (1830) is memorable because it was the first in which the Court passed upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress."

The majority opinion was represented by "probably the greatest of the chief justices," Roger Brooke Taney.

It has often been attacked as "conservative," but its innovations were actually revolutionary, and began the transformation of due process" into our most important constitutional restriction upon the substance of legislation." These innovations were unaffected by the Civil War and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution, and still are active principles in American constitutional law.

THE HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The Dred Scott Decision involved a slave named Sam, born in 1795 in Southampton County, Virginia, whose owner, Mr. Peter Blow, migrated to Alabama in 1819, and to Missouri in 1827. Mr. Blow took Sam with him to St. Louis, where, under the 1820 Compromise which let Missouri enter the Union, slavery was permitted.

After four years in St. Louis, Mr. Blow died. In 1833 Sam was sold to Dr. John Emmerson, an assistant surgeon in the United States Army. A year later Dr. Emmerson was moved to Ft. Armstrong, in Illinois, a free state since 1818. From there, with his slave, he went to Ft. Snelling (now Minneapolis, Minnesota) in what was then the Wisconsin Territory, free under the Missouri Compromise.

In 1836 Dr. Emmerson bought another slave, Harriet, who married Sam, whose name had been changed to Dred Scott. Their first daughter, Eliza, was born on the steamboat "Gypsy" as Dr. Emmerson was returning down the Missippi in 1838.

When Emmerson died in 1843, his will passed Scott to his widow, sue for his freedom, on the grounds that he had had been held a slave illegally on free Illinois soil.

Scott began proceedings in April 1846, but Mrs. Emmerson won the first trial in the 1847 session of the Missouri Circuit Court. During this time Scott's second daughter, Lizzie, was born. Three years later, in January 1850, a circuit court retrial found for Scott but Mrs. Emmerson appealed the case to the Missouri Supreme Court, which on April 10, 1852, gave a 2-1 decision for Mrs. Emmerson. In effect the decision said that in spite of the legal precedents for granting freedom, it was not the duty of the Missouri courts to carry into effect the laws of other jurisdictions regardless of the rights, policy, and institutions of that state.

In 1850 Mrs. Emmerson married Dr. Calvin C. Chaffee from Massachusetts. Since Missouri laws forbade her to deal in affairs of her first husband's estate, her brother, John F. A. Sandford, from New York, executor of Dr. Emmerson's will, took the case. On grounds suggested by Roswell Field, a St. Louis lawyer, that cases involving diverse citizenship (Illinois, New York, Massachusetts, and Missouri) fall under Federal jurisdiction, the case was carried to the Federal District Court for Missouri in 1854. When Sandford argued that Scott could not sue under a government which does not recognize him as a citizen, the court instructed the jury to find in Sandford's favor.

The case reached the U. S. Supreme Court in 1856. Field asked Montgomery Blair, son of the Jacksonian editor Francis P. Blair, to take Scott's side of the case. Francis Blair and Gamaliel Bailey, editor of "New Era," an Abolitionist paper, agreed to pay the cost of the case. Senator Henry S. Geyer of Missouri took Sandford's defense. The Supreme Court requested a reargument and heard it in December 1856. George T. Curtis assisted Blair and Reverdy Johnson assisted Geyer.

In March 1857, two days after the inauguration of President James Buchanan, the judgement of the Supreme Court was announced.

About this time Sandford died. Chaffee sold Scott for a nominal sum to Taylor Blow, son of Scott's

On September 17, 1858, Scott died in St. Louis.

There was no one Supreme Court opinion. Each of the nine judges wrote his position. Seven said the Scotts were still slaves; two said they were not; three said that even free Negroes were not citizens, and hence could sue; six considered the Missouri Compromise unconstitutional. This majority opinion on the Missouri Compromise was the first time an act of Congress, not relating to the judiciary itself, had been held void by the Supreme Court.

The decision of Chief Justice Taney roughly summarizes the majority opinion.

The question is simply this: Can a negro, whose ancestors were imported into this country, and sold as slaves, become a member of the political community formed and brought into existence by the constitution of the United States, and as such become entitled to all the righs, and privileges, and immunities, guarantied by that instrument to the citizen?

Since "no state can . . . introduce a new member into the political community created by the constitution," Taney inquired whether slaves were considered part of the political community when the constitution was written:

They had for more than a century before been regarded as beings of an inferior order, and altogether unfit to associate with the white race, either in social or political relations; and so far inferior, that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect; and that the Negro might justly and lawfully be reduced to slavery for his benefit.

Although this is incorrectly quoted as a summary of conditions in 1857, Taney intended it as a historical summary of the situation at the time of the creation of the Constitution. The founding fathers could not have included the Negroes in "all men are created equal," for their conduct would have been inconsistent with their words. Further, the 1808 importation clause and the provisions for the return of runaways indicated that slaves were considered property.

. . . no authority beyond these two provisions can be constitutionally exercised. The government of the United States had no right to interfere for any other purpose but that of protecting the rights of the owner, leaving it altogether with the several States to deal with this race, as each State may think justice, humanity, and the interests and safety of society, require.

Since the counsel for the plaintiff stressed the power granted Congress under the elastic clause of the Constitution (Art. 1, Sect. 8, Par. 18, Taney stated that the power of he clause was restricted to the area of the United States at the time of the framing of the Constitution.

And no word can be found in the constitution which gives congress a greater power over slave property . . . The only power conferred is the power coupled with the duty of guarding \d protecting the owner in his rights.

The dissenting opinion of Justice Benjamin Robbins Curtis (1809-1874) was equally vigorous. He argued that the Missouri Compromise was constitutional and that, since Northern states had already recognized them as such Negroes could become citizens. Regardless of the majority opinion, he said, Missouri had already adopted interstate comity, and hence was bound to respect the claims of Illinois. Further, Congressional control over expanding territories had been acknowledged for seventy years. That Congress could not deprive citizens of property without "due process of law" is correct; but, he said, "due process" refers to procedure, not substance. In this, Curtis reflected the interpretation of "due process" which was dominant in 1857. His decision was immediately published as an anti-slavery document. Six months later he resigned from the Court to practice law privately.

Judge McLean wrote an equally elaborate dissenting opinion, while Judge Nelson objected to the Court's entering the political arena, a point supported in Benton's review.

The majority decision was reluctantly accepted in Northern, and even in some Southern, quarters. Thomas Hart Benton, U. S. Senator from Missouri for thirty years and a slaveholder, declared as early as 1844 that he was against introducing slavery into Texas, where it would be a curse.

In 1857 he wrote a lengthy review of the Supreme Court's decision. The power of the court, he said, was limited to cases arising "in law and equity" and hence a political enactment" such as the Missouri Compromise was out of its jurisdiction. The decision, he felt, ignored a gradual extension of constitutional powers: as early as 1803 Congress established a "despotic" government in Illinois territory, transferring theree Indiana judges and the Indiana governor,

Organizations Kept The Negro

Klan and the misery forced upon the Negro, while the government condoned it through a sort of "Gentlemen's Agreement," Washington told Atlantans:

"In all things that are purely social we can be as separate as the fingers, yet one as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress . . . The wisest among my race understands that the agitation of questions of social equality is the extremest folly . . . The opportunity to earn a dollar in a factory just now is worth infinitely more than the opportunity to spend a dollar in an opera house."

This speech, dilivered at the Cotton States' Exposition in Atlanta, was termed by Negro critics as "The Great Booker T. Washington Compromise."

LAUDED BY PRESS

But Washington, who was seeking that which he thought could be attained in his day under existing conditions, won his point. The press across the nation carried his words on front pages, and ignored more liberal Negro expressions, making him in the eyes of white America the official leader of the Negro race.

But here, events began shaping up in Atlanta which were to eventually topple Washington's leadership as a bolder point of view smoldered which would bring new organizations and ideals.

DuBois came to the faculty of Atlanta University and joined hands with Georgia born John Hope in condemning Washington's ideals.

At one point DuBois angrily contended that "Things came to such a pass that when any Negro complained or advocated a course of action, he was silenced with the remark that Mr. Washington did not agree."

But Washington had such a power over the Negro press that few newspapers would oppose him, and although many felt that he advocated leadership of two races, and compromised between North, South and the Negro, he remained in power until July, 1905.

This year at Fort Erie twenty nine Negroes, in answer to a call from Du Bois, gathered to form the Niagara Movement, probably the first liberal organization of the Negro.

The purpose was for "organized and agressive action" in working for rights, freedom and opportunity.

At this meeting Hope, who had become president of Atlanta Baptist College, (Morehouse), was the only high ranking Negro educator who dared align himself openly with the "radical" group which opposed Washington.

FOR FULL EQUALITY

Members of Niagra declared, "We will not be satisfied to take one jot or tittle less than our full manhood rights. We claim for ourselves every single right that belongs to a freeborn American, political, civil, and social, and until we get these we will never cease to agitate, we will never keep silence, and we will never rest."

These meetings became the impetus to the organization of a third meeting which formed the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in 1909 to protest an Illinois lynching.

It was instigated by Miss Ovington, and other white liberals, who saw in the bravery and intelligence of Hope and Du Bois the ripe season for an all out effort against racial inequality.

Moorfield Storey, a white Boston Lawyer, who had been secretary to the great civil war liberal Charles Sumner, became the first president, Du Bois, resigned his position in Atlanta, became the director of publicity and Editor of the Crisis . . .

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

In 1912 the Rosenwald Fund was established, and helped build more than 5,000 public schools for Negroes in the South. This followed the Peabody Education Fund in 1867, The Slater Fund in 1882; the expose racial cruelty.

But about this time Jamaica born Marcus Garvey, convinced that no organization could cause the Negro to prosper in a "white land," began his futile "Back to Africa Movement."

He wasn't the first. A Negro sea captain, Paul Cuffee, had attempted this same thing. This preceded the "American Colonization Society," which settled Liberia, but liberal Negroes condemned it so that colonization with hardly 15,000 Negroes leaving American shores.

RICHARD ALLEN

Perhaps the first real organization by Negroes was formed by religious leader, Rev. Richard Allen, whose fruits stand today as a bulwark in the fight for racial freedom in the form of the A.M.E. Church. Rev. Allen, pulled from his knees while at prayer by a white usher in the St. George Methodist Episcopal Church in Philadelphia, made a firm resolution which lead to establishing an all

William Henry Harrison. Further, of the forty-two who voted against the Missouri Compromise (against 134), all voted on grounds of expediency, rather than those of unconstitutionality. Hence the Supreme Court was nullifying the sacrificing efforts to preserve the unity of the country of both North and South.

Republicans naturally suspected collusion between Democratic politicians and the members of the Supreme Court. To support his specific accusation to that effect, Seward quoted a few words in Buchanan's inaugural address referring to the coming decision, as proof that the president-elect had even been admitted to the secret. In fact, seven of the nine Justices were Democrts and five were Southerners.

In going beyond rendering a simple decision on Dred Scott's freedom, Taney and his supporters hoped to give a final settlement to the disrupting problem of extending slavery to the territories. Instead, the Court aroused the free-soilers and the supporters of popular sovereignty, since any individual could now bring slaves, and with them the institution of slavery, into a territory.

Outraged Republicans, at the time decided that everything Taney wrote not directly pertaining to Scott's freedom was obiter dictum, incidental opinion having no legal force. Southerners in turn were dismayed at the Northern disregard for the Supreme Court as representing the supreme law of the land.

In perspective, the Dred Scott Decision did much at the time to widen the breach between the North and the South. It was a Ft. Sumter on paper. The decision was both conservative and revolutionary, while Taney ignored the changed Federal powers which had evolved in the seventy years since the writing of the Constitution, the results of his innovations are still being felt in American Jurisprudence.

The William J. Scott School, out on Holly Road is a fitting tribute to a promoter, business spirit and community and city factor.

We claim for ourselves every single right that belongs to a freeborn American, political, civil and social; and until we get these rights we will never cease to protest and assail the ears of America."

They declared the power of the Negro hater had flourished, and rights defenders had retreated until the black man's vote was stolen.

Before these liberals could be stopped a second organization came into being. This was the Harper's Ferry convention in 1906.

This meeting was covered by Mary White Ovington, of the New York Evening Post, who became deeply interested in its objectives.

These meetings became the impetus to the organization of a third meeting which formed the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in 1909 to protest an Illinois lynching.

It was instigated by Miss Ovington, and other white liberals, who saw in the bravery and intelligence of Hope and Du Bois the ripe season for an all out effort against racial inequality.

A year earlier, in 1910 the National Urban League was formed to improved industrial and living conditions of city Negroes, with emphasis on opportunity. It was interracial from its beginning, just as was the NAACP.

A few years later, another Atlanta Negro, Walter White, brought the greatest of effectiveness to the NAACP, often risking his life to expose racial cruelty.

But about this time Jamaica born Marcus Garvey, convinced that no organization could cause the Negro to prosper in a "white land," began his futile "Back to Africa Movement."

He wasn't the first. A Negro sea captain, Paul Cuffee, had attempted this same thing. This preceded the "American Colonization Society," which settled Liberia, but liberal Negroes condemned it so that colonization with hardly 15,000 Negroes leaving American shores.

Other religious groups of Baptists and Methodists sprang up with similar ideals. The first Negro Baptist convention was formed in Savannah, Ga., in 1779.

These efforts followed the organized slave rebellions of Gabriel Prosser, Denmark Vesey, Nat Turner and John Turner.

They preceeded the organization of the Underground Railway, the Negro Press, Abolition Society and Free Soil Convention. There were others, and the combined efforts kept the Negro "inchin Along" until today where Christian leadership, student, labor and educational efforts have brought the race that much closer to the still distant star of equality.

She made a very favorable impression. Engagements followed rapidly after that success. In 1925, Moreover, when the New York Philharmonic Orchestra offered a prize for the best soloist at the Lewisohn Stadium in that city Marian Anderson was chosen as the best among three hundred competitors. It is said that when the director of this orchestra heard her sing he jumped to his feet and clapped his hands, exclaiming that a voice like that had not been heard in a hundred years.

Marian Anderson then with these great honors upon her studied abroad and made a concert tour of Europe. She appeared in all of the important musical centers in England, Germany, Norway - Sweden, Austria, France, Czechoslovkia, and Russia. Kings and Queens came to listen. The League of Nations invited her to sing before that body. Returning to America, she was hailed as a truly great singer. The President invited her to appear before him at the White House. The music lovers flocked to her concerts. The best critics of the country join in saying that she is not only a great singer who would make any race proud but one of the greatest of all time.

Lucy Craft Laney, School Founder, Aided Native Ga.

Miss Lucy Craft Laney who died on October 23, 1933, was born in Macon, Georgia, April 13, 1854. She was the daughter of the Reverend David and of Mrs. Louisa Laney. Her father was a Presbyterian minister, born a slave in Sumter, South Carolina, in 1814. Because of the esteem in which his mistress held him he was allowed to choose his own vocation. He chose the carpenter's trade; and, being thrifty at it, he accumulated enough money with which to buy his freedom. After purchasing himself, he went to Macon, Georgia, in 1836. A number of masters hired him to teach their slaves carpentry. Many of the colonial residences of Macon were built by him and his apprentices.

He was interested in religion, and early joined the Presbyterian Church in which he worked toward Holy orders. He was one of the three men ordained by the white Presbyterian Church of Macon for the ministry, viz., Joseph Williams, Robert Carter, and David Lane. He was one of the most outstanding Negroes in Macon. When Lee surrendered it was David Laney who rang the bell of the Washington Avenue Presbyterian Church to call the Negroes together to tell them that they were free. This was the first knowledge that Negroes of Bibb County had of the general emancipation.

The mother of the subject of this sketch, Louisa Laney, was purchased at the suggestion of Miss Campbell who saw her in a band of roving Indians and begged her father to purchase this likely little girl. Louisa Laney did not know how she came into the possession of the Indians neither what her name was nor anything about her parents. She became a personal maid to Miss Campbell who taught her to read and write. At the age of 13 she married David Laney who purchased her freedom from Miss Campbell and moved her to a home of his own where they began the struggles of life.

There were ten children born to them, six girls and four boys.

Lucy Craft Laney was the seventh child. She was a normal, rollicking girl who played with others but always held her own. She was taught to read and write at the age of four and owes her early education to her mother who realized the importance of thorough training. Her mother's duties kept her in Miss Campbell's library a great deal, and Lucy snuggled there in the big chair, reading fairy stories and other books while her mother dusted the book shelves. Her ability was noted by Miss Campbell who selected books for her education and with this personal interest saw to it that she enter Atlanta University at the age of fifteen. Her preparatory education had been obtained at the Lewis High School, now known as Ballard Normal School. Mrs. Georgia Swift King, a classmate of Miss Laney work. In 1883 she rented the lecture room of the Christ Presbyterian Church. Five children came. Three years later, January 6, 1886, the school was chartered as a Normal and Industrial School under the law of Georgia.

Miss Laney founded her own school because she wanted all sides of pupil's life developed, which was not possible under the public school system. By the end of the first year the school had an enrollment of 75, and at the end of the second year the enrollment was 234. She took in children so young that they knew no mother except her.

The white ladies in the neighborhood of the Christ Presbyterian Church complained that the noise of the children at play disturbed them, and so she looked for another place for her school. A frame building in the 800 block of Gwinnett Street was rented, and the work continued. Due to over-crowded conditions here Mr. Platt, a local white undertaker, allowed her the use of a two - story frame structure on lower Calhoun Street with a barn in the rear which she converted into classrooms by means of partitions. The school faced real hardships; no money, debts, fire and flood. Following the flood, typhoid fever broke out; and Miss Freeman, the first teacher who came to work with Miss Laney, died.

Although the Presbyterian Board sanctioned the school it did not see its way clear to maintain it. Acting upon the advice of a Presbyterian minister in Augusta, she made her way to the General Assembly in 1887 which met at Minneapolis. She left home with just enough money to buy her ticket one way. Fatigued from the trip, she fell asleep after entering the meeting of the Assembly. Awakened to speak, she encountered jealously on the part of others who were there to present their case. Seeing their attitude, she merely presented the needs of the school and asked only for her fare back home. She warned her hearers that some day she would have a school that they would hear from. Time has proved her statement true.

ONLY MORAL SUPPORT

so became interested through Miss Laney's visit to the Minneapolis Assembly gave $40,000 for the erection of Marshall Hall used for dormitory, dining room, library and classroom purposes.

Other things of consequence developed. In 1896, Miss Mary C. Jackson came to Miss Laney as Associate principal and remained until May 1916 when she left to become the wife of Dr. H. L. McCrorey, president of Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, North Carolina. In 1906 Mrs. McCrorey, her mother as a midwife. They are now retired.

She was responsible for the first trained nurses in the city of Augusta. She urged the establishment of such work, gave the first ten girls, and persuaded a white graduate nurse from Canada to come and take charge of the training. Miss Laney sought to improve sanitation in Augusta, especially in the Negro district. Her school was the first in the city to uniform girls, and the first organized football team in the city went out from this school. She pioneered also in kindergarten instruction in this section where it was not generally known. She called from the North a teacher thoroughly prepared for this work and opened the first kindergarten in Augusta. She found time also to conduct teachers' institutes in the eastern part of the state.

Her influence was not only felt in the schoolroom but, also in the Sunday School. She taught the children to sing by note lively songs in place of the doleful hymns sung ordinarily at church services. Many of the churches were without musical instruments, so she always carried her tuning fork for which she is remembered by many of the older citizens of Augusta. She stopped what was known as "Egypt Walking" in Augusta a sacriligious and unbecoming religions ceremony engaged in on New Year's Eve. With a bold stroke she put an end to it, and never again has it been engaged in in Augusta since her dramatic crusade against it.

She considered Haines the people's school and its buildings and grounds were always at the disposal of the community for various enterprises. In the World War there were enlisted 178 Haines students, four of whom were lieutenants with a number non-commissioned officers; and the first Augusta boy to give his life overseas in that great conflict was a student of Haines. She organized thrift clubs, her students bought war savings stamps, and many of them opened bank accounts.

To speak of her strong points we should emphasize her independent spirit, her courage or conviction, her long suffering in the midst of hardships rather than compromise a situation, her power as a disciplinarian, and her personality as expressed in her orderly student body. She strove to have a school good enough for any body to visit. She was stern; but because she knew how to be human, her pupils loved her and respected her. She always sought to find the good in people regardless of their appearance. She thought of persons as persons regardless of race, color, or achievement. She always said that she wanted to teach ladies and gentlemen and sought to instill that principle, saying, "God has nothing to make men and women out of but boys and girls," and so she taught her pupils to be men and women and not just good "colored persons.' Said she, "I am as good as anybody else; God had no different dirt to make me out of than that used in making the first lady of the land." Her primary object in all her teaching was character- building. "No man," says Miss Laney, "is judged by the superficial informacarpenter, her mother as a midwife. They are now retired.

The Chilsholms made it possible for Lentyne to study at the Julliard School of Music in New York. It wasn't long before her ability as a singer indicated that her future lay as a vocalist rather than as a pianist.

Her singing partner in the 1952 revival of "Porgy" was the renowned baritone, William Warfield. As the musical progressed the two were drawn closer together and were married in 1952. They have no children.

The operatic venture that first drew Leontyne to the attention of music critics as well as an enthusiastic public was the NBC-TV opera, "Tosca." It was sung in an English translation done by John Gutman.

Hard work is something she doesn't worry about. On a trip to Europe in 1958 she was engaged to sing in Vienna, Berlin and London. Fially she was signed for an appearance at the famed La Scala Opera House in Milan. She was the first Negro to appear there in a major role and was a brilliant success.

She sings the role of Leonora in a recent Victor release of "Il Trovatore" in which she co-stars with the late baritone, Leonard Warren. In another recording, Verdi's "Requiem," her singing is regarded as the finest in this masterpiece on disks.

MERCER COOK
U. S. Ambassador to the Republic of Niger

Mercer Cook was sworn in June 28, 1961 as United States Ambassador to the Republic of Niger.

Born in Washington, D. C., on March 30, 1963, the Ambassador attended Amherst College where he received his bachelor's degree with Phi Beta Kappa honors in 1925. He later undertook postgraduate studies at Brown University and was awarded his A. M. degree by that university in 1930 and his Ph. D. in 1936.

From 1936 to 1943, Mr. Cook was a member of the faculty of Atlanta College in Atlanta, Georgia. He left that position in the latter year to become Superintendent of English teaching in the Republic of Haiti. After two years in Haiti the Ambassador returned to the United States to accept an appointment as Professor of Romance Languages at Howard University. Mr. Cook remained at Howard for fourteen years and then went to Paris to become Director of the African Affairs Program of the Congress of Cultural Freedom. He retained that post until his present appointment.

Ambassador Cook is married to the former Vashti Smith and they have two sons.

A LEGEND . . .

One night in ancient times, three horsemen were riding across a desert. As they crossed the dry bed of a river, out of the darkness a voice called ing Indians and begged her father to purchase this likely little girl. Louisa Laney did not know how she came into the possession of the Indians neither what her name was nor anything about her parents. She became a personal maid to Miss Campbell who taught her to read and write. At the age of 13 she married David Laney who purchased her freedom from Miss Campbell and moved her to a home of his own where they began the struggles of life.

There were ten children born to them, six girls and four boys.

Her ability was noted by Miss Campbell who selected books for her education and with this personal interest saw to it that she enter Atlanta University at the age of fifteen. Her preparatory education had been obtained at the Lewis High School, now known as Ballard Normal School. Mrs. Georgia Swift King, a classmate of Miss Laney at Atlanta University, says that Miss Laney was one among a group selected by the American Missionary Association to form a class at Atlanta University, and she believes that the authorities made no mistake but rather did themselves honor when they selected Lucy C. Laney, for she proved herself a most brilliant student, graduating in the first class in 1873.

TAUGHT IN GA. SCHOOLS

After graduation she immediately entered the teaching profession. For ten years she taught in the public schools of Macon, Milledgeville, Savannah, and Augusta. She left Augusta and returned to Savannah, and it was while she was at Savannah the second time that Rev. Mr. Allen, a representative of the Board of Freedmen persuaded her to return to Augusta for mission building in the 800 block of Gwinnett Street was rented, and the work continued. Due to over-crowded conditions here Mr. Platt, a local white undertaker, allowed her the use of a two - story frame structure on lower Calhoun Street with a barn in the rear which she converted into classrooms by means of partitions. Time has proved her statement true.

ONLY MORAL SUPPORT

The school was taken under the care of the Board of Freedmen, but still they could give the institution only moral support. The trip, however, was not in vain. At this assembly she met Mrs. Haines who became so thoroughly interested in Miss Laney and her work that she used her influence among friends. Miss Laney was so impressed with her that she named her school in her honor. Finally after months of deprivation and suffering, the board began to give some financial aid such as paying teacher's salaries in part or whole and providing for some of the maintenance. This aid with gifts from friends in the North enabled Miss Laney to carry on. Later the school was moved from Calhoun Street to its present site on Gwinnett Street. Mr. Rowan served in the United States Navy from 1943 to 1946 and attained the rank of Ensign. He served in the North Atlantic as a Communications Officer on a Fleet Tanker. Mr. Rowan has the distinction of having received three successive awards in 1954, 1955 and 1956 for general and foreign reporting.

so became interested through Miss Laney's visit to the Minneapolis Assembly gave $40,000 for the erection of Marshall Hall used for dormitory, dining room, library and classroom purposes.

Other things of consequence developed. In 1896, Miss Mary C. Jackson came to Miss Laney as Associate principal and remained until May 1916 when she left to become the wife of Dr. H. L. McCrorey, president of Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, North Carolina. In 1906 Mrs. McGregor of Detroit gave $5,000 for the erection of the second building which is now used for classrooms for the high school and the chapel In 1924 Mrs. Wheeler through the influence of her nurse companion, Miss Mary Cauley, a former student of Haines, gave $10,000 for the Cauley - Wheeler Memorial Building which was built to take care of the primary work. The school grew, then, from one teacher and one classroom to 3 4teachers, 900 pupils, and three brick buildings with a number of cottages and frame structures.

Exercising vision, Miss Laney availed hrself of every opportunity to serve the community. When the hospital was burned in Augusta she opened her school for the sufferers, and they were cared for until quarters could be provided.

lies with a number non-commissioned officers; and the first Augusta boy to give his life overseas in that great conflict was a student of Haines. She organized thrift clubs, her students bought war savings stamps, and many of them opened bank accounts.

To speak of her strong points we should emphasize her independent spirit, her courage or conviction, her long suffering in the midst of hardships rather than compromise a situation, her power as a disciplinarian, and her personality as expressed in her orderly student body. She strove to have a school good enough for any body to visit. She was stern; but because she knew how to be human, her pupils loved her and respected her. She always sought to find the good in people regardless of their appearance. She thought of persons as persons regardless of race, color, or achievement. She always said that she wanted to teach ladies and gentlemen and sought to instill that principle, saying, "God has nothing to make men and women out of but boys and girls," and so she taught her pupils to be men and women and not just good "colored persons.' Said she, "I am as good as anybody else; God had no different dirt to make me out of than that used in making the first lady of the land." Her primary object in all her teaching was character- building. "No man," says Miss Laney, "is judged by the superficial information afforded by his clothes."

Her last days were those of inactivity brought on by excessive work, but she did not give up until she could go no further. Many would have retired when the ravages of disease came, but not so with Lucy Laney. Said she, "I want to wear out, not to rust out." Truly she wore herself in the service of her people and then sat quietly in the twilight of life waiting for the call from labor to reward.

Over five thousand sad hearts made their way to the bier of their fallen leader, thus showing their love and respect.

Leontyne Price, Singer Of Decade

LEONTYNE PRICE
Opera Singer

Miss Price originally set her sights on a career as a music teacher. She studied piano as a child and later as a student at Central State College in Wilberforce, Ohio.

She had always sung but had not given serious thought to an opera or concert career until her last year in college. When it became evident to her teachers that she should sing for the public instead of teach, they encouraged her to try for a scholarship to the Julliard School of Music.

Miss Price was born in Laurel, Mississippi. As a child she loved music. Her youthful musical activities followed the usual pattern — singing in school and with the local church choir. She also studied the piano and impressed everyone with her obvious musical gifts.

She was fortunate in being a close friend of the Alexander Chisholm family of Laurel. Chisholm, a banker, and his wife, Elizabeth, took a keen interest in Leonytne. The soprano always refers to Mrs. Chilsholm as her second mother.

The friendship developed after an aunt of the singer got a job as a domestic in the banker's house. Miss Price's father worked as a music critics as well as an enthusiastic public was the NBC-TV opera, "Tosca." It was sung in an English translation done by John Gutman.

Hard work is something she doesn't worry about. On a trip to Europe in 1958 she was engaged to sing in Vienna, Berlin and London. Fially she was signed for an appearance at the famed La Scala Opera House in Milan. She was the first Negro to appear there in a major role and was a brilliant success.

She sings the role of Leonora in a recent Victor release of "Il Trovatore" in which she co-stars with the late baritone, Leonard Warren. In another recording, Verdi's "Requiem," her singing is regarded as the finest in this masterpiece on disks.

After two years in Haiti the Ambassador returned to the United States to accept an appointment as Professor of Romance Languages at Howard University. Mr. Cook remained at Howard for fourteen years and then went to Paris to become Director of the African Affairs Program of the Congress of Cultural Freedom. He retained that post until his present appointment.

Ambassador Cook is married to the former Vashti Smith and they have two sons.

A LEGEND . . .

One night in ancient times, three horsemen were riding across a desert. As they crossed the dry bed of a river, out of the darkness a voice called "halt", they obeyed. The voice then told them to dismount, pick up a handful of pebbles, put the pebbles into their pockets, and remount. The voice then said "you have proven your obedience, tomorrow at sunrise you will be both glad, and sorry." Mystified the horsemen rode on: at sunrise they reached into their pockets, and found that a miracle had indeed happened — the pebbles had been transformed into diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones. They remembered the warning, they were both glad, and sorry — glad that they had taken some, sorry that they had not taken more . . . and . . .

DORIE MILLER

Died At Pearl Harbor

HERO OF PEARL HARBOR — Dorie Miller received the Navy Cross on May 27, 1942, from Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Fleet. Miller was given this high honor for his heroism during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. While the battle raged in its greatest fury, Miller carried his wounded captain to safety from the bullet spattered bridge of his battleship. Still under constant fire, Miller returned to man a machine gun for the rest of the engagement. Dorie Miller was one of a long line of Negro defenders of our nation, who have been given temporary recogniton as heroes but have been omitted from the history books used to teach each new generation concerning the glorious tradition of our country.

W.C. Handy, "Father Of Blues," Set High Mark

William Christopher Handy was born in Florence, Alabama, November 16, 1873, the son and grandson of Methodist Episcopal ministers. While living in Memphis, Tennessee, he organized a band for which he arranged all the orchestrations. In 1909 he made use of the saxophone. The story of the first "Blue" song to be written is an interesting one. It places the date of the new name in the domain of ragtime as that of 1909-10. Musical America reported:

"In 1090 the fight for the Memphis mayoralty was three-cornered, the corners being Messrs. Williams, Talbert and E. H. Crump. There were also three leading Negro bands: Eckford's Bynum's, and Handy's. As a matter of course the services of these three were engaged for the duration to demonstrate to the public the executive ability of their respective employers; through Jim Mulcahy, a ward leader, before whose saloon the Handy forces ha dotten serenaded, his candidate turned out to be Mr. Crump. This was a matter of moment, involving the organization of sub-bands in order to cover all possible territory, and Handy was spurred to creative effort, which he happened to exercise through the aid, not of remembered tunes, but of that blues form which had, without analysis, somehow imbedded itself in his thoughts. His band opened fire at the corner of Main and Madison with a piece (named, of course, "Mr. Crump'), of such vivacity that it caused dancing in the streets and an outbreak of public whistling. With such a song, and none like it forthcoming from Eckford's or Bynum's, the popular choice (Crump and Handy) was a foregone conclusion; the one became Mayor, the other locally famous, the sought-after for all celebrations, the writer of manuscripts of his one lion - child for the belles between numbers at the dances, the magnificently tipped accordingly by their beaux; the proprietor of a whole chain of bands, sending out nearly ninety men to this quarter and that of a sigle night." Thus did a new form win immediate recognition for itself and its instigator and a political conflict at the same time.

MUSIC BECOMES RAGE

In 1912, when W. C. Handy found it difficult to market his wares, he disposed of his copyright to the Bennett Company that had George Norton write words to fit the melody. The Pace and Handy compositions, lyrics by Harry H. Pace and music by William C. Handy, became the rage and the partners decided to migrate to New York. Before 1916, the 'Memphis Blues" had been followed by many others in like vein, and they soon became favorites on phonograph records. White musicians visited the Pace and Handy Publishing house in New York, listened to the "St. Louis Beale Street, The Harlem, Golden Brown, and Loveless Love Blues," and departed to imitate the wailing, moaning, "careless rapture" or badman sentiment of Handy' output. Primarily a lament over the loss of a lover, the structural form of the it to say that the blues architecture is admirably adapted to the impromptu song and versification alike. Just as the stanza had three lines instead of the two or four normal to simple verse, so the voice would sing (always in two-four time L2 instead of the normal 8 or 16 bars to the strain, each like being complete in 4 bars of the air. As each line usually expressed a thought which, with a period after it, would stfil make sense, so the air with the last syllable of each line would return to the keynote or the tonic third or fifth ,so that the whole presented a period of 3 semi - independent phrases (separated, as will be shown, by noticeable intervals) instead of one sustained flight — with successive bizarre effects of internal finality and of final incompleteness.

"Regularly in folk-blues the last syllable of each line thus coincides, not only wth the key-note or another element of the tonic major triad, but with the first beat, third bar, or its corresponding four bars of music, leaving seven quick beats or three slow ones (according to time signature) before the melody proper resumes its motion."

Handy's Blues, and Anthology, received wide notice by reviewers. Edward Burlingame Hill, writing in The Christian Sicence Monitor, spoke of the book as "material for close study of the Blues" . . . A practical and stimulating collection." Sigmund Spaeth in The Bookman, described the work as one that "provides a variety of amusement and edification for the reader or performer, with no great demands, in general, upon his musical sense or ability." It covers the entire field of this type folk secular music and includes excerpts from the piano concerto "Rhapsody in Blue" or George Gershwin."

Lieutenant John Niles in his book, Singing Soldiers, gives an example of what he calls "The Deep-Sea Blues." It is a most amusing song extemporized by illiterate Negro Soldiers who were sent from the Mississippi bottom to Hoboken, where they were put to work on the docks. One day, what they thought was the warehouse floated away. In Bordeaux they sang, "Everybody in Hoboken town, Everybody an' Me — Hopped upon a warehouse that was swinging around, An' went to sea. Oh, all day I'se a looking for trees, Lookin's for sand, Lookin' for land—"Cause I've got dose awful weepin,' sleepin' — Got dose awful sailing', wailin' — Got dose awful deep -sea blues."

There is now in vogue a low type song of sentimentality called the "Torch song" practiced by the Nudists of the musical world, in which the whining voice complains of unrequited love. These songs probably are taken from the "Blues," But they are in no sense a development or an improvement. Gilbert Selds pithily says in The New Republic, "None of these approaches in words or music the high level of the early blues — especially the work of Mr. Handy .... Apart from being a goo dcomposer, Handy was in part recording and in part giving the essence of a simple emotion in terms which are well nigh universal."

William Christopher Handy died March 28, 1958 at the age of 84 in New York City after ailing with blindness several years. Mayor Tucker of St. Louis proclaimed April 10, 1958 as Handy Day. Twenty-five bands from as many schools consisting of 1,200 secondary pupils played the St. Louis Blues and the Board of Education closed schools in St. Louis a half-day. A 20 - foot photograph of Handy was displayed n the City Hall with other elaborate tributes to Handy who contributed so much to the City of St. Louis. Ex-President Harry Truman secured a rare collection of Handy's published songs for his great library at Independence, Missiouri These are facets of American cultural history whose deep roots sink into the African background. They have flowered and flourished in America in spite of the efforts of so-called American sociolgists white and Negro who have sought in vain to discredit any inheritance among American colored people from Africa!

Primarily a lament over the loss of a lover, the structural form of the exotic music was carried from the cabarets to the vaudeville stage and to the not over fastidious radio audience. When Handy was about to be lost sight of as the originator of this distinctive specialty in Negro song, he made the announcement that he had released a new form, an evolution of the "Blues," and one which he believed would succeed the earlier style for which he was responsible. This he called the GOUGE, and states that he would protect its use by a trademark. He declared that his invented music would meet the requirements of a symphony orchestra.

The Folk-Blues as Music: 46 Blues, an Anthology by William C. Handy, with an introduction by Abbe Niles, The composer describes the structure of his music. He says:

"The structural peculiarities of the blues tunes may be the result of those of the stanza, more likely the reverse is the case but suffice man, described the work as one that "provides a variety of amusement and edification for the reader or performer, with no great demands, in general, upon his musical sense emotion in terms which are well nigh universal."

WELL, good people, there they are. I mean, here we are. You are looking at the ATLANTA WORLD'S 100 PER CENT WRONG CLUB. Those guys up there above this article are going to pick you the winners of every major Negro game this year. That is very nice, don't you think? See, all you have to now is buy a Friday issue of the WORLD beginning this week and all the games will be tabled off and predicted for you.... even the scores!

"RIC"

A group of intelligent guys like those up there ought to be able to do it. Look at those brows, and that intellectual gleam in Hubert Jackson's eye.

All the guys think they are experts except a very few. It will be interesting to see who is the most ignorant man in this bunch.. ought to be a hard job. We hope you like the club. We listed Higginbotham because he thinks he's good; Shelton Coles, because he once doped horses at New Orleans and because he yells for Morehouse; Jimmy Perry because he "knows he wont be last"; Hubie Jackson because he is an entrepreneur of sports events; W. A. Hamilton because Chunn says he is gifted. (I cooked up this rattled brained idea) Hollingsworth because he is the only guy, as far as we know, who went through a whole season without failing to pick the right team, and because he loves Clark: Turrentine because he's seen both CIAA and SIC teams and should be good; J. Negro Press Dates To Pre-Civil War Era

By STANLEY S. SCOTT

The Negro press in America, which has a combined circulation of more than two-million copies and numbers 200 weeklies and two dailies, has a history dating back to pre-Civil War days.

This year marks the 133rd anniversary of the Negro press. The function of the Negro press down through the years has been primarily to give the Negro dignity and respect and the will to fight for first class citizenship and full opportunity for growth and development.

The Negro press, sometimes accused of being flavored but always militant and in the forefront of the fight for fulfillment of minority aspirations, has more than justified its existence as worthwhile service institution to the community. It has often been stated with good reason that there will always be a place for the Negro press, if, only for the purpose of recording in print things about the Negro that the white press censors.

The first Negro newspaper to emerge on the American scene was Freedom's Journal, published in New York in 1827 by Samuel E. Cornish, pastor of the African Presbyterian Church and John Russwurm, a Bowdoin graduate and the first Negro in the United States to receive a college degree.

The North Star, established in 1847 by Frederick Douglass in Rochester, New York, was the most famous of the early papers. In 1870, there were 10 Negro newspapers; twenty years later there were 154. All of these papers grew out of the vile attacks on Negro Americans and served as a historical record of racial injustices.

The Negro press in America has a proud legacy of having hammered away at racial indignations and has continued to serve as a critic of discrimination, in bold black headlines, whenever it has been uncovered.

FIRST NEGRO DAILY

The first Negro daily newspaper in the United States was the New Orleans Tribune, printed in both French and English, which ran as a daily for one year in 1865, then reverted to a weekly.

However, the founding of the Atlanta Daily World in August, 1928, and its later daily newspaper run on March 13, 1932 marked the advent of America's first daily newspaper in America in the twentieth century and the only Negro daily publication since 1865. The World was later joined by the Chicago Defender as a daily paper in 1955.

The Atlanta Daily World was founded by the late W. A. Scott II, and was published as a weekly until the spring of 1930 when it became a semi - weekly.

The World has since grown to a 20,000 circulation in the Atlanta metropolitan area, with a total circulation of more than 50,000, which includes the Memphis World, Birmingham World, Chattanooga Observer, Florida Spur, Alabama Tribune, Columbus World, Southwest Georgian, and also weekly editions of the World to Augusta, Ga., Macon, Ga., Brunswick, Ga., and a national edition that makes its way to other sections of the southeast.

W. A. SCOTT II

OTHER LEADERS

Among the other publications that have carried on the editorial protest against racial discrimination in the armed forces and in war jobs, and in the denouncement of race riots, civil rights abuse, we must mention the Pittsburgh Courier, Afro-American, Norfolk Journal and Guide, Chicago Defender, The Crisis, Cleveland Call-Post, Louisville Defender, Amsterdam News, and numerous others that have served to help keep the spark of freedom burning.

Among Negro magazines, Ebony, Jet, and Our World made marked circulation successes after 1945.

This Negro press from "across the tracks," that has a national news agency in the Associated Negro Press, and the National Negro Publishers Association which is composed of dedicated publishers, and makes no bones about its policy of protest, has maintained the vigil at democracy's door steps. The solid importance of the agency lies not in its hardhitting editorial attacks alone, but in the fact that it provides employment and a vast platform for Negro leadership, serves as a coordinator for any mass action the race is impelled to take and is a most fundamental instrument of public education.

Negro newspapers are honest, faithful and indeed biased to the Negro's cause. In fact, the logic of their very existence compels them to be such organs. They have an influence in American life. The Negro press looks out on the world as one community and mankind its citizens.

The Negro press strives to remind us that as men everywhere seek freedom, there must be a growing realization that as long as men are not free everywhere, men are not free anywhere; therefore it seeks to impress upon the Negro people the importance of wanting and seeking equality, and participation in making and administering of the laws under which they must live on all levels.

Not only has the Negro press concerned itself with the problems of Negroes in America, but also with the problems of minorities everywhere.

WELL, good people, there they are. I mean, here we are. You are looking at the ATLANTA WORLD'S 100 PER CENT WRONG CLUB. Those guys up there above this article are going to pick you the winners of every major Negro game this year. That is very nice, don't you think? See, all you have to now is buy a Friday issue of the WORLD beginning this week and all the games will be tabled off and predicted for you . . . even the scores!

"RIC"

A group of intelligent guys like those up there ought to be able to do it. Look at those brows, and that intellectual gleam in Hubert Jackson's eye.

All the guys think they are experts except a very few. It will be interesting to see who is the most ignorant man in this bunch.

Ought to be a hard job. We hope you like the club. We listed Higginbotham because he thinks he's good; Shelton Coles, because he once doped horses at New Orleans and because he yells for Morehouse; Jimmy Perry because he "knows he wont be last"; Hubie Jackson because he is an entrepreneur of sports events; W. A. Hamilton because Chunn says he is gifted. (I cooked up this rattled brained idea) Hollingsworth because he is the only guy, as far as we know, who went through a whole season without failing to pick the right team, and because he loves Clark. Turrentine because he's seen both CIAA and SIC teams and should be good; J. C. Chunn because he's been hacking sports articles since 1926 and pulls for Morris Brown; Lucius Jones [illegible]

William Edward Burghardt DuBois was born in New England five years after the Emancipation Proclamation.

He was also raised there, which may explain the austere sense of righteousness that dominated his thought and finally turned it into bitter rebellion. To be more specific, W. E. B. DuBois was a product of the state of Massachusetts, the home of William Lloyd Garrison's cold and absolute abolitionism.

The ancestry of Dr. DuBois became his creed and then his obsession.

He wrote his doctoral thesis on "The Suppression of the African Slave Trade to the United States," a study that became the first volume published in the Harvard Historical Studies series.

He lavished his brilliance as an historian, teacher, sociologist and writer on one subject. A list of his books reveals unbroken interest: "The Souls of Black Folk," "Darkwater," "Dark Princess," "The Encyclopedia of the Negro," "The Gift of the Black Folk."

His talent was as recognized as his bitterness was deplored. Writing in 1907, Henry James said: "How can everything have so gone that the only Southern book of any distinction published for many a year is 'The Souls of Black Folk.' "

In his autobiography, Dr. DuBois described his ancestry as "a flood of Negro blood, a strain of French, a bit of Dutch, but, thank God, no 'Anglo-Saxon.' "

He scorned Booker T. Washington's advice that the Negro concentrate on vocational education.

Instead, Professor DuBois dreamed of a scholarly education for the "talented tenth" of the Negro population. He helped found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to advance his own ideas and the scope of the Negro American's ambitions.

But as disappointment and defeat embittered him, he drew further away from the mainstream of American thought. He found himself an extremist among Negro leaders. In 1948, he resigned for the second and final time from the NAACP after a series of quarrels with its leadership.

He drifted toward communist front groups and finally left the United States to settle in Ghana, where he joined the Communist Party two years ago at the age of 93.

So W. E. B. DuBois was lost from the American community years before his death this week. And he was lost to disillusion and resentment long before he fell for communism.

His drift away from the Negro American community was a loss that defaced but never entirely obliterated his promise and intellect.

He died in Ghana on the eve of this week's March In Washington.

The confluence of those two events marks a watershed in the procession of spokesmen for the Negro American. The difference between the man who died the night of August 27th and the men who led the march of August 28th is enough to constitute a Great Divide in the history of the Negro American.

The 200,000 revolutionaries who moved darkly toward the Lincoln Memorial Wednesday listened quietly to talk of the American Dream.

They flaunted the American Bill of Rights at those who said they should not have petitioned the government for a redress of grievances.

Their leaders were welcomed by the President of the United States.

They sang what some critics say is the only indigenous American music, the Negro spiritual.

They did not march In cadence from the Washington Monument to the Lincoln Memorial; they walked.

They waved at the television cameras, not unlike audiences come to watch Queen for a Day.

Amidst the mass-produced signs, a number reminiscent of hometown boosters club sprouted ("New Castle, Penna. NAACP Chapter").

The march combined a number of American institutions, including the July 4th picnic, the outdoor revival and the Sunday walk.

Some of the women wore hats that looked as though they might have come from cartoons satirizing the American clubwoman.

Their leaders exhorted the revolutionaries to keep quiet and stay orderly. The 200,000 revolutionaries kept quiet, stayed orderly, sang the Battle Hymn of the Republic, and then went home.

W. E. B. DuBois is dead.

Negro History

Liberal? Conservative? What Happening In U.S?

Atl. Daily Sun., 4-14-64

By GEORGE M. COLEMAN

The oily tongued bleats, that declare white supremacy is still the main ideal of the United States, continues with lip service as strongly as ever, but the growth of "The Party of Lincoln in the South," and public communication between colored people and an avowed segregationist, shows that the Negro has arrived as an important people in the nation, and one to be consulted, respected and accepted.

Twenty two years ago the so-called separate but equal doctrine was not even challenged .... Negroes grew up expecting to live out their lives as second class citizens, while paying taxes equally, and dying on the battlefields of the wars of a nation which pushed them back, even in its federal courts.

Today, a name that has aroused the ire of Negroes since the early part of the century, has been publicly linked with a convention of Negro teachers, and a Talmadge, whose name has helped hold back the tide for equality so successfully, has been given a standing ovation by the very people he is actively engaged to oppose from his seat in Washington.

Why?

Today, a name connected with political foolishness that told white southerners one man could stand in the doorway of a school house, and keep the United States, with all its armies from sending a Negro inside, has received 25 per cent of the vote in a Northern city, where people like Governor Wallace were not supposed to even be welcome.

Why?

A liberal president is both dead and alive .... A southerner sits in the White House, pushing civil rights .... A western conservative is depending upon states where segregation of the kind which does not thrive in his own community is king, to gain him nomination to lead the "Party of Lincoln," .... And another man, with a family reputation for liberalism, is having difficulty in catching up in popularity in a nation putting itself upon the map in favor of human rights.

And in Atlanta people will be busy trying to evaluate the Talmadge story from the GTEA declaration that all factions should be heard, to the logical explanation by a NAACP leader that those who did not have to attend the speech probably were not present.

Negro ~~Southern~~ History

STRANGE EVENTS

Certainly the strange series of events our country has witnessed in recent months makes one wonder if liberalism has run its gauntlet, and is steadily trying to move the clock backwards to a more conservative view ... While conservatism, bombarded by illogical bigotry, racial segregation loses, and a general bad reputation is leaning over backwards to a more liberal point.

And if this is true, then the reaction of Negro teachers could have nothing to do with either of these, although their actions have bolstered the cause of segregationists who apparently have desires for high, greener pastures, and seek to change their reputations so as to gain the vote of the people they got into office by condemning.

Common sense tells one that Negro teachers from small Georgia areas, where Negro political, and economic strength is nothing like that in Atlanta, were sent to the convention for a purpose ... That they would have to report back to their communities on the complete convention, and thereby could not snub the Talmadge speech, as could teachers from big city areas, where the segregationist has lost most of the control.

And this aided the Talmadge audience, where a Negro policeman noticed that few cars arriving at Municipal Auditorium had Fulton license plates.

ODD PICTURE

What an odd picture .... The young Negro senator fulfills another engagement when the controversy arises .... The elder statesman, expected to remain quiet stands at the meeting and introduces Talmadge...

And if this whole unusual picture can be summed up, it would go something like this ...

The white liberal stood against slavery .... He asked that the Negro be treated better, but few visioned a black man standing as a complete equal .... One in Washington, stating to the world that "I have a dream." .... A Negro union leader reaching fame many of them could not achieve, and some publicly shouting the ideal of "I'm the greatest."

Humane treatment, yes .... But who is ready to accept the Negro as a complete equal, socially, professionally, etc?....

And on this scene walks a Goldwater, following the leadership of a Kennedy with an open declaration for complete equality ...

And then the other side of the picture .... Frustrated Southerners; winning congressional seats ..

And yet never gaining real fame because their way of life has been a bitter pill which has even damaged the reputation of their country .... Many of them, seeing the rise of the Negro vote, want a slice of it, and evenutally the presidency if liberal factions can be brought to their fold....

A change where two extremities could be altering their courses, and bent upon disproving the old adage that "never the twain will meet."

Or you can do like many a human being now a days, and just say that everybody's nuts.

Southerners and Schools

I—The Defiant Ones in Virginia

THE STATE that has borne the brunt of the "massive resistance" campaign against the Supreme Court is preparing to retreat. Gov. J. Lindsay Almond and Attorney General Albertis Harrison have sent word to the six other states of the old Confederacy which have made no move to comply with the 1954 school desegregation decision to count Virginia out. Watch out for falling rocks and know that Virginia has gone to prepare a safer place for you, the message said.

These other six "massive resisters" will be in no hurry to accept the invitation. In time they will follow as they have done so often in the past, but there is no reason to rush. Defiance of the Nine Men is as popular as ever. Most white people in the Deep South firmly believe as their political leaders and newspapers, with few exceptions, have told them unceasingly for four years that:

The Supreme Court decision on the schools was unconstitutional;

The federal government is interfering illegally with the right of the states to run their own schools;

Desegregation is not inevitable. If they resist long enough and hard enough, the Court will change its stand.

And most of them also believe it would be preferable to shut down schools rather than desegregate them—at least for a while.

Having created this solid body of opinion, the Deep South politicians will follow it until forced to do otherwise. And it will be months or, for most of the other six states, years before the federal courts will rule on the constitutionality of their resistance statutes and thus create pressures to change course.

In Virginia, however, the final blow to "massive resistance" is expected to fall at any moment (possibly before this article appears in print) in the form of a court ruling declaring unconstitutional the laws which closed nine schools in three cities last September to prevent desegregation. The state itself has asked the Virginia Supreme Court to review these laws. And in a separate federal court action a group of Norfolk white parents are suing state and local officials for depriving their children of the equal treatment to which they are entitled under the 14th Amendment: their children are locked out of school while Negro and white children in other Norfolk schools attend classes as usual.

If, as most lawyers anticipate, these cases establish that the state cannot legally close one of its public schools without closing them all, "massive resistance" will soon become an ugly phrase. For Virginia officials have learned in four short months what trouble too much resistance can bring.

"Massive resistance" in Virginia did not come about by popular demand. Outside of the Black Belt area—south of the James River—the general disposition after the initial shock of the 1954 Court opinion was to prepare to accommodate to it. This was Governor Stanley's first reaction. And the influential Richmond News-Leader's first editorial after the decision said in effect "we must find a way to adjust to it . . . if the Court gives us 10 years, we can do it."

But in midsummer 1954 things changed. Black Belt Virginia—which has only one-sixth of the people (half Negro) but supplied all four leading candidates for Governor in 1956 and dominates the legislature—decided to fight. A delegation of several hundred from the Southside called on the Governor. A mass meeting at Petersburg, with all Congressmen and delegates from the area present, declared defiance and set to work circulating every county board of supervisors in the state: "If you don't want Negroes in your schools, write the Governor." Sixty-one county boards did. Senator Byrd, who until then had been silent, declared himself on the side of the resisters, whereupon News-Leader Editor James Kilpatrick marched to the head of the procession, which he has been leading ever since, writing editorials which keep the Black Belt inflamed and which read like memoranda of instruction to the Governor and the legislature, loaning fire-eating editorial writers to other editors when segregationist sentiment needs refueling in their territory, and exhuming the discredited Doctrine of Interposition upon which the "massive resistance" laws were based.

But though "massive resistance" was not of popular origin, the mass of Virginians willingly followed where Kilpatrick and the Byrd men led. Even when it appeared that schools would be closed as a result, most people remained passive. Last spring and summer in the three towns where shutdowns were scheduled for September, efforts to organize parent protests failed miserably. A few weeks later, when children were actually shut out of school, many of those same parents were ready to join local Save-the-Schools Committees, but the general public in the rest of the state still remains relatively unconcerned. "People don't get riled up until it hits right at home," those who have been hit explain.

Since September, however, there has been an important shift. Although it still is not respectable to advocate desegregation, it has become acceptable to stand for public education (Virginians understand the unspoken implication: "even if we have to let in a few nigras"). This is largely because influential state organizations which were neutral have now come to the defense of the schools. At its state meeting in November the Congress of white PTA's refused to support massive resistance and voted for local option (555-553). The Virginia Educational Association (white teachers and administrators) called on the legislature to promise that the public schools would stay open. The State League of Women Voters did the same.

Courageous individual clergymen are getting more support from clerical hierarchies. All Episcopal vestries in Virginia in October read from their pulpits a pastoral letter from the House of Bishops stating the Christian objection to segregation. (But only one vestry complied with the church's request that all of them pass concurring resolutions of support.) In almost every vestry, however, there are now teen-agers who have attended the non-segregated youth camps the Virginia Diocese has sponsored for the past five summers who do support the House of Bishops view.

The Baptist General Association of Virginia meeting in November refused Governor Almond a vote of confidence for his handling of the race question, and gave one instead to the president of the Southern Baptist Conference, the defeated "moderate," Rep. Brooks Hays. And even the staid Virginia Council of Churches tries to act as a deterrent force on massive resistance extremists—mindful that politicians say the only force the Byrd machine fears is the clergy.

A succession of daily papers, led by the Norfolk Virginia-Pilot and the Roanoke Times, have rejected massive resistance as a futile approach. And the Richmond News-Leader and Times-Dispatch have now joined them.

But much more disturbing to those who hold out for defiance of the Court are the signs that industry is not happy with what is happening to the schools.

When Save-the-Schools Committees from 15 communities gathered in Richmond on December 6, 1958, to form a state-wide organization, one of those present identified himself as the vice president of a new General Electric plant in Central Virginia (annual payroll: $5 million). He was there to see what could be done to keep the schools in his area open. If they closed he expected to lose at least one-fourth of his key employees—most of whom come from outside the state and could not be replaced under the circumstances.

Sperry-Rand in Charlottesville has already experienced what GE dreads. And Melpar, Inc., the largest employer in Northern Virginia, reports that it was having trouble holding electronics engineers and technicians even before closing threatened because of low standards in the schools.

But happy or not to be in Virginia those firms are there, and they are paying taxes, which Virginia badly needs. Norfolk banker Harry O. Nicholls broke sadder news to the Governor's Advisory Council on the Virginia Economy at a recent meeting. (Economic development was second only to continued school segregation in Almond's 1956 platform.) Mr. Nicholls reported that not a single new industry had settled in Virginia this year, although new industrial investment in North Carolina—whose token but "good faith" start toward desegregation has received court approval—totalled $250 million in 1958.

THE ELECTION returns in 1958 contained more food for thought.

Early on the morning after November 4, Governor Almond called sleepy-eyed reporters into a downstairs room of the Capitol to hear his version of the outcome. It was "a great tribute to Senator Byrd" and "a mandate of the people to continue 'massive resistance' to the Supreme Court's decision on the schools." (Only half a million of Virginia's 3.6 million people had voted, but that was normal in the state with the smallest average voter turnout in the country.)

Senator Byrd had been unopposed for reelection until three days before the filing deadline, when a lady doctor announced as an independent because "somebody should oppose the man who plans to close the public schools." The fact that 120,000 Virginians, almost one-third of the total, had voted for Dr. Louise Wensel (whose name many of them saw for the first time on their ballots) the Governor explained away by pointing to a Negro precinct which had gone "two votes for Senator Byrd and 274 votes for the woman." (Even if every Negro in the state of Virginia with a paid-up poll tax had turned out for Dr. Wensel, that would have accounted for fewer than 50,000 votes.)

WHAT was interesting was the increase in the anti-Byrd vote—in Negro and white precincts alike—where "massive resistance" had closed or threatened to close the schools. Between the 1952 and 1958 Senatorial elections the anti-Byrd vote had increased from 17 percent to 34 percent in Charlottesville; from 29 to 40 percent in Norfolk; from 25 to 48 percent in the 10th District of Northern Virginia, where Arlington and Alexandria schools are scheduled to close next; and even rose .6 percent in Warren County (Front Royal), next door to Senator Byrd's apple empire along the Blue Ridge Mountains.

This was a long way from signalling the end of the regime that has ruled Virginia for 40-odd years. But the returns carried a warning, as the Governor acknowledged to the assembled reporters: "The trouble is that many people, more or less dedicated to constitutional principles, are not willing to make a sacrifice. They finally say, 'Well, we have fought as long as we can. Now let's turn around and run the other way'." Clearly some people who had been all for "constitutional principles" before their children lost their schools were now ready to run the other way. But many more in the same situation were not yet concerned enough to walk to the polls.

One reason was the emergency system of private classes that is operating in Charlottesville, Norfolk and Front Royal. The mothers who had been expected to revolt after Johnny had been underfoot all day for a week or so actually have not suffered too much from that. Most of the displaced children are either attending the makeshift part-time classes in such places as the Daughters of the Confederacy Museum (Front Royal), the First Baptist Sunday School or somebody's pine-panelled rumpus room, or have been entered in regular schools elsewhere.

But there are other frustrations. Mothers are bored with chauffeuring: four nine-year-olds on one block in Charlottesville go to classes in four different parts of town.

One parent whose basement is being used for a Fifth

Prodigal father

Grade says he didn't expect it to be so long—his light bills are killing him.

Many Norfolk parents are pinched to pay the private school tuition; others suffer to see their children being drawn into jobs which they almost certainly would not give up to return to high school now if it reopened.

Regular teachers in the emergency classes in Charlottesville are upset by the lack of contact with one another. Substitute teachers who are filling in want to get back to their own families.

High school juniors and seniors worry about getting into college—or having to stay in school an extra year to get a diploma. Naturally few recreation rooms have science lab equipment, and the lowered level of instruction generally must be obvious even to the student who prefers the emergency school because there is no law that says you have to go if you don't want to.

Towns, as well as parents and children and teachers, are affected. The traditional cleavage between those who value education and those who do not deepens, since those who are most opposed to education are also the most opposed to desegregation. Church congregations take sides for and against ministers with opinions on separation of the races. Members have been dropping out of Christ Episcopal Church in Charlottesville since it became the first church in town to open its doors to the segregated emergency classes. And Front Royal Baptists talked loudly of running the Reverends Stagg and

Fox out of town for opposing the closing of the high school.

Norfolk and Charlottesville have certain built-in stabilizers that help absorb such shocks. White people there are accustomed to seeing Negroes on the buses and in the libraries, in some graduate schools and nursing in hospitals. As cosmopolitan centers they have regular contact with people who do not practice segregation. Norfolk enjoys the benevolent effect of a constructive newspaper and Charlottesville that of Mr. Jefferson's University.

But Front Royal—and towns like it all across the South—have little experience of anything but the segregated way and few institutions to help them adjust to new ways. When the federal court ordered the Warren County white school to admit 17 Negroes, therefore, the shock waves gathered volume as they spread.

About 200 Negro families live in Front Royal (pop. 8,115). One-hundred-fifty of their breadwinners work in the big American Viscose plant which employs about 2,000 from the town. The plant is almost 100-percent organized by the Textile Workers' Union, AFL-CIO, and since 1948 the Negroes have met and voted with the white members, although they usually sit on the side or in the balcony. They used the union social hall for their parties, and the union voted special funds every year to buy pigs for Negro 4-H boys to raise and to pay $24-per-month for the last 10 years to sponsor a Negro religious program on the radio. Two years ago the union threatened to withdraw its contribution from the local Little League baseball team unless it agreed to let the Negroes play. Once the local included a Negro member in a union dinner and seated him next to a leading doctor who had never sat down to table with a Negro before. "We were making progress," the business agent, Chuck Leadman, says.

The union had been making social progress too. From being the object of bricks and scorn when they began to organize Viscose in 1940, union officers have advanced to election to the city council and the hospital board, and were now consulted by plant officials as equals.

It was embarrassing, therefore, when 17 Negro students, supported by the union's Negro members, filed suit for admission to the white high school in Front Royal.

When Leadman learned about the suit from the papers, he and some others drove to Richmond to explain to NAACP attorney Oliver Hill that he should call it off, and when Hill politely refused they went home sizzling. After all they had done for the Negroes! And what risks they had run of antagonizing their new friends in the community! By the time they returned, Leadman was saying: "We don't intend to let the colored man come in and kick us around. We are now ready to fight them as hard as we worked for them before. . . . I have broke with them because I am convinced they have not earned the right to support. . . . What we have to do to stave off integration we will do it. . . . If the colored want to travel this road, they can travel it alone."

Then on September 12 the Governor ordered Warren County High closed. Opinion on whether it was better to follow state or federal law on desegregating the schools had been about 50-50 in Front Royal up until then, good reporters say. But that began to change. Billy Armstrong, the local Byrd organization leader, passed the word that if Warren County didn't "stick with the team" there might be reprisals: maybe the legislature would overlook Warren on some appropriations.

Visitors came to town from the White Citizens Councils and the Defenders of State Sovereignty and street-corner groups began to talk learnedly of "mongrelization" and "communization"—and to accuse the few ministers who questioned closing the school of both.

The volume went higher when Jack Hamilton came to town. After Almond closed the Front Royal school, News-Leader Editor Kilpatrick suggested to the Northern Virginia Daily, which serves the area, that the local paper could use more editorial punch. To provide it he would let them have the son of his managing editor, a fiery, young arch-segregationist with a Patrick Henry style. That same week Jack Hamilton took over and began, as one resident describes it, "to really whip it up."

The voice of the moderates was scarcely audible in Warren County after his Baptist congregation threatened to fire Reverend Stagg for questioning massive resistance. And it fell completely silent after the local manager of the Viscose plant tentatively suggested they petition the state to return control of the high school to the town and met only hostility.

After that things moved fast. Eager to show that the union stood with the community against its Negro members, TWU leaders put through a $1-a-week wage check-off to pay for private classes for the locked out white students (amounting to $1,600-$1,700 per week, 50 percent of the total budget). Leadman suggests that Senator Byrd may have been of some help in arranging through the head office of Viscose in Philadelphia for the company to perform this unusual service.

Subscribers and advertisers expressed their disapproval of editorials in the weekly Warren Sentinel condemning the school closing by cancelling subscriptions and ads (the largest department store later found that this was not popular with its charge account customers who also value schools and put its ads back in the paper.)

Front Royal slowly froze into a policy of non-recognition of its Negro citizens. And today no white worker in the Viscose plant will speak to a Negro, and the company is being urged to bar Negroes from the cafeteria and canteen they have always shared. It is understood, however, Leadman says, that "nobody is going to get clobbered." The 150 Negroes in the plant are standing together—except for one who took the floor in union meeting to say he was tricked into signing the petition for admission of the Negro students to Warren High. Not many of the others come to the union hall any more.

There is talk of an economic boycott by the whites against any merchant who employs a Negro. The stated goal: to run them out of town.

Meanwhile the county is rushing work on the new Negro high school that is going up to have it ready for next fall—in case the Negroes are still there.

And the Negroes say they are not about to go.

Facing up to all these difficulties "massive resistance" has brought, the leaders in Richmond have resolved in the future to model themselves more after Gen. "Foxy Joe" Johnston—who slowed Sherman's march through Georgia to a walk by skillful defensive drives which spared his troops—than after Gen. John Bell Hood—who lost the battle for Atlanta by persisting in "senseless" attacks along Peachtree Creek until his entire force was spent. If they can't prevent desegregation forever, perhaps they can delay it at least a lifetime by litigation.

Virginia's leaders are currently thanking the Supreme Court for showing them what they believe is a way to do that. They see in the Court's sustaining of the Alabama Pupil Placement Plan a way to preserve most of their all-white schools for years, while shifting to the local communities the onus of countenancing what desegregation proves necessary to keep the federal law away from the door.

The Alabama Plan, which Governor Almond expects to recommend to a special session of the legislature when the present resistance laws are finally overthrown, is far more sophisticated than the patently absurd Doctrine of Interposition on which "massive resistance" is based. Instead of declaring war on the Court as Virginia did, Alabama proceeded to repeal every section of her constitution and statutes referring to segregation and enacted a new law to perpetuate segregation in the schools which contained no mention of race or color whatever. Under it, local school boards were simply empowered to assign students to schools according to a long list of criteria including health, suitability, adequacy, home environment and possible effects of the student's admission—but not race. Needless to say, no Negro has been assigned to a white school since the Placement Law has been in force. But there is nothing unconstitutional on the face of it, as the Supreme Court said on November 24.

With embellishments, it is this plan on which Virginia intends to make her next stand. One important addition Governor Almond contemplates is some kind of state tuition grant system to provide those who prefer to attend segregated private schools the money with which to do so. To increase the chances for court approval, the grants would be available to any student, white or colored, but there is little reason to believe that such an obvious subterfuge will get by for long. The scheme has immediate attractions, however. It would be an important sop to the Black Belt legislators who will kick and scream that the pupil placement plan is bending the knee to the Court. ("I'm afraid," says one legislator who wants to keep the schools open, "that if a vote were held in the Assembly today, it would eliminate public education. But Almond is a smart man and he may be able to feel his way through this thing and convince the Assembly his approach is the only way out.") It would also help conceal the fact that if Virginia administered the placement law in good faith, she would in reality be taking the path of token compliance for which her officials vilify North Carolina and Tennessee every day.

To further show his serious intention that private segregated schools are meant to be the main attraction and the slightly desegregated public schools only a side show to please the courts, the Governor will most likely request authority to sell unused schools as surplus to provide buildings for private schools, and to repeal compulsory public school attendance laws so as to provide pupils for the private schools.

It is fitting that Virginia, which pioneered in "massive resistance," should lead the search for a way out of the constitutional impasse that doctrine has produced. Watching her progress should give some clue as to when the Deep South will finally surrender—as it must eventually—on the principle of public school segregation. The practice of desegregation, of course, will be farther in the future.

FROM THE Richmond News-Leader

1955

"In May of 1954, that inept fraternity of politicians and professors known as the United States Supreme Court chose to throw away the established law. These nine men repudiated the Constitution, spit upon the tenth amendment, and rewrote the fundamental law of this land to suit their own gauzy concepts of sociology. If it be said now that the South is flaunting the law, let it be said to the high court, you taught us how."

1958

"This newspaper has concluded, in the light of recent events, that new defenses are urgently needed. If Virginia is to avoid defeat—if we are to be spared the awful tragedy of violence and race hatred that would result from integrated public schools to which there was no workable alternative—then we must prepare ourselves for speedy abandonment of a legal position that cannot be held much longer."

The "New Negroes" in Alabama

"IT'S JUST a question of who gets tired first, our side or the niggers. And it won't bother us a bit to spend the next generation in court," the lawyer said.

The "New Negroes"—cast in the mold of Martin Luther King—one meets in all the cities of the Deep South are no less resolute in their own cause.

It is strength matched against strength, with the Negro gathering confidence and determination by the day. And nowhere, everyone agrees, will the test be longer or more exhaustive than in Birmingham.

At the moment the contest there looks very one-sided. Everything is working for those who would pay any price to preserve segregation in the schools. Birmingham's largely industrial population (40 percent Negro), low in income and low in education, would face the possible closing of public schools—for a time—with greater equanimity than other cities of the region. A young city, founded only in 1870, Birmingham lacks deep cultural roots to steady it in times of change. And perhaps as a result, in the last 10 years the city has permitted the police free use of extra-legal methods against those who show any tolerance for integration.

Mail tampering by the police led to a federal conviction in 1955. Private interracial gatherings are customarily broken up by squad car officers with no warrants for search or arrest. Acts of violence go unpunished. The white press has reported 22 bombings and four cases of arson against Negro homes or churches in Greater Birmingham since 1947. Not a single arrest occurred, however, until last summer when Negroes caught two white men near a dynamiting and beat them up; the police arrested the two later in the hospital.

Compared with their peers in New Orleans or Atlanta, the "power structure" of Birmingham—known since Populist days in Alabama as the "Big Mules"—are lacking in financial courage and imagination. More interested in economy (they fought building a new city hall for years after the old one was condemned as a fire trap) than in growth (no new industry employing more than 1,000 workers has come to Birmingham since the war), they fail to see what sacrificing schools for segregation could cost the city.

The two daily papers are totally unreconstructed.

There are no effective voices of moderation. Those trade union leaders who have tried to talk reasonably about the Supreme Court position on the schools have found themselves in trouble when they came up for reelection. The state president of the Alabama AFL-CIO rode out such a storm (among other things he was accused of sneaking union funds to the NAACP), but race-baiting has become the accepted lethal weapon in factional union politics. White unionists had a large share a year ago in electing as city commissioner of police and education the most violent racist in Alabama politics, Eugene "Bull" Conner. Hayes Aircraft workers wrote Walter Reuther threatening to pull out of the UAW unless he stopped attacking segregation. And few Negroes attend union meetings any more.

The only faint sounds of respect for the Supreme Court ruling on segregation come from the clergy. The two manifestoes issued by the overwhelming majority of Atlanta ministers in support of compliance with the law respecting public schools evidently have pricked the consciences of some in Birmingham. A significant number of clergymen have condemned the bombings from the pulpit; a smaller handful make no secret of their belief that segregation is sinful. But a Birmingham manifesto on the order of the Atlanta declaration does not appear possible.

The men who dominate the Birmingham Ministerial Association are pastors of the oldest and biggest churches who have negotiated with businessmen in the building of their $3-$4 million plants for so long that they have come to think like them. And courage has not been synonymous with the Association. Last spring when there was an attempted bombing of the Beth-El Jewish Temple, the Ministerial Association met in special session to issue a strong condemnation. Two months later when a second attempt was made to blow up the Bethel Negro Baptist Church, presided over by Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth who had led the move to abolish segregation on buses, the Association had nothing to say. (When a meeting to protest was requested, it was refused on the ground that some members disliked Shuttlesworth personally.)

On the white side of the fence in Birmingham everything is running smoothly for the segregationists who are moving merrily along toward 1960, heating up race hatred to help carry Alabama for an Orval Faubus States' Rights ticket.

But in the longer run they have the likes of F. L. Shuttlesworth to deal with.

White people in Birmingham who are inclined to sympathize with Negro aspirations for equal treatment generally do not include the Rev. Frank Shuttlesworth, pastor of the Bethel Baptist Church, in their expressions of good will. He "stirs the others up," they complain, "gives them ideas." Which is true. But except for Shuttlesworth the day of some token recognition of race equality in Birmingham would be much farther off than it is today. His critics can't cry "outside agitator" or "Northern influence," for Frank Shuttlesworth has rarely set foot outside of Alabama in all his 37 years.

Born in Montgomery, the slight, soft-spoken but extremely self-confident young preacher grew up on the outskirts of Birmingham where his stepfather worked in the mines at Oxmoor. After graduating from Rosedale High School, he married almost immediately, got a clerical job on the Air Force base at Mobile and started raising a family. In Mobile, Shuttlesworth began taking night courses at a Baptist seminary five miles away at Pritchett. That made him want to go back to school so much that in 1947 he quit his government job and moved his wife and three children to Selma, Alabama, where he entered Selma University, another Baptist institution. He did odd jobs at night and his wife worked, too. He stood first in his class. The next year he began preaching at a rural church 10 miles from Selma, and a few months later another little church at Potter's Station "called" him to be their pastor, too.

When the Shuttlesworths moved to Montgomery the next fall, in 1949, so that Frank could attend a college —Alabama State—which could award him a certificate to teach, he commuted the 50 miles back to Selma each weekend to tend his two rural flocks. And when the big Selma First Baptist Church lost its pastor the next spring, it was Shuttlesworth they called to replace him. He moved his family into the parsonage and went back to school.

When he received his A.B. at Selma University, he started commuting to Montgomery to complete the work for his teaching certificate, and after he got it he taught happily in Dallas County, an intransigent island of Confederate philosophy, for two years ("That was before I got into civil rights.")

In March, 1953, the Bethel Baptist Church called Reverend Shuttlesworth to North Birmingham where he did get into such things. In 1955, he took a hand in a long-standing effort to get Negro officers appointed to the city police force. Reverend Shuttlesworth persuaded 77 other Negro ministers to sign a petition, and he began knocking on doors at City Hall to find out why the delay on what every public administration study of Birmingham had recommended. "That was when I found out that the Southern white man can smile like he means 'yes' when he means 'hell, no'." City officials had actually promised to put Negro police on in 10 days when Emmet Till was killed. "I knew then there was just going to be a fight."

In recognition of what he had done on the police matter, the Birmingham chapter of NAACP invited Reverend Shuttlesworth to make the Emancipation Day speech on January 1, 1956. His talk on the three P's—Patience, Persistence and Perspective—made a big hit. He joined the NAACP then and as membership chairman had helped to build the local group to more than 3,000 when in June an Alabama circuit judge enjoined the NAACP from further activity in the state. "Nobody can explain how we felt that day they outlawed us, except it was like the day President Roosevelt died. Everybody went around asking everyone else, 'What are we going to do now?' "

"A few days later I happened by Arthur Shores' (local counsel to the NAACP) office on some other business and found a number of them sitting there asking each other what the NAACP could do. 'Gentlemen', I said, 'it is time the masses got in this struggle. . . . I have decided to stake my all on the altar and call a mass meeting.' I did, and that day we organized to attack segregation in Birmingham."

Shuttlesworth visited Montgomery where the bus boycott was on. And when the Supreme Court in December ruled that segregated seating on the Montgomery buses was illegal, he decided that it was time to move in Birmingham. On December 20 his people petitioned the city to rescind the segregation rules; otherwise, they warned, Negroes would "ride the buses unsegregated." On Christmas night, the Bethel Church parsonage was destroyed by a bomb; Shuttlesworth, his wife and children and a guest were slightly injured. But the next morning, as planned, Negroes seated themselves in the "white" (front) sections of buses and 22 were arrested. Shuttlesworth himself sat in the front seats of two buses and reported to the police that he had done so, but was not arrested for violating the segregation laws; he was, however, given a ticket for driving his car without a license. The following day he called off the massive non-violent defiance: "We have accomplished our purpose in getting these people arrested" and so requiring a legal test of the segregation laws.

(During the two years since the Christmas bombing the Shuttlesworth home and the Bethel Church have been under constant guard. Not by the police—they have never offered protection although detectives sit in Shuttlesworth's congregation every Sunday—but by volunteers on regular shifts. One is always on duty in a shack back of the new parsonage that was built across the street from the church. Another guard keeps watch over the church from a high porch that has been added to a house across the way. When Shuttlesworth has to leave town overnight, someone stays in his home in his stead.)

An effort to test segregation in the waiting rooms of the railroad station soon after proved harder. Two Negroes, husband and wife, seated themselves in a room marked "Interstate and White Passengers" in the Terminal Station, and were arrested and jailed for daring to do so. When they brought suit in US District Court to test their rights, however, the police court charge against them was withdrawn in time to permit Federal Judge Seybourn Lynne to dismiss their petition because it had become "hypothetical."

That September Shuttlesworth took two of his children and two others to a white school to enter them on opening day. He was beaten by a mob outside the building, and the children were turned away. But suit was filed to test the constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Law which Alabama had passed in 1957 as her answer to the Supreme Court on desegregation. That suit was lost last November 24 when the Court refused to find the Placement Law unconstitutional on its face. But the next order of business on Shuttlesworth's personal calendar is to find another way to reopen the question of the law's legality.

Shuttlesworth had planned to press ahead on desegregating the public parks in 1958 too. A suit was to have been filed on November 18, but as it happened that day Shuttlesworth was in jail and his lawyers were busy. He and 17 other Negroes had been arrested in "white" seats in the buses again to test a new segregation ordinance.

These excursions are not without plan. Shuttlesworth believes that there must be attack along with resistance. It is not enough, he says, to refuse peace on the white man's terms; Negroes must take the initiative. "They should ask for the repeal of segregation laws even if they are not ready to file suits." And they should not pause between attacks. Timing is all important. And it is better to be ahead than behind. "Eisenhower always catches the bull by the tail rather than the horns and so gets tail results."

At first there were those among the Negroes who thought Shuttlesworth was too bold. The older preachers always had found it more comfortable to stir the fire with a long-handled poker. But there is no "vocal" opposition to his strategy now. The Negro ministry in Birmingham, like the teaching profession, is becoming younger. (Between one-third and one-half of the ministers could now be called "young.") They and the whole Negro community have felt delight in finding "that the Southern white man is not nearly the bugabear they thought he was" and in seeing Shuttlesworth give "Bull" Conner as good as he is given. And since January, 1957, the movement in Birmingham has gained status from alliance with other cities in what is called the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Martin Luther King, Shuttlesworth, C. K. Steele of Tallahassee and T. J. Jemison of Baton Rouge founded the new organization somewhat to the annoyance of the NAACP. The group has repeatedly denied that any rivalry exists, but Shuttlesworth does not shy away from expressing their difference in approach. He speaks with deep sincerity of the debt owed to the NAACP for preparing the ground for what is happening in the South today. The experience of Southern Negroes in the war, the Supreme Court decision on the schools, and the work of the NAACP produced the "New Negroes," and the NAACP should not be rated least of the three, he emphasizes. Shuttlesworth honors its work so much that he intends to take out a life membership when he gets the money. But the NAACP, in his view, "hasn't revised its policies to keep up with modern trends." Any organization that is "more class than mass" can not be truly effective now. "It is only through the masses, spiritually organized and committed to non-violence, that you are going to get the devotion and fervor it takes to go ahead. . . . It takes masses to meet massive resistance." The NAACP will probably be needed again "to put on the brakes," but there is no occasion to apply the brakes now, Shuttlesworth points out, "when the car isn't even moving."

The burden now must rest on the Southern Negro. There are liberal whites who would like to help, "but it is too dangerous for them. The bombings prove that." The federal government could help end segregation sooner, Reverend Shuttlesworth adds, but if it doesn't use its powers more forcefully than it is doing now, whether the Civil Rights Act has a "Section 3 or a Section 10, won't make any difference." He scorns the Civil Rights Commission for compromising with the State of Alabama on the matter of subpoenaing registration records. Compromise is no good, he says: "Where did the Missouri Compromise and the Wilmot Proviso lead but to the Civil War?"

Frank Shuttlesworth does not try to conceal his pride in his new-found gift of leadership. He frankly takes credit for firing the minds and imaginations of Birmingham Negroes to claim their rights. And he considers it a personal triumph that after 2½ years and 33 mass meetings his following is not discouraged. They come as often as they are called together, and they give whenever they are asked.

The main thing, he says, is to keep on keeping on. "The Alabama situation is like a rock you know is hard. You keep pounding and chiselling and it probably won't break with the stroke you expect, but it will fly wide open with one you didn't."

The Segregationists Go North

THE STATES of the Deep South are shifting their strategy of "massive resistance" from defense to attack. They will lose their leader, Virginia's Governor Almond, on January 19 (Robert E. Lee's birthday) if the courts, as expected, on that day declare void the laws Virginia passed to evade the 1954 decision desegregating the public schools. But the six remaining Confederate states which have refused to take even one step toward compliance with the 1954 Court order are resolved not to go Virginia's way without much more of a struggle. There is plenty of fight left in the Eastlands, the Russells, the Talmadges and the young fire-eating Governors of Alabama and Georgia. And they are now about to take the battle into enemy territory. A second battle of Gettysburg is about to begin, this one to be fought with the techniques of psychological warfare, aimed at the public outside the South, the Congress and conservative leaders in both major political parties. Object: to win sympathy for the segregationist view behind the enemy lines, support for curbing the powers of the Supreme Court by law, and agreement to nullify the New Reconstruction of 1954 as the Compromise of 1877 nullified Reconstruction before.

The first task—making common cause with new allies outside their region—the New Confederates approach with great zest, for most of them sincerely believe that down inside most people outside the South feel toward the Negro about the way Southerners do. The trouble, they feel, is that the average person above the Mason-Dixon Line doesn't understand how fair and kind—how separate but equal—the South is willing to be. The misunderstanding comes, they further believe, largely because of the "paper curtain" which the Northern press has placed around the South; "all they print is the gory stories." "Lay your case before the American people," Senator Eastland recently assured the convention of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation in Jackson, "and you will be surprised to find how similar their opinions are to those of your own." And so the massive resisters have decided to tell the rest of America "just the honest story," "with no Bilbo business."

This Southern campaign to convert the North, East and West will not be of the order of magnitude of a Billy Graham Crusade, but it is well-organized and well-financed. Some states have already allocated public funds to propaganda bureaus which are pouring out pamphlets and "fact sheets" on the shortcomings of the Negro and the Supreme Court. Over the Great Seal of the State of Louisiana, the Joint State Legislative Committee, headed by Sen. W. M. Rainach, who speaks for the Louisiana White Citizens Councils in the legislature and is a leading candidate for Governor next year, has printed as a full-page advertisement in The New York Herald-Tribune a message addressed "To the People of New York City" on "The Position of the South on Race Relations" (See p. 11). The Committee subsequently "distributed several thousand tear sheets of the ad to key officials, publications and organizations throughout the United States," Senator Rainach says. "And after running out of all the tear sheets except a handful, we reprinted the ad in mail sheet form and distributed several thousand of these sheets also."

Senator Eastland is urging that the other defiant states go and do likewise. Citing the Herald-Tribune ad as an example of the wise use of public funds, Eastland told the Farm Bureau convention that "the Southern people have got to lay their case before the nation, and we must use our tax money to get the job done."

There are leaders in all six bitter-end states who agree. Out of Alabama has come a new "Putnam Letter Committee," headed by James E. Simpson, leading Birmingham Dixiecrat and lawyer for some of the biggest of Alabama's "Big Mules." The Committee's purpose is to publicize a beguiling "Dear Mr. President" letter, signed by Carleton Putnam, a Northerner who has spent many years as an airlines executive in the South. The "Putnam Letter," has already been published as a large ad in The New York Times and is to be placed in newspapers all over the country. Arguing that the Court decision in the school case is personal opinion, not law, and that equal protection under law is not a right in the United States but a social privilege, the Letter declares:

> Neither the North, nor the court, has any holy mandate inherent in the trend of the times or the progress of liberalism to reform society in the South. In the matter of schools, rights to equal education are inseparably bound up with rights to freedom of association and, in

To The People of New York City

The Position of the South on Race Relations

Recent tragic events in the integrated schools of Washington, D. C., Kansas City, Little Rock, and your own New York City, suggest that an accurate presentation of the views of Southern people on the race question might receive sympathetic consideration in the North and might even contribute to the solution of a problem in which we are now all concerned.

A PROBLEM UNIQUE WITHIN OUR NATION

Here in the United States, we are witnessing an unprecedented attempt by certain white and Negro leaders to force the Negro people of our country to abandon their own culture and mores, lose themselves physically and culturally within other races, and commit racial suicide.

Meanwhile, outside of the United States, every dynamic racial group in the world pridefully promotes its own culture. In view of their examples, should we not look twice before we leap?

In looking, we do not propose here to review the influences behind the "integration" movement. (For detailed analysis of a major influence we recommend that you review "Subversion in Racial Unrest," a documented study recently released by this Committee). Rather, let us here consider the logic of the movement and its ultimate effect on a country that we all love and cherish.

THE AMERICAN MAJORITY: A BLEND OF HOMOGENEOUS PEOPLES

You may ask: Doesn't this great country of ours represent a melting pot of different races? From a scientific standpoint, the answer is an unequivocal – NO!

The vast majority of this nation represents a blending of like peoples of common European ancestry, rather than a mixing of divergent races. But the energy and vitality which made America a great nation arose neither from racial self-idolatry nor racial suicide – it was an outgrowth of a passionate love of individual liberty, balanced by a sense of justice and individual responsibility which makes this liberty possible. On such a foundation, a new nation was created, capable of winning and retaining the love and loyalty of peoples of different races, different cultures and different religions.

WHAT ABOUT THE AMERICAN NEGRO?

We in the South think of our colored friends as Negro Americans, rather than as American Negroes. The normally cordial relationships between Southern white and colored people are regulated by a set of conventions or customs, the product of years of experiment and experience in adjusting to a bi-racial society.

RACIAL PATTERNS--A COMMUNITY MATTER

These customs vary widely from state to state and indeed from community to community. Until May 17, 1954 each community in the South was a laboratory in which many of these customs were being constantly examined and revised to meet changing conditions. Each community adapted itself to the problems which confronted it.

It is significant that all of the communities in the South and, indeed, many of the communities in the North, agreed that separation of the races in the fields of elementary and secondary education was essential.

THE SOLUTION NORTH AND SOUTH

This method of adjustment, which has been loosely referred to as "Segregation", enabled both the Negro and white people in the South to overcome the devastating effects of the War Between the States and pile up a record of progress second to none in history.

We believe it will, in practice, enable our Northern friends to adjust themselves to the more than one-half of the Negroes in this country who will live in the North by 1980.

A DANGEROUS PARALLEL

Now we are told that this is all wrong – that each community must conform to one unvarying racial pattern – complete integration – prescribed and enforced by a central governmental authority. But, the disastrous results of this policy are causing Americans to ask themselves: Is forced racial integration the answer?

At one time the belief was prevalent that all must attend the same church to prosper in the next world, as well as in this one. Many futile attempts of powerful groups in Europe to force their religious views on others only succeeded in dividing the continent into hostile camps. Ghastly wars and senseless massacres occurred in the conflicts over the rights of mankind to individuality, this time in the field of religion.

Today peoples of different religions may attend different churches without "degradation" or "psychological injury" to their personalities. Indeed, no one questions the right of a great religion to prohibit nonmembers from participating in certain of its rituals or partaking of its sacraments. "Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other!"

THE BEACON OF THE FUTURE

The trend to differentiation, racial and religious, represents a natural law, as well as a basic human right. Any attempt to force a rigid conformity in such matters of human relations must inevitably result in a repetition of the deadly European pattern of religious conflict.

Upon the establishment of workable race relations hinges the very fate of our great country. In the Talmud is a saying to the effect that time may, in some situations, resolve problems which cannot be solved by human intelligence at the moment. Now is the hour for Americans of all races to heed the wisdom of this counsel.

the South at least, may require that both be considered simultaneously. (In using the word "association" here, I mean the right to associate with whom you please, and the right not to associate with whom you please.)

The Putnam Committee raises funds privately for its promotion. But Florida legislator William H. Reedy shares Eastland's view that such projects are public business. He proposes a program of Southern aid to federal education on the Southern view, to be supported by appropriations of $1 million per year from each state participating. "The South must sell its ideas the way Hollywood producers sell starlets," Reedy says. And the Conference of Southern Governors has invited him to its next meeting to discuss details.

(Georgia's Sen. Richard Russell is for educating the rest of the country to Southern problems, too, but he would let those on the receiving end pay for the privilege. He promises us a bill this year to provide federal aid to Southern Negroes who wish to move to states with smaller Negro populations in order "to give each state an equal share of the race problem.")

THE FUNDS the South is willing to invest in enlightenment of the North are supposed to yield dividends this very year in the form of aid toward passage of the Smith bill to curb the Supreme Court.

First introduced in 1955, HR 3—which would repeal the long-standing doctrine of federal preemption and place primary jurisdiction in the state courts unless specifically withheld by Congress—passed the House last year by a large majority of Southern Democrats and conservative Republicans (241-155). In the end-of-session confusion the Senate defeated it by only one vote. Rep. Howard Smith (D, Va.) has reintroduced HR 3 in the new Congress and because of his position as chairman of the powerful Rules Committee should be able to push it through the House again, even though the measure has lost supporters because of Republican casualties in the November election. For the same reason the new Senate should be more opposed to passage of HR 3 than the old, but the foes of the Court are also vastly more determined.

The Smith bill of itself is an important Southern objective, as a symbol of antagonism to the Court's leadership in forcing the segregation issue in the most direct way since Reconstruction days. But even should passage fail again, a close hard-fought decision would be worth the price of the propaganda effort required to produce it. A lengthy battle over the court curbing measure in advance of consideration of new civil rights enforcement legislation—which Southerners could easily manage with their command of traffic through their committee chairmanships—would contribute to their larger objective: preventing the Congress from adding the force of its approval to the position of the Court on desegregating public schools "with all deliberate speed."

At all costs the massive resisters must prevent reenforcements from reaching the Judiciary, which stands today as the lone leader in the New Reconstruction. The murmurs of encouragement to the courts which have risen faintly from the Department of Justice and the ill-calculated relief offered by the President in the Little Rock affair hardly qualify as major assists. Congress, in effect, has remained neutral. And it is imperative for those who defy the Court to keep it that way. Lyndon Johnson helped a lot by taming the new Senate a few hours after it walked into his cage, and so leaving the filibuster in good working condition. But a hard-fought, even if finally losing battle to punish the court for its recent conduct would offer invaluable opportunities to make sure that Congress does not suddenly decide to get behind the Supreme Court. In the midst of debate and backstage maneuvers there is always room for wheeling and dealing. When the vote is close, trades can sometimes be made which change other close votes on other days. In such a situation the South's polished professionals would surprise everyone if they walked out of the cloakrooms without a stack of IOU's payable when federal enforcement of school desegregation became the question before the house.

If the states which shout "Never!" can prevent the 86th Congress from passing legislation supporting the Court, they will be free to attempt the next huge step in their plan for total escape from the toils of the New Reconstruction: Persuade the reformers to give up. Historically, this is not so far-fetched as it sounds. The ephemeral historic importance "of such earlier landmarks as the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, the Dred Scott decision of 1857, the Civil Rights Act of 1866 and 1875, the Fourteenth Amendment of 1867, or, for that matter, the Volstead Act of 1919—all of which were in some degree nullified by events or public sentiment—should remind us," Vann Woodward, the leading historian of the American Reconstruction period remarks. " . . . how precarious are the fortunes of American statesmanship when it operates against the mass opposition of a significant section of the country."

"Reconstruction," Professor Woodward observes, > affords the most extreme example in our history of an all-out effort by the majority to impose its will upon a recalcitrant and unwilling minority region. . . . In spite of the relative weakness and helplessness of the resistant South, in spite of the determined idealism of the Northern reformers . . . the fact is that the great experiment ended in disillusionment and default. The gains made on paper were never fully implemented in practice, or they were eroded away by compromise, concession and "interpretation." Apathy and indifference replaced the original idealism of the reformers. It was the will of the defeated, discredited and, for a time, helpless South that prevailed in the end.

Atlanta Is Different

THE MANNER in which the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals and a special Federal District Court in Norfolk chose to celebrate Robert E. Lee's birthday this year (January 19) has changed things for the South.

The "little bit of integration" which will surely result from the orders outlawing the Virginia brand of "massive resistance" to the 1954 Supreme Court decision on segregation in the schools will make compliance easier in the states where that has been the course. North Carolina and Tennessee will be relieved of jeers from their neighbors about their faithlessness to the white man's cause. (Only a few weeks ago former Governor Tuck of Virginia was expressing public sympathy for the poor people of North Carolina whose leaders lacked the gumption to stand up to the Supreme Court as Senator Byrd and Governor Almond were doing.) And additional towns and cities in those states will be willing to try "token" integration if Norfolk and Charlottesville and Alexandria are trying it too.

Farther south, also, this can happen. The considerable sentiment for integrating a "pilot school" to test limited "voluntary" desegregation which already existed in Miami, Florida, is strengthened. Gov. Leroy Collins has warned that the state's pupil assignment law won't stand up in the courts forever if it is used to bar Negroes from white schools completely. "We must be prepared to accept some desegregation, somewhere, sometime," says the Governor who has visions of representing the moderate South on a national Democratic ticket. And the cosmopolitan community of Miami, led by men who know that racial tensions can be bad for business, may decide to make the sacrifice. What has happened in Virginia should make that decision easier to swallow for the majority of Miamians who oppose integration but want a peaceful, prosperous community.

But the January 19 Virginia court decisions will not temper defiance in the other five Confederate states which have refused, along with the Old Dominion, to take one voluntary step to obey the Supreme Court. Too many political lives are now staked on keeping schools segregated. The new young Governors Georgia and Alabama inaugurated this month won out in contests during which extravagant promises were made. (Georgia's Ernest Vandiver even pledged to use state troopers and guardsmen to keep the schools segregated after his opponent seemed to be causing trouble with the charge that Vandiver was "soft on segregation"; Vandiver, he said, had permitted Negroes and whites to be served barbecue in the same line at a political rally in Thomason.)

This year's campaign for Governor of Louisiana, with the leader of the White Citizens' Councils, State Sen. W. M. Rainach, as the man to beat, will be in the same groove. And both Senators Sparkman (Ala.) and Russell (Ga.) know what could happen to them in 1960 if they display the slightest doubt that it is better to close the schools than desegregate them. (Former Gov. Marvin Griffin, who did so much to egg on Orval Faubus, is searching for grounds on which to challenge Russell.)

It is politically necessary for defiance to go on in the Deep South. But the January 19 decisions in Virginia leave only one way open—a hard way. The laws passed since 1954 to give Southern Governors the power to close individual schools rather than desegregate them when ordered are now useless. To close one school without closing all is to deny some children their right to equal protection under the 14th Amendment, the federal Court has ruled. All that is left to try is the far more difficult expedient of creating a "private" segregated system of schools to take the place of the public ones. In the case of Virginia the Court has ruled that the state must maintain unsegregated public schools (how adequately supported is another matter), but it also grants the right of a state to make tuition grants to pupils who prefer to attend other schools (including segregated ones) provided that the funds for those grants are appropriated especially for this purpose and not taken from public school monies.

Georgia's new Governor was ready with bills to put such a system in operation—complete with tax deduction privileges for those who contribute to private education—the day the Virginia opinion was announced. (A team of Georgia lawyers had been conferring with officials in Richmond beforehand.) The "private" school tuition grant is undoubtedly to be the South's new second line of defense now that the battle of Richmond is lost.

For states like Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama there is no particular hurry in preparing the new position. Thanks to the restraint of the NAACP, hard-core black belt areas are not the object of early suits to force school desegregation. White leaders there have plenty of time to plug away at the larger tasks of building sympathy for their point of view on race matters in the North, East and West, blocking support for the Supreme Court school opinion in Congress, and preparing the ground for a strong states rights third-party effort in 1960 (see NR, January 26, 1959).

But it is much later in Georgia and Louisiana, where federal court orders to admit Negroes to white schools in Atlanta and New Orleans are expected before the new term begins next September. In both places the emergency could be met with comparative ease by rescinding laws restricting state support to segregated schools and allowing the two cities to decide for themselves whether to shut their schools or take in a few Negroes. But in both places, although the opposition would not be inconsiderable, the likelihood is that the schools would remain in operation if there were a referendum on the question of desegregated schools or no public schools. And for that reason there is no inclination in the capitals of either state to take the local option way out. No other Georgia or Louisiana city, town or hamlet would vote as Atlanta and New Orleans might today. But one small instance of integration, the politicians have learned, lets the steam out of the whole issue—not with a whoosh, but by slow leak. (Just look at North Carolina and Tennessee!)

For practical reasons, therefore, Deep South politicians cannot back down before 1960. For such equally practical reasons as money, buildings, teachers and taxpayers suits it is hard to imagine anything like a workable system of segregated private schools ready for operation in Atlanta and New Orleans by the time the courts have ordered them to cease operating segregated public schools. And the practical result can only be that more than 100,000 children (1/3 Negroes) in Atlanta and 86,000 (more than 1/2 Negroes) in New Orleans may find themselves without schools next year, as Virginia children have this year. That is, unless the cities affected can force the states to cut them free from the laws which require defiance to the bitter end.

ATLANTA is the first Southern city to become greatly exercised about the possible loss of its schools far ahead of the time it might occur. Virginia, remember, was not concerned until after the fact. But though the decision of the Federal District Court in Calhoun v Latimer, et al, the case testing segregation in Atlanta public schools, will come late next summer at the earliest, the subject of the schools was already the number-one news story in Atlanta last November.

The reasons are several. Most important is the fact that Atlanta has—and has had for 22 years—a mayor with remarkable foresight. Bill Hartsfield has made Atlanta the leading city of the region—replacing Richmond, the recognized Southern capital for so long—by anticipating what roads, schools, parks, airports and other facilities were required to make it so and arousing in its citizens the same pride he feels in the city. He can see ahead now to what Atlanta would be like if its schools were shut down, and he does not intend to have his fifth —and probably final—term as mayor end on a sour note, if there is any way to prevent it. He has taken pride too in the fact that race relations are admittedly better in Atlanta than elsewhere in the Deep South. Rural Georgians who have moved to Atlanta and industrial jobs in recent years, however, resent the mayor's insistence on fair play for the Negro and expressed their hostility in his last re-election. Hartsfield won his 1957 primary by only 3,000 votes. Many times that number of Negro votes were cast—and Hartsfield was solid in Negro wards. Some human gratitude may underlie his concern that Atlanta consider the school question coolly.

A good chance to start the city thinking early came when a local lawyer, Morton Rolleston, Jr., ventured the opinion last November that Atlanta should be preparing to sell her school buildings to private parties in line with state plans to prevent desegregation. Months in advance of the time he had expected an open move to abolish the schools, the mayor was ready with a prompt and pithy answer. Closing the schools was unthinkable, he said, and Atlantans should have a chance to vote on whether they wanted public schools (desegregated) or no public schools.

The mayor's blast at Rolleston set off bursts of fire in his support. His years of good government have built up reservoirs of public confidence. So it was not the job it would have been in most cities to organize the manifestoes of support for Hartsfield's position which quickly came from 311 ministers and rabbis, 419 Atlanta doctors, two-thirds of the Emory University faculty, Agnes Scott professors, the local chapter of the Scientific Research Society of America and Parent-Teacher Associations all over the city.

Few communities have so effective a group of public-minded professionals to rally them in time of need. In almost daily touch with one another in their regular businesses of the law, journalism, merchandising, advertising, banking, social work, the ministry and education, their lines of communication extend to Negro leaders of the city as well as City Hall. "You hear a lot about the closing of the lines of communication between the races since 1954," one Negro leader says, "but it isn't true here. Even if the schools were closed I don't think the existing channels for bringing white and Negro leaders together when needed would be broken. Some superficial ones would be. We might not be meeting with the church ladies so often to discuss race relations, but with the experienced and sophisticated whites we have moved into a deeper level of communication that would last."

Atlanta opinion makers, now alerting the city to the danger to the schools while there is still time to protest, have far more positive forces to work with than a similar group — if it existed — would have in any other Southern city. In Editor Ralph McGill and the Atlanta Constitution the city has a constructive voice almost unique in the South. McGill's front-page editorials after May, 1954, were the first to warn where massive resistance would lead. They are still about the wisest, most illuminating writing one can read in the South—and the most comforting to the much-abused Southern moderates who, McGill says, will rise again. ("They have learned the difference between frustration and defeat.")

The city of Atlanta, like the state, has an uncommon interest and pride in its educational system. Since the early days of this century when public education was exceedingly meager, progress has been great in Georgia. Fifty-three percent of the total state budget now goes for schools. This amounts to three times as much for schools as Georgia's total budget 15 years ago, and local expenditures are on top of that. State money pays only one-third of Atlanta's school bill; the balance is financed from local taxes. So large an investment is not tossed away lightly.

The fact that Atlanta is a hub city, with thousands of branch offices and a daily flood of visitors from other states with non-Southern ways gives it metropolitan values. ("People are always coming through Atlanta on the way to some other place. But you have to deliberately set out to go to Birmingham and Nashville and Memphis.") Atlanta, under Mayor Hartsfield, has courted the outsiders—for their trade—even when this has meant some bending of local custom. (Georgia laws forbid the sale of mixed drinks in public places, but Atlanta's better hotels serve cocktails without subterfuge. The "woolhat" boys in the legislature make a big to-do about it every year or so, but Mayor Hartsfield says how can you expect Big City people to bring their conventions to Atlanta unless it acts like the regional capital it is?)

As a university center for more than 50 years, Atlanta has a large pool of high-quality Negro leadership. These educated men and women create a different, more acceptable image of the Negro than white people in most other Southern cities see. A Negro professor of history was elected over a white candidate to the Atlanta City Democratic Committee not long ago. Due to the pioneering of men like A. T. Walden, who began the practice of law in the city 40 years ago when Negroes were not even welcome in the courtrooms, strong interracial business contacts exist. Negro executives of the Citizens' Trust Company, working with fellow members of the Federal Reserve System in leading white banks like the Fulton National and First National, have negotiated financing for millions of dollars worth of Negro housing. Atlanta Life and Southeastern Fidelity, two large Negro insurance companies, have helped obtain more such mortgages through their contacts with white companies in the same fields.

All of these forces are working to save the public schools by persuading the legislature to cut Fulton County free from state laws which prevent compliance with the Supreme Court. But the strongest potential force in the community has not chosen to make itself felt. The so-called "power structure"—the name commonly applied to the ruling business groups by the knowing ones in every Southern city—has not had the urge to assert its political power on behalf of the schools. The Mayor has called more than one meeting of the financial giants —Georgia Power, Coca-Cola, Rich's Department Store, Ford and General Motors branch managers, and the bankers and insurance mortgagers—to try to arouse them to head off the crisis in the schools, but though agreeing about the damage that closing the schools would do, they claim that their former political influence with the state government has evaporated.

True, they say, they once had enormous power over elected officials through the legal retainers and campaign contributions they conferred. But that was when Georgia's Governors in the 'thirties had to run the state on a budget of $30 million. Today's Governor has access to well over $300 million per year, generated by sales taxes and the new prosperity of the region, and is not dependent upon the "power structure" as his predecessors were. But it is also true that when its influence was at its height the "power structure" was reluctant to test it in the field of race relations.

Nevertheless, the present campaign to rally the city to the support of the schools has produced impressive results. By good publicity techniques, for example, a routine speech to the PTA of Spring Street Elementary School was turned into the kickoff of a sizable "Save Our Schools" movement. Two days after Hartsfield's initial attack on the "sell the schools" proposal, Fulton County Representative M. M. ("Muggsy") Smith, a beloved Georgia Tech football star 30 years ago and a Presbyterian deacon ever since, told an audience which overflowed the school auditorium why he agreed with the mayor and would fight for local option in the legislature. His words were on every radio and television station an hour later, and hundreds of "We Want Public Schools" stickers were ready for the audience to paste on their cars that night. The next morning, mothers from neighborhoods all over Atlanta gathered downtown to plan rallies in their schools similar to Spring Street's. Someone had been alert enough to have pamphlet reprints of "Muggsy" Smith's speech of the night before ready by 10 a.m. for the ladies to take home and distribute.

The spark has spread in Atlanta. The Fulton County grand jury called on the Chamber of Commerce to set up a bi-racial commission to ease the tensions which are likely to grow as time for the school segregation decision approaches. The Chamber says it is not the proper body to do so. But a dozen civic groups have now joined to create such an interracial citizens' committee in the near future.

Concern for Atlanta's schools, however, stops at the Fulton County line. The war between Atlanta and the state of Georgia assures the city of little sympathy or consideration at the Capitol. Under the Georgia County Unit System, Fulton County with its 571,600 people has no more power in state affairs than Troup County, with a population of 54,700.

Since 1917, votes cast in each of Georgia's 159 counties are counted under a system which gives the average voter outside of Fulton County 11.5 times as much voting power as a resident of Fulton. And as more Georgians move from the rural areas to the city the inequality becomes even greater. (In 1920 Fulton County contained 8 percent of the total population of Georgia but wielded only 1.5 percent of the voting power; in 1948 Fulton had 14.6 percent of the population, but still only 1.5 percent of the voting power.)

Governor Vandiver and Senators Russell (his uncle by marriage) and Talmadge (his associate in business) can afford to ignore Atlanta's wishes and preserve the segregation issue for 1960, and it seems that this is what they intend to do.

New Orleans Knows Better

WITH THE SURRENDER of Virginia, the present-day war against the Supreme Court is actually over, but word of this, as in Andy Jackson's day, may not reach Louisiana until after a second Battle of New Orleans has been needlessly fought. Those Louisiana leaders who see a third-party states' rights bolt in 1960 as the final desperate way left to nullify the 1954 decision desegregating the schools need the drama of a pitched battle if they are to win the Governorship this year, and through it control of the state Democratic Party machinery before the 1960 convention.

Lawyers on both sides of Bush v. Orleans Parish School Board, the New Orleans public school desegregation case under appeal for three years, anticipate that a final ruling will come before the next September term. If, as there is every reason to expect, Federal Judge Skelly Wright then orders the New Orleans School Board to admit some Negroes to some white schools, the way will be open for the extremist White Citizens' Councils to make school segregation the central issue in the Governorship election in December. What happened when this occurred in Alabama and Georgia in 1958 will most likely recur in Louisiana in 1959. The other candidates, taunted by the spokesman of the WCC, will outpromise each other on the lengths to which they will go to preserve segregation, and Louisiana will wind up with a Governor committed in advance to closing the public schools, as the new Governors of Georgia and Alabama are today.

New Orleans would be the first to suffer and, if allowed to choose for herself, would probably, like Atlanta (see NR, Feb. 2, 1959), accept some Negroes into the white school system rather than relinquish public schools entirely. But like Atlanta, New Orleans is at the mercy of the Governor and the legislature. Although Louisiana has no discriminatory County Unit System like Georgia's, Orleans Parish is definitely a minority voice in state government (with 600,000 people out of 2.7 million, who cast 165,000 out of the 617,000 votes for President in 1956). It is only one of three separate and nearly equal parts: "the North, the South and The City —New Orleans," as Harnett Kane explained so well in Louisiana Hayride some years ago:

> The South is the Louisiana of earlier stories, though altered somewhat by economic trends: the land of the swamps and the bayous, of liquid French and semi-liquid topography, an area of alluvial enriched soil that "grows where you stick your finger in it." Its people are fishermen, trappers, sugar and rice workers; and plantation owners are still powerful figures.
> The North is another land, another people, the red hills and the red necks. The soil is dry, hard, thin, the kind over which a man may break his back and yet not make a living. Its population are small farmers, country store-keepers, small town clerks. They are so-called Anglo-Saxons with little mixture of race.
> The South is tolerant, easy-going, Catholic. The North is tight-lipped, grim-eyed, Puritan, Protestant. Between the "hard-shelled Baptist country" and the "soft-shelled crab land" are barriers of economics, of race, of creed. In each want . . . is differently accepted. In the North it has brought cankering hatred; it has meant lynchings of Negroes, membership in organizations of dissent, anti-Papism, anti-liquor, anti many things. In the South it has meant volatile debate, perhaps; but that has ended in quiet if regretful assumption of the burden, with a shrug and an "Eh, bien!" South Louisianans have seldom tortured the blacks or one another. They have been inclined to orthodoxy in politics and have often accepted New Orleans and what it stood for, to them, while the North coldly rejected the scarlet witch.
> A rule to herself, then, remains New Orleans. . . . No Atlanta, no city of Southern go-getters, she is still the place of good food, good times, good manner of living; still the place wicked (mechante is the proper word) and happy in her wickedness. She draws much of the wealth from the rest of the state and from her trade territory in adjoining states. In her business area center the financial resources of the lower valley of the Father of the Waters, and the control of these resources. The South has distrusted the North, the North has hated the South; speaking strictly, of course, of Louisiana. Both, however, have feared New Orleans.

And they fear New Orleans today, with good reason, as a chink in the wall of "states' rights" defiance of the Supreme Court. "New Orleans should have been the leader in peaceful integration in the South," a Jesuit leader in the city for 20 years explained to me on a quiet Sunday afternoon.

> We have had a steady mixing of races and cultures since the first French settlers came. Our Catholic culture is Latin, not Irish, a difference in terms of tolerance. People from all over the world who swarm through here teach us cosmopolitan ways, and our daily trade contacts with Latin America are as close as those with Houston and Mobile.
> New Orleans has never had tight residential restrictions. No Negro section of town was more than four blocks from a white one, until new suburbs were built up after the war (private builders following the public housing pattern now build them all-Negro or all-white). And New Orleans Catholics are accustomed to sitting beside Negroes in church. (There are 14 Negro Catholic parishes in the city but there is lots of mixing of races for Sunday Mass. The present Archbishop has insisted on no segregation in services and gets it, at the great St. Louis Cathedral as elsewhere.)

Certainly there is a tendency in New Orleans to go along with non-Southern ways. The community has given in, slowly but finally, on every one of the federal court decisions which have been chipping away at segregation in the city for years: admitting Negroes to the golf links, the public library (which had Negro branches but did not admit colored to the Central Library), the new New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University, to all seats in the public buses, and finally and most recently, to all the recreation facilities of the city. "When change does come, nothing happens."

Naturally this is exasperating to the WCC, which has sunk a lot of time and money in its missionary work among the heathen New Orleaneans. "What's the matter with you white people?" the chairman of a suburban WCC group in Gentilly asked the audience at a meeting last autumn. "Aren't you interested in the preservation of the white race? To me the whiteness God put in me is the supreme thing in me." WCC membership in New Orleans, he went on to say, "is very low" (falling from an estimated high of 30,000 a year ago), and the lack of concern people showed when the buses were desegregated last Memorial Day "very surprising." (The WCC had advertised the race violence that would surely occur if "white" and "colored" signs were removed from street cars and buses and had alerted listeners to its regular Sunday night telecasts to report all incidents to the Council. Ten days after the buses were peaceably integrated the program announcer sadly remarked that he would report on trouble on the buses as soon as someone sent in an account of some.)

THE TV program helps draw crowds for WCC mass meetings and informs people of which "moderates" are entitled to anonymous telephone calls the next week. Its listening audience is large, but tucked in among the true believers are probably a few superficial amusement seekers. The night I caught the show, after a rousing chorus or two of "Dixie" Dr. William Lee Erwin, dentist-chairman of the New Orleans Council, rose beneath a banner proclaiming "Remember Little Rock" to give us the "Segregation News" roundup. Flash: "Nixon Girls Transferred to All-White D.C. School"; "Earl Warren Portrait Barred from Federal Court House in Los Angeles as Controversial"; "Eastland Says Only Five More Votes Needed to Curb Supreme Court." Not as rousing as the show I heard about where Erwin held in his hand a book used in the New Orleans public schools which "preached integration" and quoted volume and page. (The mad chase to check the reference revealed that the volume was a text in the field of education and the page made favorable reference to the "integrated curriculum.") Enough to keep you coming back for more. But not quite enough to inspire New Orleaneans whose ancestors observed the motto "Understand and Live" to go out and look for trouble on the buses.

But in another way the WCC has been very effective in New Orleans. Few "moderate" voices today are raised in support of upholding the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court. There were a number soon after the 1954 decision. But then several ministers were fired and more were warned to hold their tongues. The legislature took care of the educators by including in its massive resistance package one bill providing for dismissal of any school employee advocating integration or expressing an opinion about it. The New Orleans Chamber of Commerce fired its press agent for signing a petition in support of LSU professors who defended the Court. And a campaign of harassment by anonymous phone calls began. The result is stillness in New Orleans.

THERE is no organized effort—as in Atlanta—to encourage people to think in advance of what the loss of the public schools would mean to them and to make their views known. To be sure, only half as many parents are concerned: almost 50 percent of New Orleans children are in private schools. But there is no organized defense of the schools by Protestant clergy or professional men and women, and most Negro leaders in New Orleans seem more interested in their personal political organizations than in matters of principle. The press—an anemic force in New Orleans life—gives its readers no hint that there is cause for concern about the future of the schools.

Even the conduct of the Roman Catholic Church has been influenced by unrelenting WCC warfare against "moderation" in any form. The strong constructive influence for Christian brotherhood exercised by Archbishop Rummel in the 20 years of his office has flagged in the last three years, seemingly because of division on the race question within the Church. Repeatedly, in pastoral letters quoting Papal Encyclicals, the Archbishop has dubbed segregation "a mortal sin," and in 1956 he announced that parochial schools would soon be desegregated. The plan was to begin with the lowest grades—as in Nashville—and gradually work upward. Parochial schools are so crowded that the number of Negroes admitted would have been small and could have been selective. But before the plan could go into effect, an Association of Catholic Laymen publicly took issue with the Archbishop. Its leader was the moving force behind the statewide WCC, Deep Delta Boss Leander Perez. Quoting the Pope's Encyclical back at the Archbishop, the association said it could find no specific statement that segregation is immoral. The Archbishop ordered the association's members to disband or be excommunicated. They disbanded their organization. But in a newspaper ad, signed by 90 men who contribute generously to paying the Archbishop's bills, they challenged his authority and appealed to the Pope. (The Pope, of course, has never acknowledged their letter, but the challenge stands.)

The Orleans Parish parochial schools remain segregated—although Catholic schools in the majority of Southern cities are not. And so the diocese has missed the opportunity to serve as a powerful example of peaceful compliance with the law. (The Church schools themselves, however, teach the immorality of race discrimination, according to the pastoral letters, and a New Orleans college teacher says, "I can see the difference in the attitudes in my social problems course between sophomores from the public high schools and the Catholic highs.")

Only the "power structure" of New Orleans business and finance appears to be beyond reach of the WCC. They have no congregations or clients to consult or fear, and their main preoccupation is to keep New Orleans the flourishing center of a growing state. The forward-looking "reform" Mayor, deLesseps S. Morrison, whom they have kept in office for 13 years, looks coldly on anything that might sully the image of the modern progressive city he has helped create. The mayor, the chief of police, and the superintendent of schools are determined that there will be no mob rule in New Orleans. (The police have been professionalized under Mayor Morrison: the assistant chief says in cases of violence his force is trained to crack skulls, no matter what color.) And past experience indicates that coordination between city officials and the judiciary is such that they will succeed in keeping the peace—when and if desegregation of the schools is ordered.

Judge Skelly Wright—the man who will decide the school case—has an excellent sense of timing. He chose the evening before the long Memorial Day weekend, when the city would be on holiday, to order the end of segregation on New Orleans buses. And before he acted, motormen had special instructions on what to do and 75 plainclothesmen on 24-hour duty had been assigned to ride the buses or trail them in cars in case of trouble. When regular riders boarded the following Monday, "mixed" seating was a fait accompli. (The WCC leader in the legislature, Sen. W. M. Rainach, could not stir interest in a "seatmate bill," requiring the first occupant of a seat to give his permission for another to join him. Today older Negroes usually sit in the back where they always did; older white women up front sometimes get up and stand when Negroes sit beside them; but most younger people of both races pay little attention to each other as they jostle about in between.)

It will be hard for the WCC to make New Orleans into another Little Rock. Their candidate, W. M. Rainach, head of the State Joint Legislative Committee, is not likely to be swept into Baton Rouge as easily as Faubus won his third term in Arkansas. Louisiana has something approximating a two-party system in its traditional bi-factionalism (Long and Anti-Long), and there will be plenty of competition for the job Governor Earl Long must relinquish under the state's one-term law. Among those who show strong interest in running are Mayor Morrison, former Governors Jimmie ("You Are My Sunshine") Davis and Robert F. Kennon, the present Secretary of State Wade Martin, State Auditor Bill Dodd, Superintendent of Schools Shelby Jackson, Highway Chief Richardson and Congressman Otto Passman. Most of these men are members of the new United Democrats of Louisiana, established to head off any bolt from the national party this year, and conceivably through it they could agree on one man—or at most two—to take on Rainach in the first primary. Past history, however, argues against this. The Long faction would never allow their old foe, Morrison, to represent them on the ticket. And within the Long faction there are dozens who aspire to succeed the Governor. It would not be to Long's interest to pick any one over the others since he will need all their support to get the top job back for himself four years from now.

In a field of more than three, Perez believes his man has a good chance to get into a run-off. Certainly, as the UDOL knows, there is danger he could be right. A private poll recently made by a group respected for accuracy indicates that if Faubus were running for President on a states' rights third-party ticket today, he would carry Louisiana. (Only 28 percent of those polled in Orleans Parish would vote for him, but 59 percent of North Louisiana would.) The proper manager might be able to translate that Faubus popular sentiment into a Rainach victory, and Perez's followers say that he is the man who can do it.

Firmly in alliance, behind the scenes, with the "best people" who head the WWCs in North Louisiana, Perez has been undisputed boss of Plaquemines and St. Bernard parishes in the Deep Delta since the early 40's (an early ally of Huey Long, he is still using and improving upon the Kingfish's methods). No one in Louisiana politics denies Perez's power to do as he will with the votes of this rich region of offshore oil and minerals, fur and fishing. Charges of voting irregularities are commonplace. In Plaquemines parish, the voting "registrar" keeps no office hours; he seeks out the citizens he chooses to have register and passes by those he does not favor. Those who appear to vote need show no receipts to do so and are not checked off any list to prevent enthusiastic reappearances at the polls.

Local, state and federal officials have repeatedly confessed their impotence to deal with Plaquemines' carefree ways; the US Department of Justice has investigated the area after almost every election for 20 years, and nobody has gone to jail yet. (In 1944, when "reform" Governor Sam Jones named a replacement as sheriff of Plaquemines displeasing to Perez, it took 600 soldiers of the State Guard to break through the road blockade, complete with flaming gasoline, which stood in the new man's path into the parish. Last year Perez's spiritual leader, Archbishop Rummel, met with the same kind of respect for superior authority when he named a Negro priest to the Bend Mission in Perez territory. The parishioners barred the priest; the Archbishop closed the church; the church stayed closed until a white priest was sent as a replacement.)

Accusations recur that Perez has used his position as Attorney-General of Plaquemines to obtain off-shore oil and mineral concessions for himself and his friends, but no one has ever produced the evidence. Obviously money is not one of Perez's problems, however, and if his supply of local funds runs dry, he doubtless can tap old friends —offshore oil and otherwise—from the Byrd-for-President Committee, which he helped organize in 1944, and the Dixiecrat Party, of which he was a prime mover in 1948. Senator Eastland of Mississippi, a close friend, has been known to help out in times past with information from his Internal Security Subcommittee on Perez's opponents. Certainly Perez's and Rainach's friend and neighbor, Orval Faubus, can be counted on to drop over for a few personal appearances.

Whatever the outcome, the kind of campaign the WCC will wage for Governor in 1959 will mean money in the bank for the Faubus-for-President ticket in Louisiana in 1960—and less freedom of action for whoever is Governor when the school crisis comes in New Orleans.

Nashville—First Steps Firmly Taken

IN THE CAPITOLS of the Deep South not many cheers go up at mention of the names Kefauver, Gore and Clement. These three "Golden Boys" of Tennessee politics—who as national rivals regard each other with mutual suspicion—are held in equal disregard for refusing to defy the Supreme Court and, what is worse, proving it possible for Southern politicians to turn their backs on massive resistance without having the voters turn their backs on them.

Aside from Lyndon Johnson who as Majority Leader was excused by his Southern colleagues from taking a regional stand, Kefauver and Gore were the only two Southern Senators who did not sign the 1956 Southern Manifesto against the Court decision desegregating public schools. And Governor Clement that same year called out the state police and the National Guard to prevent mobs from interfering with desegregation at Clinton, Tennessee, and the next year encouraged the Mayor of Nashville to take strong measures against hoodlums who sought to prevent Negroes from entering Nashville schools. Nevertheless Senator Gore won reelection in 1958 by a 3-2 margin over an opponent who tried to make the Southern Manifesto the issue. Senator Kefauver seems in a strong position to withstand a similar assault in 1960. And Governor Clement succeeded, narrowly, in picking his successor, under Tennessee's one-term law, in last summer's primary. ("All the other candidates were running against me," Mr. Clement says.)

This is not the kind of news that Deep South "eternal defiance" leaders like to have get around. Nor is there any more cheer for them in reports of what is happening where the law is being obeyed.

You don't meet many people in Nashville who fail to remind the visitor that this is the "Athens of the South," and they show you a model of the Parthenon, left over from the 1898 Centennial celebration of the state's admission to the Union, to prove it. More tangible evidence is the comparative ease with which Nashville has begun desegregation of her public schools. And now that the fury of September, 1957, is fading from memory, there is a good deal of pride that this is so.

Thirty-four Negro first- and second- graders are now attending five Nashville schools which were all-white two years ago. Eleven of them entered the first grade last year in spite of riots, led by John Kasper and his followers outside several of the schools and dynamiting of one (the Hattie Cotton School in East Nashville). Twice as many Negro parents were willing for their children to pioneer in mixed classes this year, and at least three times as many are expected to apply for transfer to the white schools next term.

Parents, teachers, pupils and administrators report Nashville's experience to date a success. Which shows the wisdom of those who picked Nashville for an early legal test. Nashvilleans have been exposed to more enlightenment and Christian tolerance than most other Southerners. There are 10 colleges and universities—Negro and white—in the city. Baptists, Methodists and the Churches of Christ make their regional headquarters and publish most of the South's church and Sunday school literature there.

Negro and white colleges in Nashville maintain an exchange library service; Negroes attend graduate courses at Vanderbilt, Peabody, Scarritt, Maryville and the University of Tennessee School of Social Work; white students go to Fisk University and Meharry Medical College. Parochial schools are desegregated. Both races can belong to the local League of Women Voters, AAUW, Academy of Medicine, American Nurses Association and National Association of Social Workers. Whites have served with Negroes on the boards of local colleges and settlements for a generation. And Nashville is one of the few Southern cities with housing and eating facilities for interracial meetings—various campuses have had them for 10 years or more.

The city has lifted race barriers on the municipal golf courses and at the public library and the railroad station without incident. And more recently, before pending suits could come to trial, the transit system was quietly integrated. Ads for Pepsodent and Wildroot were simply pasted over the signs on the insides of buses which had read "colored this end" and "white this end."

But "up to the time the school decision came, only women and do-gooders had thought much about integration," one of the leading do-gooders says, "When it grew clear that we couldn't avoid the issue any longer without jeopardizing the schools, however, some of the really substantial men in the community became concerned." (The Nashville Community Relations Conference had conducted a campaign to get these men into action: "We sat around a table one day and parcelled out the names of 200 of our leading men, 15 apiece. Then we called on them and explained why they should help get the school board to make plans for carrying out the orders of the Court.")

When the important men in the community took over, there was a series of meetings with school officials where board members were given the assurance that "so long as they acted in good faith a number of fairly substantial people would back them up." And when Superintendent of Schools Bass devised a plan he believed would work and would be acceptable to the federal court, they did. Bass, who has since retired, comes from a rural county in northwest Tennessee where white supremacy views prevail; he himself strongly disapproves of integration. But he is first of all a dedicated school man. He integrated the school system's teacher committees when it became clear that white and Negro teachers would benefit from interchange. And when it was definite that Nashville could not have schools and segregation, he developed a plan to desegregate one grade at a time and fought for it. (After he had dispersed a howling white mob with a passionate speech on opening day in 1957, Mr. Bass remarked that "If ever a crowd needed education it is that one.")

The fact that the young federal judge who made the decision on the Nashville school case, Judge William E. Miller, is so highly respected strengthened the hand of Mr. Bass and his supporters. The fact that the sensible people were getting sound guidance from the Nashville Tennessean helped too. And the work which Negro leaders in PTA and other groups did to prepare parents for the differences they would face in the desegregated schools greatly eased tensions. But the reason that Nashville did not become another Little Rock was that her elected officials were not Faubuses.

When the opening day crisis came in Nashville, Governor Clement had already had his trial by fire. On a late summer morning the previous year he had called a meeting on the verandah of the Governor's mansion to discuss the urgent matter of the rioting at Clinton set off by John Kasper and White Citizens Council visitors from Alabama and elsewhere. Should he or should he not answer the plea of the mayor of Clinton for state troops to bring the mob under control? To do so obviously involved the political risk of seeming to go to the aid of the federal courts against the local segregationists. Present that morning were his wife, his father, several members of his cabinet, the adjutant general, the chief of highway police and his preacher. The Governor asked his preacher, the pastor of the McKendree Methodist Church, where Clement has taught a men's Sunday School class for years, to lead them in prayer; then he asked each one to give his advice. Before the meeting broke up Clement had ordered 50 highway patrolmen and a division of the Guard into Clinton. But the Governor took the precaution to order that no state troops were to set foot on school grounds. No child was to be escorted to school. This left him with a persuasive defense to use in the next campaign—as he did. He had been acting solely to preserve the peace—not to enforce integration. And he restored law and order in Clinton.

Some point out that Governor Clement, barred from running for reelection, was free of any immediate campaign inhibitions—and that what he did effectively advanced his position on the national stage where his ambition now centers. He explains that his respect for law and order—growing out of his training as a lawyer, as an agent for the FBI, and in the Christian religion—allowed him no choice. But whatever the reasons, his immediate, forceful action established a precedent for his friend, Mayor Ben West, to follow when the peace was threatened in Nashville.

When the 1957-58 school year opened on September 9, Mayor West was in the East, presiding over a meeting of the American Municipal Association of which he was president. A lawyer, with a liberal record in the State Senate, Ben West has been reelected mayor for 8 years. When he left home, there was not much thought of serious trouble. True, John Kasper was back in Nashville after serving time in prison for his performance at Clinton. And for two months he and Fred Stroud, an ousted Presbyterian minister who had set up a church of his own, had held almost nightly meetings agitating the least literate white parents to boycott the schools. But the police were not prepared for what happened that Monday morning.

Mobs gathered at most of the schools where Negro children were entering the first grade. Rocks and insults were hurled. Cars raced through the streets bearing KKK signs and Confederate flags. The police responded in feeble confusion. That night the Kasper crowd gathered on the capitol steps for a pep meeting, and a little after midnight a charge of dynamite went off in the Hattie Cotton School where one Negro child had enrolled the morning before.

Mayor West flew home at once, and by the next morning police had orders to crack down. When the mobs appeared at the schools again police stood in the doors to bar their way. Known agitators were taken into court, and the Mayor sought injunctions against the ringleaders. Judge Miller issued temporary—and later permanent—restraining orders against Kasper and nine others, forbidding them to interfere with school desegregation. And the worst was over.

"As it worked out," one reporter relates, "the dynamiting was to the advantage of the city. It happened at night when no one was hurt, and it woke people up. Most of Nashville just didn't want to face up to what the Supreme Court had said, either for it or against it. And it took the lawlessness to solidify the lawful element."

The "lawful element" and Mayor West have been in firm control in the 16 months since. (Although there are Tennessee liberals who place West in the class with the admirable Mayor Hartsfield of Atlanta, cynics in the Negro community suggest that their growing political power may have something to do with the excellent service. The flight of whites to the suburbs has been so massive that today about 30 percent of Nashville proper is Negro and more than half of the 30,000 Negroes eligible are registered to vote. Two Negroes have served on the City Council since before 1954 and there is now a Negro member of the school board.) When Jackie Robinson came to Nashville recently to address an NAACP rally, for example, the Mayor gave him a police escort to and from the airport and the keys to the city.

In the schools there is every sign of intelligent professional planning. A mental health specialist who is giving close attention to the desegregated schools told me he is impressed by the degree of protection the Negro children receive. "Every teacher and principal seems to be operating quietly but with extreme care to see that the Negro children get a strictly fair deal." And mothers in the Negro PTAs also report that from what their children say the principals and teachers are making a real effort.

No one with whom I talked in Nashville, Negro or white, questioned that the first grade was the place to begin—if there had to be a small beginning. (Few Negro leaders, however, believe that there was any need to do less than desegregate the whole school system at one time: "The city could have stood the shock.") Sex questions don't complicate matters in the lower grades, white parents say in explaining their preference. There isn't the problem of different levels of preparation that complicates things later on, and prejudices haven't had time to incubate in first-grade minds, others say.

The first-grade class I visited without prearrangement two days before Valentine Day seemed to bear out the latter. In fact it looked more like a shot from an NAACP documentary than the real thing. How had the mixing of races worked out, I asked the perfect Central Casting Model of a first-grade teacher? Why, just fine. No trouble at all. Some of the other teachers had asked how she was going to seat them and she worried about that but decided to let the children sit wherever they chose, just as she always had. They mixed up naturally. Did the whites and coloreds treat each other any differently, now that they had been together awhile? Well, come in and see. The children were having their mid-day rest, each on his own cot. Tacked all around the wall were paper sacks, each with a name printed on it, which had hung there all week. Everybody had made valentines and delivered them to those they liked. "Go bring your sacks, children, and show our visitors your gifts." Nobody had been short-changed.

One Negro boy, whose family income bracket had permitted him two years of kindergarten — above the reach of most in this school — is the accepted leader. That day he had brought the family encyclopedia to answer some questions that had come up the day before about butterflies.

The classes with Negro pupils play apart from the others so there is little opportunity for older children to create incidents with the little ones. And the few Negro children in Nashville who have experienced contact with white classmates, by all reports, are unshaken by it thus far. But this is not true of the parents.

A young Negro social worker, employed by the Junior-League-financed Mental Health Center, has interviewed the families of most of the first-year Negro children. The parents, she says, felt that the children were not aware of any special tension or excitement. The first days at school were so novel, so overwhelming, that the mob turmoil had made no special impression. The children adjusted. But some of the parents couldn't. Two of the mothers whose children entered the desegregated schools had to have doctor's care; one still does. Some mothers were too frightened by the crowds on opening day to take their children to the new school three blocks away and instead went back to the all-Negro school 15 blocks distant. (The young lady who conducted the study—and is bringing it up to date at present—is an interesting study herself. Educated in the Nashville public schools and the state Negro college, she became excited about mental health work when she held a clerical job in the Los Angeles Mental Health Department for a short time. Family reasons took her back to Nashville, and the Tennessee University School of Social Work accepted her as the only Negro in the class of '54. She works in the Mental Health Center now on an equal professional basis, with white as well as Negro cases she does not feel restricted in her friendships or have the desire to look outside the South for a job. When her youngest child starts school next year, she is not sure whether she will go to the nearby white school or the more distant one where her brother is enrolled: "I will have to find out more to know whether the white school is a better one.")

The experience with the "stair-step" plan of desegregation in Nashville is good so far as it goes. But it doesn't go very far. All except 34 of the 1,300 Negro children still attend all-Negro schools. The great majority will remain there because of residence even when desegregation extends to all grades. And that will be made more certain by improving schools in Negro neighborhoods (the city has built four new Negro schools in the last five years and made additions to two others) and further segregating Negro housing (two $20,000-$30,000 all-Negro developments have gone up in the suburbs, and federal Urban Renewal projects are resettling displaced families in all-Negro areas.)

But far more are eligible for hitherto white schools—which would be more convenient—than are entering them. 126 Negroes were eligible by residence to enter the all-white schools in 1957 when only 19 did. And eight of the 19 dropped out, most of them in the first three ugly days, leaving only 11 to finish the term. The Nashville branch of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), a small interracial group of Martin Luther King's followers, made a study to find out what happened to the other 115. "CORE members reported the first-grade approach made it hard if not impossible for many families to take advantage of integration," they state.

> Mothers with babies or pre-school children usually depend on an older child to escort the 6-year-old to and from school. Sending the children to different schools would require the mother to accompany the first-grader. She would then have to leave the very youngest at home alone, or else hire a baby-sitter twice a day. The problem is tougher when both parents have jobs.
> Aside from the practicalities, some 6-year-olds quite naturally wanted to go to school with their older brothers and sisters. More than one parent said, "If I could send all my children to the neighborhood school, they would go—but not the first-grader, alone."

Some specific answers parents gave when questioned were:

> 1. "I have an older child in the Negro school and my first-grader needs his protection."
> 2. "I am not well, so I am keeping my child out of school the first week."
> 3. "The child is not well enough to go and register."
> 4. "We are planning to move to another community within Nashville."
> 5. "I don't want to make my child a guinea pig."
> 6. "When these folks get off the school grounds and quit threatening on the telephone, I'll send my child to the integrated school."

An NAACP leader estimates that at least 50 of the families who did not choose to transfer to the white schools were restrained by the fact that the older children in the family had to continue in their former schools. Others say the violence and threats of Kasper's followers were the greatest deterrents. And they point to the increasing number of transfers this year and to the fact that only two of the group entering in 1958 have dropped out—and one had expected in advance to move to Ohio during the term. Some emphasize the fact that school district lines were redrawn shortly before the first Negroes were admitted (to bring the number eligible down to the paltry 126, the critics say) and many parents were confused about where their children were entitled to go (school officials are accused of making no effort to clear up the confusion).

White segregationists see in the small proportion of eligible Negroes who have transferred to the white schools proof that Negroes want segregation as much as they do. NAACP spokesmen, and most other Negro leaders as well, say it merely proves that less than full desegregation won't work. NAACP lawyers have attached a brief to this effect to an appeal challenging the present Nashville desegregation plan now pending in federal District Court.

Not even the Federation for Constitutional Government, Nashville's more sedate version of the White Citizens Councils, really feels it worthwhile, however, to agitate for anything less than "stair-step" desegregation anymore.

But Nashville is not Tennessee. And the rest of the state traditionally reserves the right to disagree with "Athens." Tennessee, as V. O. Key explained in his definitive work Southern Politics, "is a narrow ribbon of real estate stretching from North Carolina to the Mississippi."

> From Bristol in the far northeast to Memphis in the southwest about equals the distance from Hartford, Connecticut, to Cleveland, Ohio. Tennessee's far western counties are but northward projections of Mississippi; its eastern mountain counties share both the topography and the spirit of western North Carolina and southwestern Virginia. Between West Tennessee and East Tennessee lies Middle Tennessee, a fertile bowl, sometimes called locally the "dimple of the universe," whose principal city is Nashville.

And the diversity in geography has produced a distinct difference in political behavior, going back to the Civil War. "The dispute over slavery and secession," Key says, "forged Tennessee partisan alignments into a form that has persisted to this day."

> Slavery was both unprofitable and unpleasing to the people of the mountains of East Tennessee. The plantation system never flourished in the hills and the small farmer who tilled his own land could take no stock in the theory of slavery as a divinely ordained institution. Even less was he disposed to defend the slave property of his planter neighbor to the west.
> In 1861 East Tennessee had few slaves and was unionist; West and Middle Tennessee held slaves and Confederate sentiments. . . . Twice—in February and June, 1861—they voted against secession, but the slave interests of West and Middle Tennessee took the state out of the union. . . .
> Today East Tennessee harbors many Republicans while Middle and West Tennessee are Democratic strongholds.

All these differences will stand out again when the other three big cities of the state face the decision concerning the schools which Nashville has had to make. Knoxville, on the eastern border (capital of TVA territory, university center, with an enlightened city government backed by a sizable labor and Negro vote) will probably accede with reasonably good grace to a court order to desegregate when it comes (perhaps next fall).

Memphis, in the extreme southwest, next door to Mississippi, will find it much harder to accommodate. But the fact that there are few mixed neighborhoods in the city and Memphis' large middle class places a high value on the public school system should help soften the blow. (The city's colleges and the Memphis Press-Scimitar would also have a benign influence.)

Chattanooga, on the Alabama-Georgia border, will take any desegregation order far harder. A town of the very rich and the very poor, Chattanooga has a minute middle class and a large Ku Klux Klan. Many of the latter are "Georgia commuters" who work in Chattanooga but live across the state line and look to Talmadge and Atlanta and not to Nashville for direction. And the racist feelings ingrained in them from that source are encouraged daily by the destructive Chattanooga Free Press. (The opposition Chattanooga Times, owned by the New York Times Ochs family, which has urged toleration of the Supreme Court school decision, lost 10,000 subscribers last year.)

WITH ALMOST no local organization Albert Gore's strongly segregationist opponent for the Senate, former Governor Prentice Cooper, swamped Gore in Chattanooga in 1958. In that same primary, promising the voters to put up the kind of battle to preserve segregation they seemed to want, attorney Ralph Kelley was elected to represent Chattanooga in the state legislature. And since the General Assembly convened in January he has introduced bills to change the school laws written in Governor Clement's term to make it far more difficult for other school boards to go even as far as Nashville has gone toward compliance.

Support for the Kelley bills is reported to be growing, and the Governor, Buford Ellington, who was elected last year by less than 9,000 votes over a violent segregationist, Andrew "Tip" Taylor, says "If the bills reach my desk, I'm probably obligated to sign them because of campaign promises." However, his friends believe Ellington will change his mind when he hears from the attorney-general. Lawyers for the state who have studied the proposed laws fear that "if the Kelley bills are enacted, the courts may look at all our school bills and declare them all part of a package to maintain segregation in defiance of the Supreme Court's 1954 decision and throw them all out." In that case, all would be confusion —a confusion welcome to the "Tip" Taylors of Tennessee who badly need an issue on which to oppose Kefauver's re-election in 1960 and Clement's aspirations to that seat or to return to the governor's chair in 1962.

Deliberate, Yes—Speed, No

THIS YEAR the balance will tip against "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court's 1954 order to desegregate public schools. In late 1958, four and a half years after the decision, four of the 11 states of the old Confederacy were complying with it—in their fashion. Seven remained defiant. The division became six to five after the courts opened Virginia's school doors in December. And next fall, when Dade County admits Negroes to a Miami, Florida, elementary school, the balance will shift to seven to four — with compliers leading.

But don't expect more such quick capitulations. The Deep South states, from South Carolina to the Mississippi, have dug in for the duration. Most of the men elected to high office in those states last year won because they promised to keep Negroes out of the schools. Such sure-fire vote-getting issues are rare, and they intend to keep this one hot as long as they can. Segregationist leaders with a more objective view see bigger things to be gained by delaying the final surrender: a chance in 1960 to try a long-shot plan to nullify the decision of 1954; and time for the North, East and West to experience the effects of the mass migration of Negroes which, without much notice, has already nationalized the race question.

To them, the delay is more important than the cost. If it is necessary to close all the public schools to prevent desegregation they are willing to do it, and most of their constituents would back them up—for a while. It is impossible to tell how long most people would be content to do without public schools. But probably not as long as Herman Talmadge, who says "Forever." The leaders seem sure that they could organize and begin to operate private schools, supported by state tuition grants to pupils, before the parents' patience expired, and the successful Front Royal boycott of the desegregated Warren County High School has strengthened their confidence. But a preliminary study of the economic consequences of liquidating public education, made by University of Virginia Professor Lorin Thompson, shows that this would be a slightly larger job than most enthusiasts for the substitute system yet confess:

> A few facts taken from the annual reports of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and other state reports show the magnitude of the problem in quantitative terms. First of all the total value of all school property in Virginia in 1957 was reported to be $576 million. Of this amount $524 million represented sites and buildings, $42 million furniture and equipment and just under $10 million represented school buses. . . . The total net debt owed by the city and county school boards is in excess of $200 million and current annual expenditures are more than $200 million. . . . It is sheer speculation as to what proportion of the value each community might recover from the sale of its surplus school building sites, furniture and equipment. One thing is certain, the bond holders would have in excess of $200 million owed them and would require immediate settlement. . . . If school buildings were sold to private school groups the financial underwriting necessary for the acquisition of property now valued at approximately $600 million would be a most substantial undertaking. Long established private schools have not found it easy to borrow money for new facilities. . . .

This, of course, is but one of the many complications that would arise, and unquestionably, even with the best of luck, the private school plan would mean a gigantic educational loss to the state. With great effort, however, determined men might make such a substitute limp along well enough to mollify public distress for a few years—long enough for the last-ditch segregationists to try two desperate gambles.

Ever since Rutherford B. Hayes won the election of 1876 over Samuel J. Tilden in the Electoral College (185-184), minority political blocs have dreamed of being the balance of power in another such coup. Loyal Dixiecrats have dreamed of it since 1944. By holding out their combined electoral votes in a tight Presidential contest, States Rights Southerners picture themselves deciding the contest and naming their price, as their Confederate granddaddies did, when by the Compromise of 1877 they elected Hayes and committed him to freeing the South from the 14th Amendment.

This vision now haunts even such pragmatists as Herman Talmadge. "It's the only way we can fight back, build a counter-force to match the NAAPC [sic], and let the parties choose between us," he says earnestly. "And until the South can do that, we won't get anywhere." How many electoral votes would it take? "Well, it is theoretically possible that Georgia's 32 votes alone could be decisive—if the election was close enough, but we might get together as many as 75 to 80." (The votes of Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana total 150). Who would organize it? "Those young Governors of Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina are the ones to do it. Georgia has a law setting the electors free to vote as they please, regardless of party—it was put on the books while I was Governor. So has Alabama. And I think Arkansas has, or is getting one. Mississippi would go along with us, I think."

Then in the unusual event that Nixon and Stevenson —or any other pair of nominees—had run and failed to get a majority of the electoral votes, not including the 75-80 votes the Talmadge-Faubus contingent was holding out, the segregationists would be sitting in the catbird seat. What would your terms be then, I asked Talmadge? "I would run it like an old-fashioned Jewish fire sale—take bids." Whichever party agreed in advance to the Compromise of 1961, freeing the South a second time from observance of the 14th Amendment, would win the Presidency in 1960.

If it turns out that the American electorate does not cooperate, the bitter-enders will need to buy more time. For then they will have to fall back on their final contention that the rest of the country does not really want to practice racial equality any more than does the South. Senator Russell's proposed bill to speed the process of dispersing the Negro population more evenly over the US by federal subsidies to Southern Negroes who volunteer to move to areas where fewer Negroes live has been taken by many as a cynical joke. But he and hundreds—if not thousands—of other Southern opinion makers sincerely believe that ignorance more than anything else accounts for the Northern position on segregation. And they wait impatiently for the rest of white America to wake up to what they are sure will be the disillusionment of living at close quarters with the Negro.

White segregationist leaders think the demographic facts are working for them. They cite a recent study of Negro migration made at Princeton University: "There were more Negroes in the North in 1950 than in all the Confederacy at the time of the Civil War. . . .

> The trend is clearly seen when the five Southern and the five Northern states with the largest Negro populations are contrasted. In 1910, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia had a Negro population of 4.5 million; in 1960, 4.6 million.
> In 1910 Illinois, Michigan, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania together had only 566,000 Negroes; in 1950, 3.2 million. These five Northern states absorbed half the national increase in 40 years, while the five Southern states absorbed little more than a thirtieth of the increase.
> In recent years this trend has been accelerating. In the decade between 1940 and 1950, the Negro population declined slightly in the five Southern states while the five Northern states absorbed 54 percent of the national increase. California, Florida and Texas absorbed an additional 22 percent.

Because of this massive migration North and West from the rural South "the stereotype of the Negro as a toiling sharecropper is becoming as antiquated as that of the slaves in the cotton fields," the Princeton study points out. "A new stereotype is evolving, though, and it is that of the lowest tenth living in squalor and disorganization in teeming slums . . . the problems of social and economic retardation that were products of the life in the rural South have been transferred to the metropolitan areas of the North."

Segregationist strategists count on the transfer of this burden to produce new allies in Congress against extending federal guarantees of civil rights. If it takes a while for white Northerners to learn where their self-interest lies, the Southern segregationists are willing to wait—and suffer an under-educated generation of children as the price.

IN THE seven states of the old Confederacy which have chosen the course of token accession to the authority of the Supreme Court the interest of the leaders is in making social change as painless—and as slight—as possible. They consider grandiose schemes to prevent the inevitable a waste of everybody's time. But they are no less resolved than the Talmadges to stick to the old way of doing things wherever they can. And as time goes on, Southern ingenuity will no doubt produce some interesting maneuvers for evading the Supreme Court's intent in the case of Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (May 17, 1954).

These states are giving immediate priority to setting up a court-proof plan for subsidizing private schools with public money. All of them have black-belt areas which would revolt against any state administration which failed to provide such an alternative to desegregated public schools. But in any case more private schools are needed as safety valves in the long transition period ahead. Many localities are quietly doing what James F.

Byrnes advised five years ago. Fearing the verdict his former colleagues of the Supreme Court were about to hand down, Mr. Byrnes told his fellow South Carolinians that "to meet this situation we are forced to do now what we should have been doing for the past 50 years." Making "separate" facilities for Negroes "equal" was what he had in mind. (South Carolina the previous year had reported current expenditures per white pupil double those for Negroes—$195.50 and $98.14 respectively. And that ratio prevailed generally throughout the South.)

The states have not kept separate records on educational spending for the two races since 1954, but almost everywhere one travels across the South there are new Negro school buildings under construction or recently completed. School boards and taxpayers view this as one of the most practical ways to limit desegregation. Negro children may choose to stay in a Negro school rather than transfer to a white school if the former is more modern and attractive than the latter, they believe. In Charlottesville, Virginia, this was reported to be the case. And Front Royal expects it to prove true when a new Negro school opens there next fall.

Where there are no new buildings to attract Negro children to the schools where whites wish them to go, gerrymandering is accomplishing much the same purpose. In most communities a little judicious fiddling with the boundary lines of school districts produces the desired black-and-white pattern. Most Southern cities had taken this step well in advance of 1954. Others are adjusting district boundaries to follow the color line.

In older communities where whites and Negroes live mixed in together by custom dating back to slave days more drastic remedies are required. Officials in these places laughingly explain that they have a long way to go to catch up with the North in segregating housing. And a good deal of catching up is being done. White banks which never granted credit for Negro housing before are financing middle-class Negro developments in the suburbs—new and modern, but segregated. The Federal Urban Renewal Program is transplanting more Negroes from mixed downtown areas to segregated projects on the outskirts. As Southerners grasp the central fact in the recent report of the Commission on Race and Housing, signed by such men as Henry Luce and Elliott Bell—that housing policy currently dominates the whole issue of segregation in the US—they will act on it to construct a more solid foundation for segregation. But in the process, many Negro families will move from unspeakable squalor into homes from which children can more easily make the transition to desegregated schools when the time comes.

All this suggests for the future a very "deliberate" rate of speed toward desegregation. And if the task of bringing about compliance with the law respecting the schools remains—as it is now—the concern of only one of the three branches of the federal government, it will indeed be a slow process. The Judiciary, lacking the active support of the Legislative and Executive departments, is necessarily limited in power. It must proceed case by case, school district by school district, to determine where good faith compliance is not forthcoming.

It may take years to define the tests of good faith with respect to the Alabama Pupil Placement Law, which now becomes central to the litigation over the schools. Because the Court ruled that law was constitutional on its face, other states have adopted similar statutes as an escape route from the 1954 order. Judgment on the constitutionality of these measures will hinge on how they are generally applied, not on any one case. And if it takes as long to determine "good faith" in the case of admission of Negroes to schools as it has in their admission to duty as jurors, it will be quite a while. Neal v. Delaware, establishing the rights of Negroes as jurors, was decided by the Supreme Court in 1880, and cases arising from that decision are still coming through the courts.

There is little reason either to believe that desegregation will gather momentum as it goes. Fisk University sociologist Dr. Herman Long writes that:

> positive policies toward desegregation do not easily and naturally diffuse from one area to another. The established ways of doing things, custom and habit, tend to create resistances which segment the changed situations and cause them to stand relatively independent of each other.

He comments as an aside that desegregation has not "diffused" even from the golf course where he has played for several years to the rest of the all-white park which surrounds it.

There are those who see "diffusion" as a greater force than Dr. Long does. But few who have studied recent events in the South share commentator Chet Huntley's view that segregation would disappear more rapidly if the NAACP ceased its legal attacks on the institution. It is hard to find a single significant example of voluntary desegregation which has occurred without legal action or threat of it. And if "deliberate speed" is construed as less than the next hundred years, "diffusion" won't produce change in time for that deadline.

But there are other forces that may speed things up in the South. Congress could—and may—decide to give its moral support to the position taken by the Supreme Court. (Sen. Paul Douglas' proposed Civil Rights Act of 1959, embodying Section III as deleted from the Civil Rights Law passed last year, is not likely to receive favorable consideration. But some compromise between the President's and Sen. Lyndon Johnson's much more modest proposals can probably be passed if Senator Johnson puts his mind to it.) Or another President two years from now could decide to exercise the authority of his office in that direction. Either or both could vastly change the outlook—and could have at any time since May, 1954.

Even if the courts are left to enforce the 14th Amendment virtually alone, however, there will be changes in the South which can make that task less unbearable. The mass migration of Negroes in the past 10 years has been within the South as well as outside it, and always to the city. The number of Negro farmers in the South declined 17.1 percent in the four years from 1950 to 1954, until by 1954 there were only 160,000 farms operated by Negro sharecroppers in the South. And as they move to the city, rural Southern Negroes begin to vote. As the Negro vote climbs in city after city, the interest of elected officials in enforcing civil rights grows, as Atlanta, Knoxville, Nashville and New Orleans demonstrate.

Negro leaders in these and most other cities of the South are aware that the vote is the ultimate power and are giving increasing priority to registration and voter education through the churches as well as through the NAACP and fraternal organizations. One of the first activities Martin Luther King inaugurated when he was called to his church in Montgomery was a weekly meeting to instruct church members in the techniques of registration and voting.

Today the Southern Regional Council estimates there are 1.2 million Negroes on the voting rolls in the 11 Southern states. This represents a steady growth of suffrage since white primaries were outlawed in 1944. And if Negro voting increases proportionately with Negro migration from the farms to Southern cities, pressure on elected officials to get on with desegregation will mount substantially.

University of Alabama political scientist Donald Strong reminds us, however, that the recent rate of growth in the Negro vote may not continue. He wonders whether "we have not perhaps reached a temporary plateau in the move toward re-enfranchisement of the Southern Negro."

> In its unvarnished form, the proposition is that in most areas of the South, a Negro with political consciousness, who really wants to vote, can overcome the relatively mild obstacles in his way. Similarly, in the rural black belt the obstacles are so formidable and the number of politically-conscious Negroes so relatively few that it is hard to foresee a substantial increase in registration in the near future.

Strong says that part of the problem of increasing the number of voters is that of overcoming indifference to politics on the part of many. "If all extra-legal obstacles to Negro voting could suddenly be swept away, Negroes would not rush to the polls," he states. It was not, after all, until 36 years after women had been given the vote, in 1916, that they voted in substantially the same numbers as men. He draws another analogy with various immigrant groups, and says only when these had produced their own lawyers and prosperous merchants were they able to command a respectful hearing in politics. "Negroes, too, must develop a corps of middle-class leaders with substantial education and economic independence of whites. . . . Despite the progress of the past decade, it is probable that the second million votes will come harder."

Yet, it is certain that the migration from the country to the city will mean better schools for the Negro and more income too as a rule—which will contribute toward developing more competent leadership for the continuing test of strength which will go on for years.

But the Southern Negro is only one aspect of a vast change in prospect. "The South is no longer the Economic Problem Number One of the Nation," Walter Prescott Webb, the Texas historian whose book, Divided We Stand, inspired Franklin Roosevelt's Southern Economic Committee in depression days, pointed out in an address last year comparing 1950 with 1930. "In many ways," Professor Webb says, "it looks like the Number One economic opportunity."

> The South today has a latent industrial trinity that may be as potent in the future as coke and coal, limestone and iron have been in the past. The South has a complete monopoly on one of these, more than half of the second, and about one-half of the third. This trinity is hydrocarbons, sulphur and water which exist together along the Gulf Coast. They are the basis of the petrochemical industry which is already concentrated in that area and growing at such a rate that no one can calculate its future. The North has no sulphur and less than five percent of the hydrocarbons. In this new chemical trinity it has nothing but water . . . industry is coming from all corners . . . to all parts of the South, promising to make the Gulf Coast a golden crescent. Not only is industry coming, but people are coming too. . . . The South that formerly exported its talent and imported its capital is now importing talent and exporting capital. . . . The New England textile factories are moving to Virginia and the Carolinas. To Dallas came airplane factories and all their trained personnel, whole trainloads. The petrochemical companies line the Gulf Coast. The depletion of the Mesabi Range may transfer much of the steel industry to the South to use the baser ore, and to receive that which will come up from South America.

Twenty thousand new corporations were formed in the South in 1957. And the percentage of income derived from manufacturing in the South that year increased by five percent, compared to three percent for the country as a whole.

All of this points to more urbanization. (The region is now about half urban and half rural). The South which has never had a city of a million should have half a dozen in less than 10 years. In that same span every good-sized town will be tied in with hundreds of others through the new federal highway network which will give the South almost 250,000 miles of new roads, 40,000 miles of superhighways, bringing tourists and new ways of looking at things. "The bright lights of the highway cloverleafs will shine on the Ku Klux Klan before they can get five miles away from a cross-burning. And anyway the new roads will give the Kluxers so many places to go they won't be bothering people out of idleness," one Southern optimist observes.

In the next decade the South will rapidly take on the look of the rest of the country. And when it accepts the fact that it is bound by the same laws, it can join the rest of the country in searching for answers to race problems.

Dear Mrs. Bryant:

Mr. Branton has referred your letter to me. In this regard, I can say we are in the process of preparing some material that we can make available to you and that we feel will be of some help.

The Voter Education Project is now more than a year old, operating in eleven states. We have naturally developed some attitudes about what makes for success in this kind of work. These attitudes will be included in the material mentioned.

You may expect to hear from us soon.

Dear Mrs. Bryant:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 31 in which you express interest in conducting a voter registration drive in Louisville, Kentucky. I wish to commend you for your interest in registration activities and hope that we can be of some assistance to you.

Unfortunately, we adopted a policy decision at the beginning of the Voter Education Project which precludes any VEP activity in the state of Kentucky; however, it may be possible that we can supply you with certain materials, and offer some other assistance in lieu of any financial grant.

I am asking our Field Director, Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell, to send you some information and materials regarding a voter registration campaign.

Kind personal regards.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton,

The enclosed press clippings will give you some background on the organization that I am working with.

We are taking the initiative in organizing ~~every~~ Negro women's civic, religious, etc. club in the city in voter registration. There have been voter registration drives here - but they have been connected with politics in some way. Our's is not. We plan to work to get people registered, and then set up workshops dealing with voter education, how to operate the machines, split tickets, etc.

Atlanta I recently attended the Race Relations Institute, of Fisk, I had looked forward to the seminar on Voter Registration in the Deep South by Rev. Andrew Young. However he did not appear and when Mr. Long found that he was not coming it was too late to get a substitute.

My friends the Bradins are out of town, therefore I am writing you for the following information:

1. Information on how to effectively set up a voter registration campaign.

2. Would the Council help in anyway with the expenses connected with this type of campaign.

I am leaving for the West coast on Sunday, and will be away for three weeks. So send any correspondence to Mrs. Robert W. Dockery 1117 So. Western parkway, Louisville, Ky.

We are anxious to get started with the structuring of this campaign as soon as possible.

Sincerely,
Ruth B. Bryant,
(Mrs. Rascoe C. Bryant, Jr)

Mr. Gregory E. Shinert, Director
Virginia Equal Job Opportunity Bureau
17 East Cary Street
Richmond 19, Virginia

Dear Mr. Shinert:

Mr. Branton has asked that I reply to your inquiry of October 17.

We regret to inform you that the August issue of the VEP newsletter was the last one published. We hope to get publication of the newsletter onto a regular monthly schedule as soon as possible. Another issue of the newsletter is now in preparation, and should be in the mail within the next two weeks. We have added your name to our mailing list, and you will receive all future copies.

We do not have a VEP staff person in Richmond, however, our Field Director, Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell, will doubtless be in Richmond in the near future, and we feel sure he will want to call upon you at that time.

According to our project reports from Virginia, and some discussions I have had with Mr. Blackwell, the peculiarities of Virginia poll tax requirements are a major hindrance to voter registration there. It is my understanding that poll tax represents a greater registration problem in Virginia than it does in any other of the poll tax states, primarily because the cumulative provisions of the Virginia poll tax make it more expensive than in any other poll tax state.

It is my general impression that political discrimination against non-aristocrats as well as against non-whites has operated more effectively in Virginia than it has in any other southern state.

1- newsletter

A couple of years ago, I had occasion to converse with a political scientist who taught in one of Virginia's institutions of higher learning, and he expressed to me considerable satisfaction with the discriminatory effect of the blank application registration procedure which was in effect in Virginia at that time. His attitude was that the "better people" were thereby secured in their political dominence in a manner that other less fortunate states well could emulate. I was particularly interested to note that this gentleman's attitude made no real distinction between non-aristocratic whites and non-whites in the matter of political discrimination. I cannot, of course, say to what extent this person's attitudes mirrored among the Virginia people, but I have an idea, based on random and very sketchy observations, that his views are rather widespread among the dominant political groups in Virginia.

I would suppose that the recent alteration of the registration application indicates that Virginia is moving, however slowly and fumblingly, toward a more broadly based political system. As is the case in most other parts of the country, it appears that if this movement makes any real headway, it will be because Negroes provide the initiative and the leadership.

We greatly appreciate the interest you have expressed in our activities, and we hope that you will not fail to call upon us if we can be of any assistance to you.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Branton:

Very pleased to receive Vol. 1 #1 VEP NEWSLETTER, August 1963. Although my primary work is in employment, I have an avocational interest in voter education--registration and voting.

rotation mailing

At present, I am not on your mailing list--but would like to be. If there is any charge, please bill me.

Might I request back copies of September and October issues?

If you have a VEP staff person in Richmond, I would appreciate having the opportunity of meeting him. Perhaps there might be some small way I can be of assistance.

Do you see any particular or unique problem in Virginia regarding registration--and education of people to vote? We understand that our Governor and General Assembly plan to repeal our poll tax law--for federal elections--but keep a very complicated state poll tax law, which is intended to restrict and hamper people in their ability to register and vote. In effect, it keeps large numbers of both Negro and white from registering and voting--so I am told.

Wishing you every success, and pledging all possible cooperation, I am,

Sincerely yours,

I had occasion recently to see the first Newsletter for the Voter Education Project. My congratulations on this timely and much needed publication to keep workers in the field of human relations informed about your project. I recently sent on a copy to Dr. Ray Gibbons of our Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ in New York City, suggesting that he might get in touch with you concerning projects which his organization could support in the south.

I would like to subscribe the Newsletter, and if there is a subscription cost, please bill me accordingly.

MILESTONE IN GEORGIA

Less than a year has passed since Leroy Johnson, Atlanta lawyer, was elected to the Senate of the Georgia General Assembly, the first Negro to serve in the Legislature since 1907.

Mr. Johnson's election and quite year's service to his constituency is more than a Georgia political milestone. It is proof to Negro voters all over the South of the power of their vote in free elections.

It is also the fruits of Georgia's recentlliberation from the county unit system, which had for generations kept the state ~~in the hands~~ to small, backward rural communities, and which was overthrown last year by a Supreme Court decision. Last November, free from county unit shackles and the racist opinion of rural communities, urban Georgians, including influential numbers of Negro voters, went to the polls, and ---each voter's ballot being equal---elected a moderate governor and the state's first Negro in the Legislature, against a field including rabidly segregationsit candidates.

So, it happend that Mr. Johnson took office in the Senate in a reformed and elevated atmosphere. A year before, at the previous session of the General Assembly, cries of "nigger", "communism", "Our Way of Life", and "State Sovereignty" had rung through the chambers, as police arrested scores of Negro citizens who attempted to desegregate the galleries of their Legislature. Mr. Johnson was sworn in a mood of friendliest courtesy, dignity and even pride, while Negro constituents looked on from the integrated gallery. It is not recorded that one mention of the Negro problem, of segregation, or the sacredness of ancient discrimination has interrupted or clouded debates in House or Senate since Mr. Johnson's arrival in politics, with incontrovertible evidence of the power of the Negro vote in Georgia.

Senator Johnson's performance has been quite, able, and effective. One of the bills he introduced has already been signed into law.

An interating aspect of Negro exercise of the ballot last year in Georgia is the elevation of statesmanship not only in the Legislature, but political circles over the state. It is well known that one of Georgia's most extreme segregationists, a young politician, not only received Senator Johnson with unprededented civility, but invited him to his home for dinner. The senator also has visited U. S. Senator Talmadge, long-time political and segregationist "king" of the Georgia political machine, at his home in Lovejoy, suggesting that the Negro politicians advent to the capitol has vastly improved the manners of white leadership.

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Selma, Alabama: Bernard Lafayette, Bossie Reese, and their fellow workers continue to instruct and encourage Selma Negroes to register and vote in Dallas and Wilcox counties. In spite of the arrests, intimidations and beatings of their leaders, Dallas and Wilcox county Negroes courageously demand their rights as U. S. citizens at their county courthouses daily. Twenty or more appear at each courthouse on registration days, the first and third Mondays of each month.

Birmingham, Alabama: The young people of Birmingham and Jefferson County are conducting a registration drive that grew out of the demonstrations which terminated on May 12. It was organized by Andy Young, James Bevel, and Dorothy Cotton, of SCLC. The Negro community has supported the students fully. More than 2,000 now have been registered. The cooperation of Orzell Billingsley, Jr., and Mrs. Bernice Johnson made possible the filing of the Justice Department suit in Birmingham, asking that more than 2,000 named Negroes be ordered registered because of discrimination at the registrar's office.

Mobile, Alabama: C. M. Montgomery and Atty. Vernon Crawford, assisted by the strategy planning of Freeman Pollard, have begun a registration program in Mobile, called the Mobile County Voter Education Project. Enough enthusiasm was generated at a March meeting between Mobile leaders and VEP staff that 400 persons were registered even before the details of the VEP sponsorship had been worked out. Mr. Bishop, who is blind, registered 28 persons, we are informed. Think what a one-eyed man would have done!

Montgomery, Alabama: Rim E. Williams, project coordinator for the Montgomery County Voter Education Project, is completing an up-to-date list of the registered voters of the county. The registration drive will start shortly after August 15. The Barristers Club of Montgomery (all the Negro lawyers in town) initiated the project and helped form an executive committee of leadership from all the clubs in the county. The executive committee sets policy and makes available the resources of all the organizations. The project enjoys the support of Rufus Lewis of long registration distinction in the community.

Atlanta, Georgia: Jesse Hill, director of the Atlanta All Citizens Registration Committee reports more than 3,100 new registered voters in Fulton County since April. The Atlanta effort will continue for several months.

Mississippi: Bob Moses, Council of Federated Organizations director, reports that between 500 and 700 persons voted by affadavit in the state-wide primary on August 7 in Greenwood. In Holmes, Sunflower, and Hinds counties, more than 600 persons tried to vote under the Mississippi affadavit law, but were turned away from the polls.

SNCC man Charles McLaurin, Charles Cobb, and Curtis Hayes were arrested by Ruleville city police when they led a group of 40 citizens to the Ruleville Community Center to vote (some by affadavit and others by registration). The three were taken to the Sunflower County jail and tried that same evening in Mayor's Court in Indianola. According to Sunflower County Chief Deputy Sheriff Bradley, the three were convicted of "tryin' to commit a crime".

U. S. Senator James O. Eastland lives in Sunflower County when he is not in Washington trying to prevent the passage of legislation guaranteeing the right to vote. Senator Eastland insists there is no need for such legislation, particularly in his native Sunflower County.

Several hundred new registered voters voted for the first time in the Democratic primary. Those voting by affadavit had attempted to register, but had been turned down by the county registrars. They were convinced, despite the registrar's refusal to enter their names in the books, that they were as qualified as any person under the Mississippi "laws". Local policemen guarding the polls disagreed with them. "The answer is blowin' in the wind".

John O'Neal and Carl Johnson, SNCC field men, have reactivated the Council of Federated Organizations Hattisburg project. The Fifth Circuit Court ordered registrar Theron Lynd to purge himself of contempt by registering 43 named Negroes and by applying the Mississippi literacy test without discrimination. John and Carl will keep an eye on Theron, lest he slip back into his old bad habits. Meanwhile, they'll organize a concentrated registration drive in the Hattiesburg community. Mississippi is on the move.

Greensboro, North Carolina: American Friends Service Committee began a registration drive early in August. Mr. Carlton Mabee is directing the project with workers recruited from the ranks of Guilford College students. The emphasis of the program will be voter education, with registration a secondary benefit. The experience of this project should be of immense benefit to future registration efforts in Guilford County.

Kingstree, South Carolina: Williamsburg County leaders, Jonnie Dimery and Rev. S. A. Gadston, with the help of Congress of Racial Equality men Frank Robinson and E. Brown, seem to have moved the county registrars into a more reasonable posture. Registration is confined to one day a month, the first Monday. Last March, more than one hundred persons lined up at the registrar's office; only eleven were admitted and only nine accepted. In April, more than 200 persons lined up; again, only eleven were admitted, and again only nine were accepted. In May, more than 100 again lined up, and again only nine were registered. But in June, 96 were admisted and pf tjese. 65 were accepted. It's difficult to say exactly what produced the change, but reports are that U. S. Justice Department representatives and the Attorney General of South Carolina found it advisable to consult with Williamsburg county officials.

Plaquemine, Louisiana: Congress of Racial Equality man Ronnie Moore reports that the CORE taks force summer project is conducting registration programs in Tangipahoa, St. Helena, East Baton Rouge, West Feliciana, East Feliciana and Pointe Coupe parishes. Though numerical results are expected to be small at first, the important fact is that Negroes are beginning to register in these hard-core segregation area. This in itself is a radical departure from the past.

Mr. Moore and his co-workers were able to save more than 500 Negroes from a purge of the registration rolls in Iberville parish by informing the boters of what they must do to remain on the rolls.

Charleston, South Carolina: Esau Jenkins, President of the Citizens Committee of Charleston County, announced the beginning of a registration drive July 15 Which will run through November 15. It was rpported by Mrs. Jean C. Townsend, Chariman of the Charleston County Registration board that 501 Negroes registered during the three registration days of August. She said, "I haven't seen anything like this". Mr. Jenkins and his co-workers have the kind of reputation in voter registration which inspires confidence that the program in Charleston will produce a decided change for the better in the registration picture there.

Macon, Georgia: The Bibb County Coordinating Committee, under the leadership of William Randall, recently completed a registration drive during which more than 3,000 new voters were added to the registrar's books. Mr. Randall's organization plans another drive early in the fall.

Alabama: Mrs. Bernice Johnson, of the Alabama State Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting, reports that 675 new voters were registered in nine Alabama counties during the registration days, July 1-5, 1963. This is only a partial total of the drive in more than twenty counties. Future issues will report the total results of this drive.

The NAACP reports the following increases in registration since April of this year: Tampa, Fla., 331; Jackson, Miss., 488; Memphis, Tenn., 4,226; Gainesville, Fla., 308; St. Petersburg, Fla., 902; Augusta, Ga., 195; Polk County, Fla., 626.

LOCAL WOMEN ANNOUNCE SUPPORT OF WHITE HOUSE RIGHTS PARLEY

A group of women representing various civic, business, fraternal, and religious organizations met at the home of Mrs. Robert W. Dockery, Sunday July 28, 1963. The purpose of this meeting was to formulate plans to unite Louisville's Negro women in support of President Kennedy's White House Conference on Civil Rights.

Highlighting the meeting was a report from Mrs. Abbie C. Jackson, General President of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, A. M. E. Zion Church. Mrs. Jackson has attended four conferences since January 17, 1963. The first conference was held in Chicago, Illinois, on Religion and Race. In the early spring she attended the General Board of the National Council of Churches; later, the Summit Conference of Negro Women held in Capahosic, Virginia. Her most recent conference was the one held in the White House by an invitation from the President.

The President asked participants to aid him, upon their return home, in these areas:

1. Eliminating school dropouts by promoting a program designed to get all educable children back into school and to keep present enrollees in school;

2. Participating through their organizations and membership in the work of human relations committees in their communities, or where none exist, by securing the establishment of such committees;

3. Establishing leadership training for all women in intergroup cooperation;

4. Supporting, where conviction and program permit, all or part of the proposed legislative program on civil rights, especially the public accommodations section;

5. Opening their organizations to women of all races.

The group was so stimulated that discussions centered around these areas with deep concern and interest.

KEY WOMEN

The key women responsible for calling this meeting were: Mrs. Robert W. Dockery, Chairman, Women's Religious Resource Committee, a subsidiary of the Louisville Urban League; Mrs. Roscoe C. Bryant, Jr., Chairman of the Steering Committee and member of the Civic Group of Louisville's Human Relations Commission; Mrs. Sophia Smith, Co-chairman of the Steering Committee, and member of the State Cosmetology Association; Mrs. Lucy Larke, Secretary to the Executive Board, N. A. A. C. P. and Mrs. M. M. Purdue, representative of the Missionary Women's Alliance.

Some of the organizations represented by these women were:

Asbury A. M. E. Church, Federation of Women's Club, Christian Women Charity Club, Iota Phi Lamba Sorority, St. James Luthern Church, Nat'l Association of Real Estate Brokers, Y. W. C. A. Local, State, and National Cosmotologists, Brown Temple A. M. E. Zion Church First Congregational Methodist Church, Jefferson County Juvenile Court, Livingstone College, N. A. A. C. P., Louisville Urban League, St. Augustine Church, Stoner Memorial A. M. E. Zion Church, Zion Baptist Church Virginia Avenue Baptist Church, West Chestnut Street Baptist Church.

In closing, Mrs. Jackson admonished the group to "Knock on all Doors," and, to change FEAR into FAITH!

She went on to say, "the most vital issue today in these United States is Civil Rights." What effects one, affects all . . . . "We are all Brothers."

The committee has in its immediate plans the inclusion of additional organization which will encompass community interest groups from all geographic areas of the city.

Negro Women Plan Drive To Back Rights Program

A campaign to enroll Louisville Negro women in support of President John F. Kennedy's civil rights program has been organized.

Thirty-five women representing 26 business, civic, fraternal, and religious groups met yesterday at the home of Mrs. Robert W. Dockery, of 1117 S. Western Parkway, to hear a report on a White House conference on civil rights.

The report was made by Mrs. Abbie Clement Jackson, general president of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the A.M.E. Zion Church. She attended the White House conference to which national leaders in the race-relations field were invited.

The women at yesterday's organization meeting named this steering committee: Mrs. Roscoe C. Bryant, Jr., chairman; Mrs. Sophia Smith, cochairman; Mrs. Lucy Larke, Mrs. M. M. Perdue, and Mrs. Dockery.

Another meeting will be held in two weeks.

MRS. ABBIE CLEMENT JACKSON, addressed local civic leaders at the residence of Dr. & Mrs. Robert Dockery last Sunday evening. The Presidents Conference on Civil Rights for Women which was held recently in Washington, D. C. was the topic of the evening. Mrs. Jackson was among over 300 women throughout the United States who were invited by President Kennedy.

RE: VEP Newsletter

I have previously discussed with you the necessity for extreme caution with which we must examine all VEP Newsletters and you are, therefore, requested to submit the final manuscript to me for final approval prior to its being delivered to the printer. If it should develop that some changes need be made after I have approved a manuscript and I happen not to be in town then you are requested to get final approval on those changes from Leslie W. From: Randolph Blackwell

This memo is prepared on the eve of the close of the first fiscal year of the Voter Education Project. It is our feeling that there are some few programs that can be added to the overall structure of the project by the time the second fiscal year begins that will be significantly beneficial. Some of what will be suggested here will not be entirely new, nor does it all have its origin in my mind. It just so happens that many of the ideas of merit that we have talked about have not been given the attention that they deserve because circumstances more immediate have not allowed for such.

An effort is made here to spell out just one or two of these ideas in much greater detail than they have been spelled out before, so that the relative merits of each can be weighed in the light of their cost, required personnel, and results that can be expected. Before entering upon a discussion of each of these ideas, it would be desirable first to just set each idea out so that it is clearly understood, and not lost in the course of spelling out what would be necessary to implement the idea.

As I examine the numerous ideas that are presented in the course of each day, it would seem that there are several that seem to come up again and again, and on which there is general agreement. These ideas are set out below:

I. The Voter Education Project is by far, the most important program in this history of the civil rights struggle, not only because of the objectives towards which it strives, but also because this is the first time in the entire history of the Negro people that all major civil rights organizations have been pretended to agree on the importance of any one single program. (Further discussion is found in Section I.)

II. The Voter Education Project has in its first fiscal year, sought to accomplish its objectives mainly through the operations of the "big five" civil rights organizations, and a few isolated independent organizations. The cooperation and loyalty that has characterized this relationship in the past must be preserved. And yet, the very fact that there are many communities that these organizations will not reach seems to dictate that the VEP should initiate a program designed to aid these communities, and to involve them in the overall program. To not do so will be to mark off a possible 70,000 additional new voters. The VEP must remain ever cognizant of the fact that there was some sort of political concern in just about every Negro community long before it came into existence. (Further discussion of this will be found in Section II).

III. The Voter Education Project is less than one year old, and so it is perhaps too early to arrive at any hard, fast conclusions as to what the facts and forces are that have kept the Negro people from registering in large numbers in the past. It would appear, however, that the experiences of the past twelve months substantiates some opinions in this regard of long standing. It is often suggested that many Negro people have not registered in the past because of apathy, a feeling of inferiority, a lack of information, lack of inspiration, and fear - both physical and economic. The VEP must develop programs designed to deal with each of these causes. (Suggestions relative to overcoming these causes for not registering are discussed in Section III).

IV. The civil rights struggle can only hope to be successful in proportion to its ability to communicate with the masses of the American public. This history of the NAACP dictates the truth of this proposition more clearly than perhaps any other single organization. This, of course, means that there must be some sort of publishing house to which organizations engaged in the struggle have free and immediate access at the lowest possible cost. One of the difficulties that these organizations have had to labor under has been the very limited number of sympathetic printing sources. Thousands of things are said daily that ought to be communicated to thousands of Americans, but cannot be, for some several reasons - mainly cost. Too often, they have had to rely on having the press represent them to the public. Which, of course, is always done within their frame of understanding at their convenience, and to the degree that it feels it important. (Further discussion of this is included in Section IV.)

SECTION I.

Believing that the objectives towards which the VEP strive are too important to leave a single stone unturned, the attached sample newsletter is proposed as in instrument that would serve well to present registering as a matter of region-wide concern, and also to create a kind of wholesome competition between communities and organizations that could pay big dividends in terms of new voters. It would be expected that sections of such a newsletter would be devoted to reporting what is being done in each state each month; Along with feature stories and photographs of special happenings. Here we could report progress on such things as the Poll Tax Amendment, as well as descriptions of registration activities that prove to be unusally successful. It would be hoped that 20,000 such newsletters could be published and distributed each month.

COST

If we buy the printing equipment:

20,000 copies per month .....$ 215.00

20,000 copies per month for a year.....$2,580.00

If we have the newsletter printed:

20,000 copies per month .....$ 365.00

Cost of distributing 20,000 copies.....$ 60.00

INTRODUCING THE VEP NEWSLETTER

You are reading the first edition of the official organ of the Voter Education Project, which will be published on the 15th of each month for the duration of the project. This newsletter is the only publication of its kind in the entire nation. It has as its sole purpose that of publishing news about and related to registration and practical political education in the southern states. This purpose is broad enough to allow for inquiry into such matters as how registration programs are conducted, methods and techniques used, how interest is aroused, what difficulties and obstacles are encountered in carrying on voter registration programs, the measures used to overcome those difficulties and obstacles, the results of voter registration programs throughout the South, both as to the numbers of increased registration and the general effect on the political life of the community.

This Newsletter is non-partisan and will remain so; seeking in no way to influence the outcome of elections or legislation.

The VEP was begun in the spring of 1962 and is expected to continue at least through 1964. It operates on funds granted to the Southern Regional Council by various foundations and other interested organizations. The work of the Project in the main is conducted through the five major civil rights agencies: NAACP, CORE, SNCC, SCLC, NUL. However, sometimes special grants are made to local organizations with a proven record of success in voter registration drives when local conditions seem to justify so doing. The project is always eager to provide guidance, materials, professional advice and information even though it may not be possible to provide funds at a given time.

A considerable body of information has been assembled about voter registration programs that have been conducted during the past nine months throughout the South. This information is available to all who are interested in using it to further registration efforts in their communities. In turn, the Project seeks to cooperate with all who are working in southern voter registration so that its fund of information can be as complete as possible.

The project is staffed by five individuals.

Attorney Wiley Branton, from Pine Bluff, Arkansas, is in charge of the project. Attorney Branton accepted the position as Director of VEP after some ten years of law practice in the South. He was the attorney for the plaintiffs in the famous Little Rock school integration case in 1957.

Attorney Randolph Blackwell is Director of Field Activities for VEP. Attorney Blackwell was graduated from Howard University Law School in 1953, and has since taught political science and business law in North Carolina and Alabama. He has maintained an abiding interest in social action throughout his career.

Jack Minnis is Director of Research. He is a doctoral candidate in Political Science from Tulane University in New Orleans.

Mrs. Jean Levine is VEP's Administrative Secretary and Mrs. Janet Shortt is her assistant.

Attorney Blackwell, as Field Director, maintains contact with the groups and organizations who are working in voter registration throughout the South. He observes and reports on the conduct of voter registration programs with which VEP is connected. He is always available for advice and consultation on any problems which registration workers may encounter.

Mr. Minnis, as Research Director, is responsible for gathering information about how registration programs are conducted, what success they have, what problems they meet, and how they solve these problems.

Mrs. Levine, who is also Mr. Branton's secretary, maintains the financial records of the project and handles the thousand and one administrative details that go with the day-to-day operation of the VEP office. She is assisted, most ably, in these duties by Mrs. Shortt.

Attorney Branton, as Director of the Project, oversees and coordinates all these activities and sets major policy for the project.

SECTION II.

This section is devoted, in the main, to a discussion of what is here called Plan "B". An understanding of Plan "B", and how it fits into the total structure of the VEP can best be had by reading the attached sample letter.

In order to put Plan "B" into operation for one year, the following budget would be needed:

One Assistant Field Director.....	$4,800.00
Travel and Expenses.....	1,000.00
Mailing.....	500.00
Telephone allowance.....	200.00
Printing.....	2,570.00
TOTAL-----	$9,070.00

The printing cost of the above budget is projected on the basis of having in operation, five hundred (500) Plan "B" projects. It is structured on the assumption that we own the equipment on which to prepare the material.

500 General Instruction books 40 pages, 8½ x 11	$ 108.00
20,000 "Don't Talk Politics In Here If You Are Not Registered" display cards 9 x 12; 40 for each of the projects.....	456.00
80,000 "Everybody In This Household is a Registered Voter" 5 x 6½	456.00
500,000 sheets of Doger paper Assorted colors; 6 x 9	450.00
Paper and supplies for letterheads, mass meetings, programs, etc., ...	1,000.00
	$ 2,570.00

Mr. John Doe
1000 Jackson Street
Winston Salem, North Carolina

Dear Mr. Doe:

Your name has been supplied to us by one who has for sometime expressed an interest in the establishment in our country, a living democracy in every sense of the word. It has been suggested that you share an interest in this all-important objective, and that you would possibly like to join the thousands of Americans all over the land who are ready and willing to admit our shortcomings, and work constructively to overcome them.

Most workers in this camp of patriots are agreed that the first and major consideration should be given to the right of Negro people to register and participate in the election processes of our government.

It might be that the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council has not come to your attention. After you shall have read the enclosed V.E.P. Newsletter, you will have a better idea of the kind of work that we are presently doing.

May I just explain at this point that the V.E.P. has as its objective, the business of encouraging registration in the Negro community, and studying the techniques used and the successes gained. In doing this, we have two basic plans of sponsorship that we call Plan A and Plan B.

> PLAN A covers those community programs for which the V.E.P. supplies to an existing organization the money that it determines would be necessary to conduct an effective registration drive. Sponsorship under Plan A, of course, means that the organization must meet certain standards such as leadership, registration experience, availability, willingness and capacity of workers, and community potential registration.

PLAN B is designed to govern those communities that cannot, at the time, meet the standards required of Plan A. Under Plan B, the V.E.P. makes available expert professional advice on how to conduct a registration drive, along with the necessary printed literature made to your order. In the area of literature, the V.E.P. supplies Registration Kits which contains a general instruction book and samples of hand bills, mass meeting programs, canvass forms, display cards for businesses and many other pieces that can be ordered in quanity without cost.

Now that we have, in a general way, placed before you our purpose and plan, may we request that you read our newsletter and then fill out and mail the enclosed card? We need your reaction to this communication in order to continue our work effectively.

Hoping to hear from you soon.

Very truly yours,

Mr. Wiley Branton:

I have read your description of the V.E.P. Program.

SECTION III.

Without waiting for conclusive evidence as to what the problems are that have worked against the registration of large numbers of Negroes, it is possible to proceed with certainty knowing that fear and a feeling of inferiority will be on the list. With this attitude, I would propose that we begin now to try some approaches to ~~for~~ dealing with these problems.

For example, at the turn of the century, several university departments of history, notable among these, Columbia, felt called upon to misstate the facts of Negro participation in government during the reconstruction period. As a result, there is not a single outstanding American history book on the market that does not say that the Negro men that occupied government offices of that period were fools, and that they did the country a great disservice. This simply is not true. The legislation enacted by those men was, in most cases, of high caliber and quite fundamental. Many of the men were very well trained, having attended leading universities both in and out of this country. But of course, these misstatements of facts have served well to engender a feeling of inferiority. I feel that if this feeling of inferiority was attacked by a presentation of the facts, we would be on the way to doing a real job of setting the Negro community on the right track. At the same time, we could do a job of political education by pointing up the kind of legislation that these men stood for.

This attack could be made through the distribution of little booklets on the life and work of these men. If we had the equipment for printing them, it is possible that we could prepare them at a cost of about three cents each. I feel that it would be possible at such a price to get outside organizations to assume the cost.

SECTION VI.

At some several places in the memo, I have made reference to the desirability of establishing a printing shop to serve the needs of SRC, VEP and possibly other civil rights organizations. The only thing remaining for me, then, is to set forth the cost for such a venture:

Press	$3,900.00
Camera	500.00
Folder	500.00
Printer	279.00
Headliner	300.00
Operating supplies	223.00
	$6,000.00

I should think that if are able to get an additional man to work on the proposed Plan "B", then he might also become the chief operator of this equipment.

Dick Hult Named Outstanding Senior

The Senior Class of 1956 has selected Dick Hult as their outstanding student.

Dick, a handsome 17-year old, is a native of Hometown. He is a graduate of Roosevelt Grade School, and transferred to City High in his Junior year from Boone High School.

Dick is a member of the Debating Club, and just recently was awarded the Debater's Plaque as the leading High School Debater in Brown County. He competed with over 150 boys and girls to win this award.

Besides being a member of the Debating Club, Dick also belongs to the Science Club, the Camera Club, and the band. He is also fond of all sports and is a member of City High's basketball team.

After graduation in June, he plans on attending State College where he will major in Chemical Engineering.

Language Club Plans Banquet

The foreign language club is planning a Roman Banquet for Tuesday, January 31st.

Everyone attending will dress in the costume of the country of his language. Each class will contribute a part of the entertainment.

Committees have been formed with Jane Clark, in charge of the music; Betty Bock, food preparation; Nancy Haney, entertainment; Veronica Joyce, place cards; and Frank Welch, program.

Roman slaves of the first year Latin class will serve the dinner.

Driving Classes Begin at City High

The long-awaited car for City High's safety education classes was delivered during the month of December.

The car is a two-tone green four door Deluxe model, equipped with an automatic transmission.

Lessons in driving will begin Wednesday, February 1st. All students who wish to enroll for driving lessons, should register in the Principal's office on Monday, January 16th.

Phantoms Beat City 76-60

The Phantoms spoiled City High's chance of winning their last home game by using their superior height to defeat City High 76-60. The Phantoms jumped off to an early lead and were in command for most of the first quarter, but Jim Carter pulled City High up to within eight points at the half. The third quarter almost proved to be the downfall of The Phantoms when City High got within two points, but could not close the margin.

Dear Harold:

I would like to tell you how very much I appreciated your participation in the Notre Dame Conference on Civil Rights last month.

The sessions were most valuable in illuminating some of the major civil rights issues with which Congress has been wrestling these last several weeks.

Here are two reprints of the proceedings of the conference for your files.

Again, thank you for your time and effort.

Mr. John Feild
Executive Director

Washington 25, D. C.

Dear John:

I am delighted at the report from Leslie Dunbar that you may be able to attend our off-the-record conference at the Notre Dame Law School, February 8-11, 1963.

The conference grows out of a concern that there is a real need for developing and bringing to public attention some informed and reasonably objective opinion regarding civil rights legislation. Legislative proposals for civil rights have only rarely been the product of relatively detached and informed consideration. Rather, they have been cast as hurried reactions to demands and denials and too often have failed to account for intimately related problems which remain unyielding.

What is proposed here is a modest start toward bringing the insights of law, political science, and economics to the analysis of civil rights issues. Although we believe that the program will be vaulable in itself, we hope further that it may contribute importantly to continuing and institutionalized interest in the study of public policy issues in civil rights and racial relations.

The conference will be a quiet meeting from February 8 through February 11 to which a small group of informed and involved people are invited. The meeting will have two chief purposes. First, to consider what goals and methods to recommend to Congress as to three topics:

(a) Education (including higher education and federal aid as well as school desegregation;

(b) Voting; and

(c) Employment.

The second purpose will involve a final agenda item to be considered on the fourth day, taking up the question of what can be done--or what recommendations can be made to universities and foundations--to provide continuing professional interest and study in the public policy aspects of race relations.

The conference will be limited, as noted, to Congressional issues and to only three of them. This is dictated both by considerations of priority and feasibility. The limitation does not mean that we do not recognize the need for likewise organizing and furthering objective analysis of state and local policies and legislation, and for study of executive policies at the various governmental levels.

Not later than early January, you will receive copies of three discussion papers. These papers will undertake to (a) outline legislative problems; (b) summarize and evaluate current legislative proposals; (c) refer to appropriate recommendations of the Commission on Civil Rights; and (d) present the author's recommendations. These papers will serve to direct and organize discussion. They will not limit or control the conclusions of you and other conferees.

The discussion papers will be written by:

(Education)	Professor G. W. Foster, Jr. University of Wisconsin, Law School;
(Voting)	Wiley A. Branton Voter Education Project, Atlanta
(Employment)	Professor Daniel Pollitt University of North Carolina, Law School.

Following the meeting, a reporter will pull together the material and present the judgments and consensus reached for publication in the Notre Dame Lawyer. Except to indicate who were the conferees, the report will not attribute ideas to named individuals.

The mid-February 1963 meeting date occurs after the new Congress convenes and, of course, after the Administration has made whatever general commitment it may choose to make in the State of the Union message to the Congress of that year. While a good case can be made for having recommendations available early enough that the Administration could have them in hand when deciding on the position to be taken in the State of the Union message, there are distinct advantages in holding the conference in February of 1963, since legislative proposals from the Administration and others may then be in hand by the time the conference is convened.

A few words about the second purpose of the conference--discussion of means to provide for continuing professional interest in civil rights policy--are appropriate. We contemplate that this matter will be informally discussed throughout the conference, and that the concluding conference session will be devoted to it. Following the conference, we shall solicit the written views of each conferee, summarize them, and circulate to selected law deans and foundation executives. It is our hope that such a memorandum will be useful to these people in framing their policies and in reviewing proposals for curriculum development or grants.

Dear Wiley:

Leslie Dunbar has talked with you about a background paper for the Notre Dame conference on civil rights legislation. I very much hope that you will undertake to prepare for us the paper on the voting question.

I have checked this out at Notre Dame and Dean O'Meara is most anxious to have you do the job for us if you can find the time for it. My off hand reaction is that you should shoot for a completion date of your draft of mid-December. This will enable us to get the thing reproduced and distributed to invitees with ample time for them to submit to the group any comments or suggestions they may wish to make that grow out of things you have said or failed to say.

Discuss with Leslie the question of reproduction and mailing costs for all of this. I assume that SRC can pick up the tab on all of this. If there is a question about it, however, let me know and I will see what we can do to raise the additional money required to carry it off.

I am tickled pink that you can do the job.

Dear Wiley:

I write this letter in conjunction with the forthcoming off-the-record meeting at the Notre Dame Law School, February 8-11, 1963. As had been indicated in previous correspondence with you, it is planned to furnish background memoranda on the subjects of education, employment and voting to furnish a starting place for discussion at the meeting.

Responsibility for the memorandum on education has fallen to me. To this end, I am having sent to you directly from the Commission on Civil Rights copies of two volumes recently published which report field studies of school segregation in a number of communities across the country. In all likelihood you will not have an opportunity to read them in their entirety, although I would suggest in particular that you attempt to read in full the report on New Rochelle commencing at page 29 in the volume dealing with public schools in the North and West, and the report on Virginia commencing in the Southern volume at page 155.

In addition to these materials, I hope to send you shortly a comprehensive memorandum treating questions of present federal involvement in school segregation and recommendations which have been made for further federal participation.

I would like to urge you to pass along any suggestions you may have which you think should be distributed to the invitees in advance of our arrival at Notre Dame. I will be more than happy to undertake responsibility for distributing them.

It will be good to see you at Notre Dame.

Faithfully,

CONFIDENTIAL DRAFT

This is the report of a conference on problems of Congressional civil rights legislation held at the Notre Dame University Law School February 8 - 10, 1963. By pleasurable coincidence, as the report was completed Congress had already before it a civil rights bill backed by unusually strong Presidential support.

This circumstance has had, of course, its difficult side for the preparers of this report, the least of which has been revising an earlier draft in order to take account of the Administration's measure. In fact, most of the provisions of the President's proposal (except Title II) were debated, at least in general terms, by the conference, and a consensus reached about them.

A more basic difficulty will be apparent when we note that the working premise of the Notre Dame Conference, as laid down by Dean Joseph O'Meara in our first session, was that we should frame recommendations without regard to anyone's views of their political chances. This is, therefore, a report of the consensus we reached as to what Congress should pass, not as to what it possibly or probably might pass.

We continue to believe that this was a sound approach. We do, of course, recognize that the legislative decision this year will be made on the Administration's bill. Perhaps, nevertheless, what is reported here will be helpful to Congress as it deliberates, and will help the country understand better the problems and the results which may be expected from various legislative approaches to them.

The conference was limited to three subjects: schools, employment, and voting. We have, therefore, no recommendations or reflections to report on the public accommodations part of the President's program (Title II).

This report states the consensus of the conference. The extent of agreement was impressive, and except at a few points the consensus was well-nigh perfect. This was all the more notable, because many differing views had been brought to the meetings.

The conferees, in addition to Dean O'Meara, were Carl A. Auerbach, University of Minnesota Law School; Wiley A. Branton, Voter Education Project; Thomas F. Broden, Jr., Notre Dame Law School; Leslie W. Dunbar, Southern Regional Council; John G. Feild, President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity; Harold C. Fleming, The Potomac Institute; G. W. Foster, Jr., Law School, University of Wisconsin; Eli Ginzberg, Conservation of Human Resources, Columbia University; Vivian W. Henderson, Economics, Fisk University; Paul H. Norgren, Industrial Relations Section, Princeton University; John de J. Pemberton, American Civil Liberties Union; Daniel H. INTRODUCTION

The crisis of America's race relations has become almost unbearably intense, and its causes are interlaced with countless characteristics of our history and our social structure. These are propositions for which any elaboration, at this time, would be redundant.

The present crisis is not the first in our history. Crises in race relations, as in the other relationships of men with men, are not necessarily caused by worsened conditions; the opposite may in fact be so. But as long as the relationships enclose and nurture discontent on one or both sides, periodic crises will occur. The present crisis is far less brutal and violent than that of 1917 - 1921. It has probably been accompanied by no deeper or more widespread moral self-scrutiny, religious debate, or intellectual and literary study than went with the racial crisis of Civil War days.

Those crises passed, and after each the condition of Negro Americans was still bad. What is primarily different about the present crisis is that it is not likely to pass, until a new equilibrium acceptable to Negroes is reached. Earlier crises ended when white people tired of them; this one will not.

The pressure of this fact, or perhaps the realization of it, has much to do with creating the contemporary emotional urgings of both Negroes and whites, the all too facile bandying about of such concepts as "hatred" and "revolution," and the obsessive over-valuation of the strength of the Black Muslims. On the other hand, prudence, if nothing else, dictates the working assumption that no person has reason to have an attachment to a constitutional system if its processes fail to provide meaning and reality to its guarantees.

If Congress had no other reason to act to end the crisis, this would be sufficient: unless the crisis is overcome, the Constitution as we know it will bend. Concepts such as federalism, and universal obedience to the courts, and Presidential deference to the legislative will of Congress, have already been affected. There are reasons at least as good, and some of us will think even better, for Congressional action: these have to do with justice and friendship and religion. But Congress has a special responsibility to defend and protect the Constitution.

There is a truth known to political wisdom at least as long ago as Aristotle, and that is that a healthy, sound polity cannot tolerate distinctions of citizenship. To perpetuate, by law or by fact, classes of citizens is to breed an unendurable and enlarging malignancy in our national life. As Attorney-General Kennedy has said, to "thwart thousands of our fellow Americans from participating fully in the process of our government is to weaken [civic] vigor and to dilute their faith, and we cannot afford it."*

*As quoted in the New York Times, May 6, 1962.

Race relations have always been heavily dependent on law and public policy. Custom and law have mutually bred and supported each other. The U. S. Commission on Civil Rights has summarized the history of one segment of the public policy toward Negroes; viz. the policy of the national government through its three branches.* A reading of this summary is instructive. It can suggest to us something of the dimensions of Negro alienation -- a coerced, not a voluntary, alientation -- from the mainstream of American life and thought. For example, a Negro can hardly look back on Woodrow Wilson with the warmth shared now by most white Americans. Moreover, even a brief exposure to history will show how often and how seriously Negro interests not only have been subordinated by Congress, President, and courts to other interests but have been damaged by their pursuit.

The classic example is, of course, the compromise of 1877. There may well have been a national interest in the removal of troops from the South; the interest of Negroes was opposed. But more frequent occasions for national policies prejudicial, at least in some ways, to the interests of Negroes have come with the modern growth of the federal government. New Deal legislation had the effect of institutionalizing and hardening segregation in some fields, such as housing; of creating new and profitable inducements to discriminate in other fields, such as agricultural subsidies.

The explosion of social consciousness that took place under President Roosevelt, the elan with which the country tested its democratic faith, have been a positive and equally strong legacy of the New Deal. Mr. Roosevelt was the first President since Grant to give Negro citizens any sound reason for trusting the national government and for believing that it had a concern for their welfare. The war-time FEPC, the establishment of the Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice, and its diligent combat of lynching were other Rooseveltian services.

The truly decisive turn in federal policy came, however, during the administration of President Truman. There were three developments which we sorely need to recall and understand, because they helped greatly to produce as well as define present issues.

The integration of the Army during the Korean War was the first large experience with integration the American people, white or Negro, had ever known. It was accomplished by executive fiat and it worked in a practical way: both of these points were better observed by Negroes than by whites.

The Truman Doctrine preempted for the United States the active leadership of the West and thrust us into world-wide competition with the Soviet Union. Henceforth, our polity would be under international inspection, and our own diplomacy would be increasingly needful of the good opinion of foreign peoples, many of whom were humanly eager to denigrate us because of our political pre-eminence.

But perhaps most decisive of all was appointment of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, and Mr. Truman's unwavering espousal of its recommendations even at the cost of a party split at the Democratic convention of 1948. No political act since the compromise of 1877 has so profoundly influenced race relations; in a sense, it was the repeal of 1877. Among the consequences were (a) a shift of emphasis from Negro "uplift" -- essentially a paternalistic approach -- to civil rights, i.e., the achievement of more than nominal citizenship; (b) a renewal of the fateful rupture between South and non-South; and (c) the ensuing complications for economic and social reform by statute.

In retrospect, President Truman's action was timely and profoundly beneficial. For the southern support which made his reforms possible, Wilson had paid the full price; Roosevelt paid somewhat less, but he paid. There was something deeply immoral about purchasing reforms, which benefitted white persons relatively more than Negroes, at the price of continued suppression of Negro rights.

The corollary is, however, that since 1948, law-making for domestic problems has fallen into desuetude. No President can lead, and no Congressional majority exists to enact -- only to defeat -- economic and social proposals. The presence of the civil rights problem has been permitted to thwart the progress of domestic policies.

President Truman forced us, as a people, to confront ourselves, and examine the integrity of our principles. His successors have coped with the results of that self-examination. During President Eisenhower's terms, the first civil rights legislation since 1875 was enacted, in 1957, and strengthened three years later. His military intervention in Arkansas, although inexpediently carried out, manifested the determination and the capability of the Presidency. His Department of Justice began successfully the enforcement of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, and in New Orleans in 1960 developed the pattern which has been followed since of defense of the integrity of the federal courts.

President Kennedy has achieved much, very much, by an extensive and imaginative use of executive power. He has also lifted his Administration to a new and higher commitment to civil rights, a magnificent and unsurpassed achievement.

But such heavy reliance on executive action has not only its limits but its very real danger. Entirely apart from any question of the overstepping of authority, there is the risk of obliterating the responsibility of Congress. Prompt and well-conceived Congressional action in response to Mr. Kennedy's message of June 19, 1963 will re-commit the country to justice, strengthen its economic well-being, and restore its honor: it will also secure the Constitution.*

Political science distinghishes between the "deliberative" and the "representative" functions of a legislature. Congress is our representative body, and there is no other which can so express and certify the national will. As long as Congress is silent, civil rights has something of a bootleg aspect. Congress has not been altogether silent. The Acts of 1957 and 1960 and the poll tax amendment are of value, but at the most they give protection, and a laggard one at that, for but one right. What the country urgently needs, and what American constitutionalism is weakened by the absence of, is an unambiguous registering of the national will in behalf of racial justice, as only Congress in its representative role can do.

The subsequent pages of this paper are hopefully intended to help Congress in its deliberative role; i.e., in defining and framing its policies. In this field of civil rights, and at this time, Congress by deliberating and enacting will also be representing, supplying the will and the resolution that can put the crisis behind us.

The times require, in other words, not only that Congress act wisely, but that it act -- and act with dispatch, and without ambiguity or timidity. But if in its drive to represent the national will, Congress does not act wisely,

*The President's legislative proposals were introduced as S.1731, by Senator Mansfield on June 19, 1963, and as H.R. 7152 by Representative Celler on June 20.

the outcome could be bitter. Congress passed voting laws in 1957 and 1960 which were not fashioned to achieve their goals, and have not done so. Their failure has contributed to the present crisis, because those laws brought disillusion on top of high hopes.

In order to act effectively, Congress should be guided by certain principles that include the following:

(1) Congress should legislate not for the appeasement of crisis, but for the solution of it.

(2) Administrative actions, when appropriate and Constitutional, are more effective and less piecemeal than judicial remedies.

(3) Where possible and suitable, it is good federal practice to draw support from state and local governments in the administration of federal programs.

(4) In some problem areas, the national interest is best served by local solutions. In such problem areas, Congressional action is not appropriate when there is a realistic prospect of a prompt solution at the local level.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO PUBLIC EDUCATION

The first point above is especially pertinent in 1963. Congressional action at this time ought to begin with schools.

We say this with all the emphasis we can.

There are at least five reasons for this priority.

First, nine years have now passed since Brown v. Topeka declared a Constitutional right of all American children, a right still wantonly flouted or ignored. In support of it, and in the face of overt defiance, the Presidency was until the Fall of 1957 indecisive and since has been inadequately empowered. Congress has done nothing.

The decision was responded to by eleven southern states with outright defiance unprecedented in the world annals of federal government, and at times near rebellion. In a sense, it is a sign of the basic strength of American society that defiance so intense and widespread was able to be contained without rupture of national bonds. The federal courts and the Presidency, aided by enlightened opinion in the South, have by now decisively weakened the political resistance. Nevertheless, through evasion or inaction, more than two-thirds of the bi-racial school districts of the eleven southern states have as yet made no start toward school desegregation; 99% of the Negro children of these states are still in segregated schools; and in three states -- Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina -- not even a token start has yet been made.

The Supreme Court's decision of 1954 was received by Negro citizens as a promise and as an earnest of a new life for them in our common country. A very large cause of the current crisis is the disappointment which followed. Our high court had spoken -- and was not obeyed. The good will of our people had been invoked -- and did not respond.

There is, therefore, a symbolic importance to the schools issue which none other has. In no other area can Congress so clearly and unambiguously represent and register a national decision in affirmation of equality. Furthermore, if Congress were to act in another area, and did not in this one, recalcitrant school districts would have reason to believe that Congress does not disapprove of their policies.

Second, education has an intrinsic value, both for the individual and for the nation, of unsurpassed importance.

Third, education is basic to the durable achievement of other civil rights. It affects employment opportunities and voting eligibility and the intelligent use of the ballot. It affects housing patterns (and is affected by them). It determines and will determine the quality and the temper of Negro communal leadership.

Fourth, there should be no hesitation in saying that our needs go beyond civil rights, and that a better integrated society is a social, political, and moral imperative. The American people need to live more happily with each other. Our public schools weave the web of society as no other institution does.

Fifth, school integration brings forth the hard, but basically important, issues. (The extension of employment opportunities does also.) To desegregate transportation, or restaurants and hotels, or professional associations requires little more than a decision to stop doing one thing and do another. These decisions are socially and morally necessary, but the Negro and white people of this country would both delude themselves if they expected these decisions to go far toward solving our racial inequities. To solve them, or even to begin to do so, the country must see clearly and face the gigantic problems of our disadvantaged people. Whenever school desegregation in a community gets beyond token dimensions, that community will unavoidably confront the cultural wrongs it itself has created, and will, we think, be brought to an awareness that something must be done about them.

To summarize then, school legislation deserves priority because of its symbolic value, because of the intrinsic cultural importance of education, because education is basic to the achievement of other civil rights, and because the integration of schools has profound and beneficial social consequences.

The bill first introduced by Senator Clark and Representative Celler in 1961* sought to achieve these objectives. It has provided the leading ideas which have guided discussions since 1961, and which the conferees at the Notre Dame Law School believed basically sound. In important respects, however, we did differ from Clark-Celler.

The principal features of the Clark-Celler approach are (1) the requirement of a desegregation plan by those school districts which use race as an assignment criterion; (2) the filing of the plan with the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, who is empowered to grant financial and technical assistance to aid in carrying out the plans, if he determines that the plans are legally satisfactory; similar assistance would be available to certain other districts; (3) a requirement of "at least first-step compliance" immediately; and (4) power for the Attorney-General to bring suits in federal district courts to compel compliance.

We believe that Congress should prepare an enactment which would embrace the following purposes:

(1) A start must be effected, with provision for federal enforcement, in the more than 2000 bi-racial school districts that have made no beginning.

(2) The completion of the desegregation process should be facilitated, in accordance with sound educational precepts.

(3) Neither federal legislation nor administration should impede the initiation of suits by private plaintiffs in federal courts, or prejudice the outcome of their suits.

(4) Nor should the federal role inhibit the reaching of local desegregation solutions by local consensus.

Of the above purposes, Nos. 3 and 4 have definite implications for northern school desegregation. Congress cannot at this time, however, wisely legislate to meet directly the northern questions, and should not, therefore, try. Constitutional rights and principles have not yet been sufficiently clarified by adjudication, and professional controversy still somewhat obscures the educational merits of various solutions. Moreover, there is no reason at this date to suppose that local solutions cannot be satisfactorily and readily attained. (See principle no 4, page 8 above.)

Congress should candidly legislate for the southern problem, and the premier objective should be to effect starts. To this end, Congress should impose an affirmative duty on every public school board to operate the schools under its jurisdiction on a non-racial basis. To assure this, formally recorded desegregation plans should be required of every bi-racial district, not already under court order, where initial assignment of school children is by race, or where, regardless of assignment policies, no Negro and white children are in fact in school together. The plan should be a document of public record. Its recording should be completed shortly after enactment, and certainly in not more than 60 days; more time is not required: there is nothing arcane about desegregation planning, and there exists an abundance of experience to consult.

The effect of this would be a Congressional finding and declaration that "all deliberate speed" means "now."* No defendant in a school desegregation case could henceforth plead time.

No purpose would be obviously served by requiring that the plans be filed with any office in Washington. There are good reasons why they should not be. Unless the federal office were to review and evaluate them, there would be no need for it to be custodian. Administrative review would be unfortunate. It could have no effect other than either the abrupt or the gradual and subtle permeation of bureaucratic thinking and influence into the desegregation process. What pleased the Secretary of HEW would tend to please a federal judge, and the rights of a Negro plaintiff to seek redress in a federal court would become progressively, and merely, formal. His remedy would be through his Washington lobbyist, not through his local lawyer.

The Attorney-General must be empowered to intervene in pending litigation, and, more importantly, to bring suit in the name of the United States to effect prompt desegregation starts, through civil action or other proceeding for preventive relief, including an application for an injunction against school boards depriving or threatening to deprive individuals of their equal protection rights. The affirmative duty should be defined in the statute in such a way as to preserve in full the freedom of action of private plaintiffs:* and to give at least tacit Congressional recognition to the impossibility of the Attorney-General filing suits in as many as 2,000 districts (in the unhappy and unlikely chance that would be indicated), and the consequent desirability of his bringing suit in the most strongly resistant areas.

The Attorney-General should proceed on his own investigation, as he does in voting violations under the Civil Rights Act of 1957. He should not have to await on complaints; the privilege of private counsel for private complainants should be fully preserved and should suffice. Congress has a specific Constitutional mandate to enforce the terms of the 14th Amendment;* by a statute such as is recommended here it would do so by affirming the duty of school boards to operate non-racial systems; the Attorney-General can and should, consequently, be made responsible to combat violations which he discovers. We need to remember that Brown v. Topeka is not a limitation on the power of Congress; the Supreme Court proscribed denial of an individual right. This does not inhibit Congress from going beyond to a general protection of the right.

P. L. 85-315, sec. 131 (c) cf. also Sec. 108 of S. 1209 (88th Cong., 1st session), introduced by Senator Kuchel and others, which would confer on the Attorney-General the power and the duty in school cases recommended here. The approach of S. 1209 to this problem is, therefore, much to be preferred over that of the Administration's bill.

*14th Amendment, Sec. 5.

The simple, yet conclusive, reasons for placing this responsibility on the Attorney-General are to expedite the desegregation process, bring to bear national authority, and relieve Negro plaintiffs, organizations, and lawyers of some of their heavy psychological and financial burdens.

To do an effective job, the already over-strained staff of the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice will have to be strengthened. The present Administration has considerably enlarged that staff and its function since January 1961, but has done so in part by using personnel from other Divisions. The Adminis tration should ask Congress for the money needed to staff adequately the Civil Rights Division, and Congress should provide it.

The right of private plaintiffs to bring suit should not, we repeat, be impaired or diluted by new statutory authority for the Attorney-General. The law of school desegregation is evolving through the courts, and in terms of individual rights, not public policies. Whether the nation would have been better off had it a decade ago approached the issue differently, through statutes rather than decrees, is an interesting but now practically irrelevant question. It did not, and now is too late for constructive change. The atmosphere for freely litigating and adjudicating individual claims to rights should be carefully preserved. There are still many unanswered 14th Amendment questions, particularly in connection with northern desegregation but also in the South. Hard and fast rules are, of course, impossible but we would suggest that the Attorney-General plan his cases to spread and consolidate judicial interpreations already secured, and that the definition of new legal concepts to be sought be left to private plaintiffs and their attorneys.

The authority and the duty to bring suits in behalf of the United States is indispensable and already far too long withheld. Yet the Congressional requirement of "plans" is, if anything, even more worthwhile. It would put a positive duty on local people, and the country badly needs to begin thinking of school desegregation in those terms. While we believe that the Supreme Court in Cooper v. Aaron* in 1958 did affirm this duty, nobody speaks the national will as does Congress. There are persuasive grounds also for believing that such a mandate from Congress would be obeyed in a great many school districts, and that much litigation could thereby be avoided.

To give further impetus to the integration process, the federal government should offer, on application to the Secretary of HEW, financial assistance to school districts making their first starts, or to districts, whether of the South or the North, revising their systems in the direction of more integration.

Assistance should be limited to specific projects proposed by the local school administrators, and should be strictly limited to projects facilitating the desegregation process. Examples might include programs of teacher preparation, special tuition for Negro students to help overcome the academic handicaps of their inferior schooling, and special training for Negro teachers to help overcome the academic shortcomings of their training. The assistance, which could be either by grant, loan, or both, should be based by the Secretary on a finding that the project as described and planned by the local administrators would make a substantial contribution to the success of desegregation.

The Secretary should be instructed by the statute to adopt as his criterion of "desegregation" a unified school system. Only those projects should qualify which look toward, and are integral parts of a plan toward the full integration of faculties, administrators, and facilities, and the initial assignment of all students without regard to race; and which envision this accomplishment within a reasonably short period.*

Other forms of federal assistance, not reasonably connected to such technical projects as are mentioned above, should not be offered by Congress. So-called "compensatory" aid has sometimes been proposed, even to the inclusion of construction costs. We think there is a moral flaw in such proposals, and that they also rest on an unproven, and we suspect unprovable, premise; viz.

*Although otherwise the technical assistance provisions (Sections 301-306) of the Administration's bill seem to us soundly planned, they do rest on a definition of "desegregation" (Sec. 301b) which may well be soon obsolete. There are cases pending, some for a long while, which go beyond the bill's definition as "assignment----without regard to--- race." Several northern cases seek, in effect, a finding that the 14th Amendment right is a right to attend a bi-racial school. But there are also cases in the South which go further than the assignment question and which argue that the 14th Amendment confers a right to attend a school system which is organized and administered, throughout , without regard to race.

that integrated schools exceed the cost of "separate, but equal" schools.* Furthermore, school desegregation law should not be a means of importing federal aid-to-education through the legislative back door for some school districts only. Construction can be adroitly used to freeze or even to reverse the process of desegregation and this is a second reason for not allowing federal cost assistance.

Several bills before the 88th Congress, including the Administration bill, would extend and broaden the functions of the Commission on Civil Rights, and would direct it to become a clearing house for information and a supplier of technical advice and assistance to those responsible for school desegregation (and other civil rights matters). As stated in S. 1117 and H. R. 5456, the CCR would > serve as a national clearing house for information, and provide advice and technical assistance to Government agencies, communities, industries, organizations or individuals in ... the fields of voting, education, housing, employment, the use of public facilities, transportation, and the administration of justice.

We think there is much merit in the proposal, though as pertains to education the respective roles of the Commission and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare should be carfully distinguished.

*There might be a case for compensation had the South in fact provided equal schools. The logic would be that southern states had acted on the understanding that Plessy v. Ferguson was the law of the land, and therefore merited assistance when the Constitutional issue was settled to the contrary in 1954. Whatever the force of this argument, it is lost both by the failure to provide equality between 1896 and 1954, and by non-compliance after 1954.

Finally, Congress should, of course, repeal that section of the Morrill Act* which countenances segregated land grant colleges. The provision is anachronistic, and we believe of no legal standing or force now; consequently, we think the Administration has been lax by its continued observance of it. Congress should, nevertheless, remove this stain.

There has been much discussion of the general question of withholding of federal funds from programs which directly or indirectly support segregated schooling. We have a strong sympathy with the demand voiced by Negro and other civil rights organizations that federal money not go to strengthen segregated institutions. We think, nevertheless, that when Congress has enacted an adequate school desegregation bill there will be ample power to effect early desegregation everywhere. Congress has plentiful resources without resort to sanctions that weaken programs judged to be in the national interest.

Moreover, probably the largest federal investment in education is represented by the vast federal research programs. In these various programs, Congress has imposed no dictates on the President or his subordinates as to choice of recipient. It is and has been the executive which often chooses to spend funds at segregated institutions, and it is the executive who has the responsibility to stop doing so.

*And should do likewise with similar provisions of law in other fields, such as the Hill-Burton Act. These goals would be realized by Section 601 of the Administration bill.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT RIGHTS

Private property rights have historically included an employer's right to select his employees. Even with complete legal freedom, however, employers have been strongly influenced in their hiring policies by the pressures of popular opinion and custom, and by the prejudices (or supposed prejudices) of customers and other employees. Such restrictions on the employer's freedom to hire as he pleases do not need to be organized in order to be effective. In contrast, members of minority groups can exert influence on the employer only by organizing (e.g., a boycott) or with the assistance of law.

Federal law has for some years restricted the employer's freedom to discriminate against union members, to hire children, to employ women on prejudicial terms, and to pay sub-standard wages or to work over-long hours.

With this history, there is no obvious reason why the question of the rights of private property should again be debated. It would seem that unless one were prepared to argue for the repeal of these other restrictions on the employer's freedom, he could not legitimately contend for a right to discriminate on racial or creedal grounds.

On the other hand, racial and creedal discrimination does in a unique way involve the prejudices not only of the employer himself but of his customers and other employees. Very probably, both the extent and the durability of this prejudice are exaggerated.

But regardless, when the employer's prejudice is reinforced by that of customers and fellow-workers, the economic situation of the minority group member is especially hopeless, and especially deserving of legal protection. A democratic government has no higher task than the protection of the weak.

The government of our democracy has indeed impelling reasons to combat employment discrimination. These may be summed up under the three heads of developing talents and skills, enlarging national purchasing power, and the continuing obligation of America to build an open, fluid society.

There is little need to dwell here on economics. The drastic and rapidly recurring transition in technology and in distribution methods, the imperative of an expanding market in order to sustain economic growth, the pressures of population, and the steady obliteration of regional economies all point to an inexorable need that people be equipped with marketable skills and talents and that they be enabled to earn well in order to buy well. Our national self-interest coincides with Negro aspirations for employment opportunities.

A sound democracy must be a society open to talents. In simpler days, of industrial adolescence, abundant land, and scarce people, government had only to leave alone in order for talents to flourish (Please go to page 21) and find their levels. Modern government has to hold back and clear away the weeds and the clutter of a matured and complicated society that choke some of our people from the chance to develop themselves. Job discrimination is a particularly obnoxious growth, and one which is practically insuperable through individual effort. And as Mr. Robert Weaver has said, "Discrimination in housing and public places and in education is degrading and insulting. But discrimination in employment robs a man of the daily bread for himself and his family."*

No one should suppose that an anti-discrimination law will in itself end the employment hardships of Negroes. It will not. We have an enormous problem of disadvantaged people, embracing perhaps a tenth or even more of our citizens who are under-educated, wrongly trained, and culturally distorted. These people, who are of all races, are poorly prepared to accept employment opportunities, and their rescue from inaptitude is a mammoth national task which nearly all governmental bodies have as yet combined in shirking. President Kennedy, in his message of June 19, 1963, coupled manpower training with civil rights. Congress should give unstinted consideration to this part of the message, and to the bills now before it to carry out the training program.

Yet if non-discrimination is not a specific cure, discrimination has been a specific cause. It has to be removed, in schools, in employment, in housing, and at the polls, or else there can be no general progress in the well-being of our disadvantaged people, or their ability to add to the common good.

We can conveniently look at the employment question under several categories:

* As quoted in the New York Times, June 5, 1963.

1. federal employment;
2. employment in interstate and foreign commerce;
3. employment by federal contractors;
4. employment by state and local governments;
5. employment by state and local governments , and by private institutions, for work financed by federal funds.

(1) There is no need for Congress to legislate regarding discrimination in federal employment. The President has sufficient authority to set standards in the Civil Service, and he has the clear responsibility to prevent discrimination. President Kennedy has gone further, and the present Administration has conscientiously and vigorously made a special effort to recruit and place Negroes in non-traditional jobs, and to hire in larger numbers. Much progress has, accordingly, been made toward fairer representation, and toward enhancing the aspirations of Negroes by the visible evidence of real opportunities. The President has only persuasive authority over certain independent agencies, but that is usually enough; if he should find that it is not, he could report his difficulties to Congress. In federal employment, the responsibility is the President's, and Congress should not dilute it by presumptively acting.

(2) Acting under the commerce clause, Congress should ban discrimination by all businesses engaged in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce.* The law should contain a prohibition against discrimination on account of race, color, creed, or national origin, and a complaint procedure available either to the complaining individual or an organization acting in his behalf and at his request. The prohibition should extend not only to discrimination in hiring, but also to discrimination in recruitment; promotion, demotion, or transfer; layoff and dismissal; compensation, selection for training, including apprenticeship; membership in employee organizations; seniority rights; and access to all plant or office facilities.

The responsibility for administering the law should be vested in the Department of Labor. We think a commission-type administration (an "FEPC") would be inadvisable. The vogue for commissions is, happily, passing and there is growing awareness that while commissions are still a valuable instrument for quasi-judicial functions they are organically inept at administration. And above all, a fair employment law should be seen as involving administrative competence and vigor, and not as a framework for arbitrating grievances. Enforcement of fair employment should be worked into the regulatory procedures of Labor, just as is enforcement of wages and hours standards or other federally imposed standards on employers.

This means that the Department should not only act on complaints, but should by appropriate regulations establish suitable enforcement, inspection, and educational programs. Enforcement should include the power to order specific alterations of practice, and to issue clear and direct orders.

A complaint procedure is half meaningless unless it is, as it usually is not, expeditious. Congress should consult the experience of the various state anti-discrimination commissions now operating, as well as that of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities. One suggestion that Congress might consider is a provision that all complaints be heard initially by authorized regional or district officials, or by specially assigned officials in case of over-crowded dockets; that a decision must be given within 30 days of filing of complaint; and that in the event of employer appeal against a decision, the individual should during the appeal period have the benefits of the examiner's finding.

We think there should be no elaborate appeals procedure, available either to the employer or the individual. Appeals should go directly from the examiner to an impartial appeals board, and its decision should be final, subject only to review by a federal Court of Appeals confined to questions of law and due process. A similar appeals procedure would suffice for contesting the orders of an inspector enforcing the Department's regulations.

In the Pioneer Bus Company case (140 NLRB, No. 18, 1963), the National Labor Relations Board ruled that where a bargaining representative executes a contract or contracts which discriminate racially, the Board will not recognize such contract as a bar to another representation election. The Board went on to say that, although not at issue in the case and therefore not required, discriminatory contracts "warrant revocation of the certification." This development in the case-law of the Board should be watched with sympathetic interest.

An interesting question is the relationship of a federal fair employment program to the state programs now operative, with enforcement powers, in 19 states.* We think federal programs should not preempt satisfactory state programs, even for firms in interstate or foreign commerce, unless there is a clearcut administrative advantage. This should not be beyond the skill of legislative draftsmen to provide, nor should cooperative administration be beyond the ingenuity of federal and state officials. An approach to a like question is taken by the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, which expressly negates an inference of federal pre-emption in those situations where the federal agency has not assumed jurisdiction, and thereby permits parties to obtain relief under state law, ( ). /_Will Pollitt supply citation_/

Washington has enough to do without doing a job that the states can do as well or better. It may well be that both employer and minority group member would prefer a state administration close at hand, to a remote and impersonal federal.

(3) Employment by federal contractors is a special case. Appropriately, federal contractors should, in virtue of their relationship to the government, make a special contribution to the national need to utilize and develop fully our manpower. The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has diligently established a compliance system under Executive Order 10925 and, operating on the base of a statute applicable to all interstate commerce, the Committee could drop its policing functions and concentrate on the much discussed but rather nebulous "affirmative" requirements of the Executive Order. It could, in other words, demand from contractors, and aid them in effective, positive programs to bring minority group members into full participation in the national work force, on the premise that firms doing business with the government enter thereby into a partnership of national goals. Of the various techniques the Committee and, under its guidance, federal offices have already devised, we are especially impressed by the Defense Department's staff of Intergroup Relations Specialists, working in the field with contractors.

No separate legislation seems required, the President having clear enough authority through his procurement power. Certainly, however, the President should ask for and Congress should grant funds necessary for the Committee, instead of using funds, as at present, appropriated for other purposes; if a statutory foundation for the Committee would facilitate this, that legislation should pass.

Furthermore, by control of appropriations both for the Committee and -- more importantly -- for the statutory programs over all employment in interstate and foreign commerce, Congress would be in a position to terminate. This is as it should be. We should not suppose an everlasting need for anti-discrimination measures. It may be an enduring part of human psychology to pay as little as one can for as much as one can get, and therefore a wage and hour law will always be useful. But to believe that racial prejudice is similarly basic to human nature is morally self-defeating. Our conviction must be that once the discrimination barriers are broken, and minority members are equipped to hold their own, there will be in a free society neither the desire nor the possibility of re-erecting the old walls.

(4) Does employment discrimination by state or municipal bodies fall under the ban of the equal protection clause? The question has not been adjudicated but the trend of recent decisions is clearly in that direction, and would probably reach also the state or municipal contractor. The liberalizing effects of Baker v. Carr and its aftermath should, however be remembered. When state governments become structurally responsible to popular majorities, federalism would seem to indicate that their best regulation is by those same majorities.

Go to 30

(5) A quite different question is presented by state or local programs financed in whole or in substantial part by federal dollars. The temptation to discuss this issue at length is considerable, for some of the racially discriminatory uses of federal money are shocking, through a great variety of outlets including but unfortunately not limited to the National Guard, the U. S. Employment Service, Hill-Burton hospital construction, the several federal highways programs, the multitudinous federal farm offices, air terminals, and many others. But many words might serve only to obscure the simplicity of the matter. It ought to be axiomatic that wherever money from the common treasury goes within this country, the Constitution goes along. It is unthinkable that the use of federal money to favor some of us and disfavor others of us could be rationally defended. This is so clear that to many it is not at all clear that any legislation to this end seems needed: the President, it would seem, has no right to spend money which will yield racial discrimination. The hard job of enforcement would be made more feasible, however, by Congressional action. A prohibition on discrimination by state and local governments or their contractors or agents, on all projects financed in whole or in substantial part by the federal treasury, should be included in the proposed fair employment act,* and administered by the Department of Labor, with the added sanction of a funds cut-off to insure compliance.

VOTING RIGHTS

The Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960 were addressed principally to voting rights. That these first civil rights acts in four generations were concerned with voting, evidences its centrality among our civic values as well as our civic shortcomings. The problem of voting rights has been long and familiarly before us, and has been thoroughly documented by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights;* further description here would be superfluous.

From the history of the last few years, some conclusions and inferences can be drawn, which we state seriatim:

(1) With the exception of a few pockets of discrimination against American Indians and Mexicans the denial of voting rights is a problem peculiar to certain areas in southern states and to their Negro residents. The problem is not even regional in scope: in extensive areas, and the most populous ones at that, Negroes today register and vote freely. Legislation of general application, such as the Administration's literacy bill of 1962, would supersede state laws all over the country in order to reach abuses that are statewide in at most only two or three states, and which are virulent in parts of not more than three others.

At least two bills are before the 88th Cong.,1st sess. which would implement the 14th amendment by reducing the House representation of states depriving eligible persons of the franchise: S. 1644 introduced by Sen. McNamara; and H. R. 6801, introduced by Rep. Stratton. To the same end is Lampkin v. Hodges, filed May 28, 1963 before the U. S. District Court of the District of Columbia.

(2) Voting discrimination and low Negro participation are not always equivalent. In the states of Arkansas, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, where there are today only isolated and passing discriminatory practices, Negro participation is low but is remedial by education and organized effort; the same is true of large areas of Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina, and scattered areas of the other three Deep South states. The evil of discrimination is confined, in other words, to certain communities of the Deep South where the Constitutional prohibition against voting discrimination is openly flouted and efforts to obtain or to exercise voting rights are met by acts of intimidation, harassment, and physical violence, sanctioned and sometimes even participated in by local authorities and law enforcement officers.* These are, and should nationally be regarded as, outlaw communities. Our federal system will be less seriously challenged by federal power brought to bear directly on these communities, than by federal laws which supersede state laws everywhere.

(3) This is not meant to preclude federal regulation of elections, or the establishment of federal standards when, in the judgment of Congress, they are necessary or desirable. There is, we think, outstanding merit in the bill introduced by Senator Hart at each Congress since 1959. Senator Hart's bill authorizes the federal administration of registration and primary and general elections for U.S. Senators and Representatives in any district where a Congressional Election Commission "determines that unless such election is conducted by the Commission, persons having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the Congressional District is located are likely to be denied their right...to cast their votes and to have them fairly counted." On the sound premise that Congress has full authority under Article I, Sec. 4 of the Constitution to regulate elections of its own members, the proposed Commission would act solely at its discretion and without any recourse to the courts. It would, however, follow state law in registering eligible voters.

(4) The Hart bill goes to the key issue, as the Administration's 1962 literacy bill did not. The tool of discrimination is not the literacy laws of southern states, but their immoral and illegal administration, coupled with the physical intimidation and economic coercion of Negroes. Nor would the proposed sixth-grade literacy presumption of the Administration's 1963 voting bill* reach the extra-legal threat of violence or economic reprisal, and there is every prudent reason to suppose that communities which now illegally administer literacy requirements would resort to these extra-legal methods if their practices were set aside by a federal rule. Enactment of Sec. 101-b of the Administration bill (the sixth-grade presumption)would provide a salutary device, but we caution against overly-optimistic expectation of its value.

(5) In 1959 the Commission on Civil Rights proposed that federal registrars be appointed by the President in counties found by the President to practice discrimination. Congress chose, instead, in the Civil Rights Act of 1957 to invoke the judicial process. Experience does not suggest that this was wise. Voter registration is, after all, a ministerial act. The courts's proper and necessary function is to protect individuals from illegal treatment by the functionnaires commissioned to register their names. To ask the courts to do more than this, to ask them -- as the Act of 1960 does -- to look into the complex whole of a county's or state's practices and ascertain what "pattern" exists, to ask them to supervise the registration of deprived persons or even to register them directly, all this is a heavy and unnatural load on the judicial process. The Acts of 1957 and 1960 were intended to facilitate Negro registration, but they were poorly designed for that purpose. It is sufficient to note that of the 39 voting cases filed under the Acts of 1957 and 1960, only 19 have reached decisions, and of the 29 cases filed since January 20, 1961, only 9 have been decided. /Will Taylor please verify last sentence/

We seriously question, therefore, whether Congressional effort should be expended on the further refining of a basically defective approach. The Administration's present effort to do so (Sec. 101c) seeks by extraordinarily, almost monstrously, complicated means to make judicial administration perform a ministerial service. The effort should be to get the voting question out of the courts, not more deeply into it.

(6) The Acts of 1957 and 1960, imperfect as they are, do provide legal means for federal suppression of the gorsser violations of the 14th and 15th Amendments. The Department of Justice has enforced them conscientiously and, with additional lawyers, could do yet more. (Amendment of the laws would be far less helpful than would appropriations making possible more attorneys in the Civil Rights Division.) As previously said, voting discrimination occurs now, with but few exceptions, only against Negroes and only in some localities of the South. By their defiance of the Constitutional order, these places are virtually outlaw communities. New and more refined legislative remedies are not required to reach this blatant disregard of rights. To contain and disarm lawlessness, a clear federal presence is required at the first outbreaks. We think the Attorney-General has the power, in the face of determined lawlessness supported by an acquiescent or conspiratorial community, to send federal marshals and agents of the Bureau of Investigation for on-the-spot protection of the exercise of federal rights. Such marshals and federal agents should be deployed in accordance with principles normally governing in law enforcement, in numbers and with authority adequate to deal with all anticipated exigencies, including authority and directions to enforce compliance with federal law and to make arrests for violations.

Moreover, the Attorney-General may seek through the courts appropriate orders to prevent any parties from interfering with the registration or voting process.* We are, therefore, glad to note that the Department of Justice in U. S. v. Greenwood, now pending before the federal district court of northern Mississippi, has taken the position that freedom of assembly in connection with voter registration is a right within the power of the Attorney-General to make secure.*

*The argument made above in paragraph 6 was stated earlier by the Notre Dame Law School Conference in a preliminary statement submitted to the President on February 12, 1963, and subsequently inserted by Senator Douglas in the Congressional Record for February 19, at pages_____. /Will Silard insert page numbers/ The statement urged a more extensive use of executive powers to cope with voting discrimination, and the employment of additional methods to expedite cases and to bring them to satisfactory results. The statement was documented at the request of his conferees by G. W. Foster, Jr., Professor of Law at the University of Wisconsin, in a memorandum submitted to the Civil Rights Division on March 15, 1963.

CONCLUSION

There is an urgent need for bringing Congress into explicit support of racial equality. Unless and until this is done, the national decision in favor of equality is clouded and imperfect. The voting legislation of 1957 and 1960 has not achieved this end, because it creates and punishes crimes, and thereby reaches only the issues of discriminatory application of state laws, or vicious interference with the exercise of the federal voting right. The Acts of 1957 and 1960 fall short of a Congressional affirmation of equality as an attribute of national and state citizenship.

For reasons which are now a part of history, but also for reasons of intrinsic value the first Congressional action should, pre-eminently, include a strong, well-designed school desegregation law. We propose that this have the following elements:

(a) "Desegregated schools" should be defined as those which accord each child the right to attend a non-racial school system.

(b) The primary aim of legislation, at this time, should be to effect starts in those bi-racial school districts of the South which have made no beginning.

(c) To this end, each school board having jurisdiction over such a district would be required to prepare and make public a desegregation plan.

(d) Further, the Attorney-General must be authorized to bring desegregation suits in the name of the United States, and to intervene in cases brought by private plaintiffs.

(e) And further, technical assistance from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to facilitate desegregation should be available to school districts, South and North, for projects specifically related to the desegregation process.

(f) The right of private plaintiffs, through counsel of their choosing, to bring desegregation suits should be carefully preserved.

The Notre Dame conference considered also the fields of employment and voting.

Congress has waited long to act in enforcement of the 14th Amendment. When it at last does so, it should direct its action toward fundamental causes of racial inequity. The President's proposals for manpower training go to this problem. But without effective legislation to ban job discrimination, they will not be enough. A fair employment law is required.

The law should be administered by the Department of Labor (not by a new commission), and should cover all phases of the employment process of firms engaged or affecting interstate and foreign commerce. The law should reach also employment, of all descriptions, carried on by state or local governments and by private institutions for work financed in whole or in part by federal funds.

We recommend further that, by several means, the law should rely on administrative regulations rather than quasi-judicial methods for enforcement. We think that this can be realized by incorporating the administration into the Department of Labor, and bringing the whole structure of the Department into responsibility for the work.

We propose that the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity be continued, and that it press strongly to bring governmental contractors into partnership with the national government through affirmative actions that specially contribute to the development of job skills among Negroes and other minorities, and their full utilization.

In the third field -- voting discrimination -- the Notre Dame conference strongly believes that additional legislation is not a sufficient remedy.

The problem is neither nation-wide nor region-wide. The condition which requires federal attention is the lawlessness that exists in a relatively small number of outlaw communities of the Deep South.

This condition does not pose an issue of federalism. Federalism is a system of divided power among governments, and governments are instruments whose whole purpose is to establish an order of law. In these outlaw communities where citizenship rights are flagrantly destroyed, there is no law to respect.

We have here, in short, a problem of enforcement, and the President's power is adequate, strengthened by the Acts of 1957 and 1960, to create conditions which permit every citizen, freely and without fear, to register to vote, to cast his vote, and to have it honestly counted.

This is the centennial year of Emancipation. It is also the year when Negro patience with systematized social deprivation has finally broken. It is the year for Congress to act.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN PUBLIC EDUCATION

Proposals for Congressional Action

Introduction

This memorandum is addressed to proposals for Congressional action to implement school desegregation. The material is offered as a starting place for discussion, not as a blueprint for legislation.

The memorandum is in two parts. The first deals with the problems of primary and secondary schools; the second with matters affecting higher education. Each part commences with a discussion of present federal involvement with the education process - federal grants in aid, federal services to education, and present federal practices with respect to enforcement of rights against racial discrimination.

Arguably, the federal Executive Branch has powers derived from existing laws and judicial decisions which would enable it to strike hard at the racial discrimination it presently ignores in many areas. Important practical difficulties, however, stand in the way of such action. For one, the authority to act may be unclear or, for another, the Executive may hesitate to act where Congress has apparently decreed otherwise.

Questions of unclear Executive or Judicial authority suggest the desirability of Congressional action to make the authority specific. Yet the thought of seeking additional legislation generates other problems. A refusal by the Congress to grant a specific authority can establish a legislative history which tends to negate the existence of an implied power of the Executive or Judiciary to act. Or the hurly-burly of Congressional processes may result in restrictive legislation which expressly prohibits the use of powers which previously existed by implication.

Nor is the result always a happy one when Congress imposes mandatory duties on the Executive. Insufficient funds may be provided for doing the job adequately or responsibilities, urgent when they were declared mandatory, may in time become less important than other duties with which an agency is charged and yet will have to be carried out because of their mandatory nature. [The Commission on Civil Rights, for example, has a mandatory duty to investigate voting complaints, a matter of considerably reduced importance at present because of the active involvement of the Justice Department; the Commission could better use its limited budget in other areas but is required to continue investigation of the infrequent complaints it receives.]

Apart from considerations growing out of the distribution of power among the coordinate branches of the federal government, other complications develop out of the distribution of powers between the national government and the states. Specifically, the drive against segregation in the public schools of the North and West raises questions which perhaps must be addressed exclusively to the legislative and executive branches of the states. In particular, the demands that public officials take racial considerations benignly into account and reorganize schools to mitigate the effects of residential segregation are probably beyond the scope of duties which the courts may enforce against the states under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Some of the same demands appear also to lie beyond the power of Congressional action in light of the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3 (1883).

The interplay of forces within the federal government and between it and the states must, then, be taken into account in fashioning proposals for Congressional action. Such considerations are of major importance where Congress is asked to define duties and sanctions for the enforcement of duties. On the other hand, only Congress can appropriate money and hence programs requiring financial assistance must be cast in the form of legislative action.

Detailed consideration of elementary and secondary school problems and of proposals for dealing with them follow.

PART I. ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Federal Involvement: Financial Aids

At the elementary and secondary school levels, federal involvement is not substantial. Federal financial aids reach these schools through a hodge-podge of programs which appear to have been generated independently in response to special pleading for particular situations. Administration of the programs tends to center in the Commissioner of Education and in the Office of Education which he directs although the School Lunch Program, the largest of all the aid programs, is administered by the Department of Agriculture.[1] The ad hoc character of the aid programs results in considerable overlapping of legislative authority vested in the Commissioner of Education. Viewed as a whole, federal aids for elementary and secondary schools take on a capricious appearance.

The principal federal aid programs administered by the Commissioner of Education and having some impact on elementary and secondary schools are:

(1) The "Impact-Area" Program: Furnishes aids to school districts to compensate for populations swelled by the presence of governmental establishments in the area;[2]

(2) The National Defense Education Act: Provides for matched aids to states for instruction programs in science, mathematics, and foreign languages, as well as smaller grants for research in educational media, for guidance counseling, and for development of "area vocational programs;"[3]

(3) Vocational Training: At least two other programs in addition to that provided in the National Defense Education Act, supra;[4]

(4) The Library Services Act: Provides for development of library services in rural areas;[5]

(5) Aid for the Deaf or Mentally Retarded: Provides limited aid for improvement of teaching the deaf or mentally retarded.[6]

Outside the Office of Education's jurisdiction is the independent Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (also in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare) which places federal funds in state hands for development of vocational rehabilitation of the disabled, a program likely to have some indirect benefits to programs in both elementary and secondary schools.[7]

In addition to administering grant in aid programs, the Office of Education also provides some services as a clearinghouse of statistics and information about school problems and, under the Cooperative Research in Education Act,[8] has authority for research in problems of education generally. The Cooperative Research in Education Act seems clearly broad enough to justify research into the problems and processes of school desegregation, but it does not appear that funds available under this program have yet been put significantly to work for this purpose.

Indeed, until 1962 the administration of the aid and service programs just described steered entirely clear of any concern for racial problems in education. If anything, the administrators of the programs appeared to back away from involvement in race matters. With its Statistical Report for the year 1953-54 the Office of Education even abandoned its past practice of publishing comparative statistics on Negro and white schools. The aim behind this may have been laudable in recognizing that public agencies should not take race into account, but the practical effect of the decision was to dry up one of the few useful sources of information which revealed the inequalities between white and Negro education.

The first real evidence of an intention to face problems of segregation in facilities aided by federal educational funds came in the Summer of 1962. This came in the announcement by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare that efforts would be made to insist upon desegregation of schools in districts receiving "Impact-Area" funds. Enforcement of this policy has been handed over to the Department of Justice, which is proceeding primarily through negotiation although a test case is pending in a federal District court against officials of Prince George County, Virginia, which receives federal aid because of the military base at Fort Lee.

It was also announced in the Summer of 1962 that the Office of Education would establish a clearinghouse for information about the desegregation process, but the program shows little promise to date of any real vitality.

While these are portents of a more active concern for matters of racial discrimination in programs aided by federal funds or services, they reflect only a small beginning. And such major programs as School Lunch and those established by the National Defense Education Act appear to operate without concern for possible discriminatory use by the states of funds which the federal government supplies.

Federal Involvement: U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

Congress has not yet, almost nine years later, thrown its prestige behind the enforcement of public school desegregation called for by Brown v. Board of Education. Indirect support of the decision, though without any reference whatever to desegregation, has come from Congress largely as a result of the Civil Rights Act of 1957. That Act upgraded the former "Civil Rights Section" of the Department of Justice to division status and placed it under the charge of an Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights; and the Act also created the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, with authority to operate for a two-year term, which term has twice been renewed for two-year periods.

The powers of the Commission on Civil Rights are limited to fact-gathering and making recommendations for executive and legislative action where voting deprivations and denials of equal protection are involved. The Commission has been beset by numerous difficulties, despite which it has performed some useful services. The fact that Congress has renewed it for two-year terms has created an atmosphere of impermanence within the Commission that has created substantial personnel problems and the two-year terms have made it impossible to undertake more meaningful programs which can only be discharged over a longer period of time. Again, the six Commissioners - who serve on a part-time basis for a per diem of $50 and expenses - have tended to insist upon close surveillance of the day-to-day operations of the full-time professional staff, involving themselves in much minutiae of administration rather than confining their limited time to the formulation of broad policy directives. And finally, the Commission's limited substantive powers and small budget (about $900, 000 annually) have effectively prevented it from maintaining substantial surveillance over the internal policies and administrative practices of the federal government and barred it from furnishing consultative services much needed in many areas of civil rights.

Yet with all its handicaps conceded, the Commission has made some useful contributions to problems of racial discrimination in education. From 1959 through 1962 the Commission sponsored annual conferences on problems of school desegregation. The conferences brought together educators from all over the country to exchange views. The published Proceedings of each conference contained much useful information although the circulation of the Proceedings was limited and the symbolism of Commission sponsorship curtailed their usefulness in the more resistant areas of the South.

In its 1959 and 1961 biennial reports the Commission also made careful analyses of legal problems related to school operations. Perhaps the most significant Commission contribution in education to date, however, was two volumes published in December 1962 containing reports of field studies made by a group of nine law professors in selected communities all over the country. Out of these empirical studies emerged sharp contrasts in the kinds of problems presented in the several communities examined. Broad regional differences existed, too, in both the demands made on behalf of Negroes and the legal issues raised by the demands: in the South it had been insisted that the dual system of schools be reorganized into a unitary system which operated without regard to race. In the North and West, on the other hand, it was being insisted that race be taken benignly into account to re-shuffle school populations in ways which mitigated the effects of residential segregation. Put another way, the attack in the South insisted that public authority be color-blind; in the North and West a concept of color consciousness was sought. Between the two positions were profound differences over the scope and function of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Commission has authorized a second set of field studies of school segregation during the 1962-1963 school year, hoping to develop a better definition of problems - and differences - among the various school patterns and the demands for changing them. Assimilation of many of these differences into simple, sweeping legislative proposals will at best be difficult.

Despite these many differences there are certain obvious contributions which the federal government can make. There is need for much further study of the kind initiated by the field studies of the Commission on Civil Rights. There is need for a clearinghouse operation which can collect and distribute materials describing desegregation programs which have worked and, indeed, those which have not. Skilled consultants who could offer assistance to school authorities when requested are also needed.

Logically, the Office of Education would be the appropriate agency for undertaking to furnish many of these services. At present, however, only the Commission is making any significant contribution of this kind and currently neither the Commission nor the Office of Education is equipped to furnish consultative services.

Federal Involvement: Enforcement of Desegregation

Until 1960 the federal judiciary carried almost alone for the national government the responsibility for implementing public school desegregation. This has left to the Negroes the responsibility of initiating private litigation against school authorities and required Negroes to shoulder the costs of litigation - primarily through the machinery of the N. A. A. C. P. Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Even after a decree directing school desegregation had been obtained, the Department of Justice hesitated for a long time about acting to insure orderly enforcement of the decree. In 1956 the Department failed to intervene when Governor Shivers used the Texas Rangers to block a federal court decree at Mansfield, Texas. The same year, the defiance triggered by John Kasper of the court decree at Clinton, Tennessee, continued for months before the Department furnished any real assistance. In 1957 the Department refused once more to act when Kasper commenced a similar operation at Nashville to thwart a court decree and it came into the fray at Little Rock too late to head off a situation that finally required the use of federal troops. And the Department remained on the sidelines, too, during the 1958-1959 school year when Arkansas and Virginia closed public schools in defiance of desegregation decrees.

A major change in Justice Department policy occurred in November 1960 when the school crisis at New Orleans first came to a head. At that time the Department moved in and took over almost entirely the responsibility for enforcement of the New Orleans decree. In the federal courts the Department attacked wave after wave of legislation which the Louisiana legislature ground out to frustrate enforcement of the court orders.

From New Orleans on, the Department of Justice has adhered to the policy of acting to preserve the integrity of federal court decrees. Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, has kept a watchful eye out for the possibility that a court decree might be evaded or that disturbance might interfere with it. Where there was cause for concern, ranking officials of the Department have established close contacts with local and state officials, making it clear that local and state authorities would be expected to take primary responsibility for seeing that the decree was obeyed in an orderly manner and that federal intervention would follow if this failed.

Behind-the-scene contacts of this sort have served a useful purpose in a number of communities by compelling local authority to face its obligations. Cajolery and threats, however, do not always avoid trouble - as events at Oxford, Mississippi, and in Prince Edward County, Virginia, attest.

In addition to the activities just described, the Department of Justice has occasionally filed amicus briefs in school desegregation actions, usually on the request of the court. Cases at Hoxie and Little Rock in Arkansas, New Rochelle, and in St. Helena Parish, Louisiana, are examples.

As earlier pointed out, the present role of the Justice Department leaves to Negro plaintiffs the burden of initiating and paying for school desegregation litigation. In the Winter of 1956-1957 Attorney General Brownell advanced the proposal that the Justice Department be authorized to initiate actions in the name of the United States on behalf of those who allegedly suffered deprivations of federally secured civil rights. The Brownell proposal became Title III of the Civil Rights Bill submitted by the Eisenhower Administration to the Eighty-fifth Congress early in 1957.

The Title III provision had much to recommend it. It would have relieved Negroes of the costly burden of litigation, would have placed the Executive Branch on the side of enforcing school desegregation, and would have relieved the continuing shortage of competent attorneys available to prosecute school cases.

Yet even among those who wished to see vigorous enforcement of desegregation, the Title III proposal raised some doubts. Such a provision would shift primary responsibility for initiating action to the Justice Department. While a sympathetic and determined Attorney General could use it for effective purpose, a foot-dragging Justice Department could slow the process almost to a halt or could settle for court orders which produced little or no actual desegregation. One of the great Negro attorneys, himself actively involved in desegregation litigation, once told me he strongly opposed the Title III proposal. "I've got too much politics in my lawsuits as it is," he added.

Other Negro leaders privately expressed concern that Title III would displace Negroes from their vanguard position in leading the battle for school desegregation. Yet another concern was expressed even by those who supported Title III: the provision could be of major significance only if Congress also expanded substantially the staff size of the Civil Rights

Division, for no one seriously urged that the already overburdened Division abandon the work it was presently doing.

The Title III proposal failed of adoption by Congress in 1957 when the President withdrew his support of it and has not been enacted to date.

It has frequently been suggested that the Attorney General has existing authority to initiate school desegregation actions, without need for further legislation. Authority for this is implied from the President's constitutional duty to "take Care that the laws be faithfully executed." Existence of such authority seems to be buttressed also by a few cases in the Supreme Court which sustain the standing of the United States to insist on proper enforcement of the Constitution and federal laws even in cases in which the United States has no proprietary or pecuniary interest. See U.S. v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U.S. 273 (1888); In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564 (1895); and Securities Comm'n v. U.S. Realty Co., 310 U.S. 434 at 459-460 (1940).

In the Spring of 1961 Attorney General Kennedy publicly expressed the doubt whether the United States could initiate desegregation actions without first obtaining specific legislative authority to do so. As previously indicated, however, the Department of Justice subsequently initiated judicial proceedings against officials in Prince George County, Virginia, to bring about school desegregation. The United States does have a pecuniary interest in that case, it will be recalled, because the County schools receive federal funds under the "Impact-Area" program.

In summary, the Department of Justice has since 1960 undertaken primary responsibility for judicial proceedings required to insure effective enforcement of federal court decrees previously rendered in school desegregation suits. It has also filed amicus briefs in other cases, usually at the request of the court. Finally, it has initiated desegregation proceedings in a test case against a school district which receives federal "Impact-Area" funds.

Private Efforts to Enforce Desegregation

Shortly after the Brown decisions in the Supreme Court a number of school districts in the Upper South made a start toward desegregation without waiting to be taken to court. This voluntary action soon dried up, however, and communities in the Middle and Deep South have, with few exceptions, refused to begin any desegregation until directed by a court order to act. [Interestingly, both school officials and attorneys for Negro plaintiffs have often felt need for the protection of a court order; since neither group usually got all it had asked for, each has found it helpful to shift responsibility to the court.]

It is a commonplace belief that most desegregation drives have been initiated from the national offices of Negro action groups. Numerous efforts of this kind have been attempted, but the short answer is most of the initiative has come from within the community itself and, in any case, no amount of exhortation from outside the community has been successful without enlisting dedicated and determined leadership from Negroes of the local community.

For a variety of understandable reasons, Negro parents have hesitated to use their own children as shock troops to fight the first desegregation battle in the community. Again, Negro teachers have not, as a group, been prominently identified in efforts to promote desegregation; indeed, many Negro leaders complain privately that teachers have proven to be one of the most effective forces against school desegregation found in the Negro community.

The comparative academic inferiority of Negro schools has been another major deterrent to comprehensive desegregation, although neither Negroes nor whites have chosen to say much about this publicly. In many of the larger communities of the South, the average Negro pupil may have fallen a whole year behind the average white by the third grade and the gap may widen to four years or more by the twelfth grade. The gaps may be still greater in many rural areas.

These gaps in average achievement level between the two groups make it a practicable impossibility at higher grade levels for more than a handful of high-achieving Negroes to meet the competitive standards of the white schools at the same grade level. Tactically, of course, Negro leadership has been compelled to take a stance in support of top-to-bottom and wholesale desegregation of the school system although many privately concede that such a result would in short-run terms produce a humiliating failure for a lot of the children who would be involved.

Despite these and many other pressures upon them, strongly motivated Negroes have stepped forward at the community level to insist upon school desegregation. For communities in the South, legal representation for the Negro plaintiffs has been furnished - in all but a few cases - by attorneys affiliated with the N. A. A. C. P. Legal Defense and Education Fund. The Defense Fund, corporately and administratively independent of the N. A. A. C. P., has been the principal source of legal assistance for all the race litigation in the country and its services are available for litigation involving not only the N. A. A. C. P. but others as well.

The Defense Fund maintains at New York a small corps of extremely skillful full-time attorneys who spend much of their lives on the road. Another group of attorneys, many of them law professors, furnish part-time help in planning strategy and tactics, as well as preparing briefs.

The attorneys working out of the New York office - about a dozen in number - are, of course, not enough to handle all the litigation with which the Defense Fund is associated. To compensate for this, attorneys - usually Negroes - are retained at the community level. The Fund will pay modest retainers to the local attorneys where it proves impossible to raise sufficient money within the community to conduct the litigation.

Fund attorneys at New York supply pleadings and briefs and usually play a major role in directing the strategy and tactics of the litigation. Thus each of the cases taken by the Fund becomes meshed into the overall strategy, which is aimed at breaking new ground wherever possible. Understandably, the substantial direction by the New York office tends to produce some tensions between Fund regulars and local Negro leaders over the questions of timing and the mode of presenting a case.

The role of the locally affiliated attorney in the Fund cases varies considerably depending upon the competence of the local man and the time he can give to the litigation. The local attorney may sometimes take preliminary depositions and may even conduct the trial at the District court level, though he is frequently assisted or replaced in both these activities by an attorney from New York. Appeals generally are handled directly by attorneys in the New York office.

Good as the Defense Fund operation is, it is beset by numerous difficulties. The Fund conducts its own money-raising activities, but has not yet been able to raise its operating budget to the level of half a million dollars annually, thus lagging far behind the public funds which are poured in on the other side of the litigation.

Another difficulty concerns the competence of many of the locally affiliated attorneys. Only rarely are they a professional match for the opposing white attorneys, though there are some spectacular exceptions. For the most part, the affiliated attorneys have been educated entirely in segregated schools of inferior academic quality. Here and there may be found graduates of integrated law schools, but they were rarely the strong men in their classes; the better performers among the Negro law students have tended to practice in the North and West rather than the South.

Despite the deficiencies of their education, through experience some have become quite competent. It is difficult, however, for many of them to find time for study and careful preparation of their legal work. Typically they are immensely overburdened men who make a living by handling innumerable small cases which produce little income. Major demands on their time are imposed by dissolving garnishments and attachments, restoring clients to relief rolls, handling divorces, and otherwise representing impecunious clients.

The Fund's efforts at coordinating overall strategy and tactics in school cases are not always successful. The problems differ greatly from place to place, making it difficult for a standardized approach to the cases to work well in every instance. Other difficulties stem from differences of opinion among the Negroes whom the Defense Fund represents. Fund attorneys can make suggestions, but final decisions rest with their clients. I shall always remember Thurgood Marshall's reply when asked why he had not done a particular thing in one case: "You've got to have clients to have lawsuits. Those people weren't about to try that suggestion."

Even in the South some school cases have been handled by attorneys not associated with the Defense Fund. Several of these independent cases, not coordinated with Fund strategy, have produced damaging precedents.

Within the past several years a major move has developed across the North and West, attacking school segregation in the larger urban areas. Paul Zuber, a Negro attorney from New York, first won attention with his victory in the New York case of In the Matter of Skipwith, 14 Misc. 2d 325, 180 N.Y.S. 2d 852, 4 Race Rel. L. Rep. 264 (Dom. Rel. Ct. 1958). He thereafter won the celebrated New Rochelle case, obtaining some assistance from attorneys on the Defense Fund, although he is not regularly affiliated with the Fund.

The Fund is not at present, however, much involved with the desegregation drive in the North and West. Beginning in 1961 the national headquarters of the N.A.A.C.P. spurred a drive to attack the so-called "de facto" school segregation in this area. Robert Carter, formerly with the Defense Fund and now general counsel for the N.A.A.C.P. itself, has provided guidance to local attorneys in many of these communities, and Miss June Shagaloff, education specialist for the N.A.A.C.P., has acted as a consultant to groups in these communities who intend to protest segregation in the Northern and Western schools.

In summary, the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Education Fund has until recently enjoyed a virtual monopoly in handling school desegregation cases. Under Fund direction have been the cases which have made the precedents, drawn almost exclusively from experience in the South. The growing developments in the North and West, however, have not been attributable in any important measure to activities of Fund attorneys. There appears to be a tacit agreement that the Fund will continue its concentration on school and other race problems in the South while others will work at the problems of school segregation in the North and West.

Status of School Segregation

In most urban areas of the country residential patterns produce schools which are entirely, or substantially, segregated. The major judicial attack which led to the Brown decision in 1954 was aimed at the dual systems of public schools then legally required in 17 states and the District of Columbia. The central constitutional point urged upon the Supreme Court at the time of Brown was that the states could not classify schools by race, that each child was entitled to attend public schools according to criteria which did not take race into account.

The logical consequence of this argument is that schools which are segregated because of residential patterns rather than by conscious design of school authorities cannot be judicially compelled to desegregate. Indeed, some of the arguments advanced on behalf of Negroes in the Supreme Court would, had the Court adopted them, have barred public officials even from taking racial considerations benignly into account in order to mitigate the effects of residential segregation.

The Court in Brown addressed itself only to the situation in which the state legally required dual sets of schools, formally classified as "Negro" and "white." "Separate educational facilities," the Court held, "are inherently unequal" - and hence the state could not constitutionally require them.

Typically in the areas which legally required dual schools, Negro and white schools are zoned on separate maps of the community. When the two maps are examined, it appears that Negro and white school zones overlap in racially-mixed neighborhoods. In attacking the dual school systems before the federal courts in the South, Negroes have insisted that a community's schools be re-zoned into a unitary system of zones, rationally designed without regard to race. They have also made strong objection to the use of unzoned school systems which permit pupils a choice among the schools of the district; the argument is that whites will choose to run away from schools which Negroes attend and that Negroes will be intimidated into choosing segregated schools. There have also been objections to transfer provisions which either explicitly take racial characteristics into account or which, as administered, permit pupils to make choices based on race. The Supreme Court has agreed to hear in the present term cases in which the Defense Fund is challenging a transfer rule which permits members of a racial minority to transfer to a school of their choice. See Goss v. Board of Education of the City of Knoxville, 301 F. 2d 164, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 36 (C. A. 6, 1962); and Maxwell v. County Board of Education of Davidson County, 301 F. 2d 828, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 34 (C. A. 6, 1962) [the Supreme Court granted certiorari in both cases on October 8, 1962].

The drive against school segregation in the South, then, has insisted upon rationally zoned neighborhood schools. Since a neighborhood school takes on the characteristics of the neighborhood it serves, the Negro's legal position thus far in the South has implicitly conceded that school authorities have no constitutional obligation to mitigate the effects of residential segregation.

In sharp contrast, the more recently developed drive against segregated schools in the North and West has attacked the neighborhood school as a device which produces segregation because of residential patterns. Arguing that segregated schools, whatever their cause, cannot be maintained by public authority, it has been insisted that racial considerations should be taken into account and that schools be organized to promote a maximum of integration. Numerous methods for promoting such integration have been advanced.

Around the periphery of segregated neighborhoods it has been suggested that schools be re-zoned and that new schools be located in ways which achieve substantial integration. Since the boundaries of segregated neighborhoods tend to be unstable, however, such suggestions are likely to produce only temporary results.

For schools buried well within segregated areas the problems are more complex. The neighborhoods tend to be congested and school-age populations in them tend to be larger than was the case when whites occupied the same areas. A frequent result is that old school buildings serving these districts are seriously overcrowded and are sometimes used for two school shifts a day. Large fractions of the children suffer serious cultural and social handicaps which stem from their economic status and - often - from their recent Southern origins.

These crowded slum schools face further difficulties in attracting competent teachers. Some of their classrooms are entirely unmanned and many others are staffed with substitute and even uncertified teachers.

Collectively, the problems of the segregated slum schools furnish substantial grounds for grievances. The inequalities are frequently worsened when contrasts are made with many of the all or largely white schools in the community which may have uncrowded and even empty classrooms and generally first-rate teaching staffs.

Battles over what to do about the segregated slum schools have generated deep differences even among educators who believe that integration is a desirable educational opportunity for all involved. Many express doubts about the wisdom of transferring children substantial distances to uncrowded schools, particularly at elementary grade levels. While such policies can relieve overcrowding and promote integration, they tend to be costly both in money and time and they afford relief from segregation for only a small fraction of the children in the slum neighborhoods.

Other objections to transferring children considerable distances from their homes raise more serious educational problems. Since the achievement levels in the slum schools fall well below averages in other neighborhoods, only the best-prepared children can meet the competition in the transferee schools. Furthermore, the widespread practice of grouping children by achievement levels tends to isolate minority-group children in an integrated classroom or in separate classrooms for low achievers. The psychological implications of such achievement grouping have provoked lusty controversy.

Dr. Conant and others have argued for strengthening the neighborhood schools rather than dispersing children over wide areas away from their homes. They stress the need for schools with a wide range of goals which can furnish materials within the child's grasp and at the same time can motivate him to set his sights higher. They also point out that the most effective remedial programs for culturally handicapped children have worked with the child not only during the school day but in his neighborhood and home as well - something made extremely difficult where the child attends school at a considerable distance from his home.

In time many of the same protests now heard in the North and West will be made in the South. For the present, however, substantial philosophical, tactical, and legal differences exist between the attacks on school segregation in the South and those in other areas of the country. And until many problems which still exist in the South have been solved, that region will differ from the rest of the country.

Even in the South wide variations in pattern are evident when comparisons are made among the 17 states and the District of Columbia, which required dual schools at the time of Brown.

The Border area - embracing Oklahoma, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Delaware - today has substantial fractions of its Negro school population attending school with whites. Oklahoma, with the lowest figure for this area, now has 25.4 percent of its Negro pupils attending school with whites; the District of Columbia, with the highest figure, has almost 80 percent of its Negro pupils in schools with whites.[9] Patterns of residential segregation in urban areas and continuing resistance to much or any desegregation in some rural areas account for the variations in the percentages of Negroes in school with whites in the Border area.

South of the Border area just referred to the school desegregation picture looks quite different. There has been no public school desegregation whatever in the three Deep South states of Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina. Token desegregation at Atlanta and New Orleans represents the only change thus far in the other two Deep South states.

The balance of the region consists of Florida, Texas, and the Mid-South states of Arkansas, Tennessee, North Carolina, and Virginia. Here again only token desegregation is evident. Arkansas, lowest among the group, has only 0.23 percent of its Negroes in school with whites; and Texas, the highest, has 2.16 percent. All these states, however, have ten or more districts in which some desegregation has occurred. Moreover, significant changes took place in these states between 1961 and 1962. In that period the number of Negroes attending school with whites almost doubled and the number of districts with at least some desegregation rose from 206 to 268.[10] Small though the actual percentages were, the changes represented a substantial speeding up of desegregation in districts which had earlier made a token beginning and some spread of desegregation into districts which previously had remained completely segregated.

It must be pointed out, however, that most of the change was confined to more urban areas. Nearly 2,000 districts, largely rural and with relatively smaller school populations, remained completely segregated. There were some rural districts in each of the states which had begun token desegregation, but they tended to be districts in which Negroes formed a comparatively small minority of the total population. The rural areas, with less sophisticated leadership both Negro and white and with generally lower levels of education - remained largely untouched.

The prospects for further speeding up of school desegregation in the Middle and Lower South in the next several years look reasonably good. Judicial decisions have cut steadily away at the restrictive effects of the widely-adopted Pupil Placement Acts, and dilatory tactics by local officials receive little support from most of the judges. Moreover, many boards through their own voluntary actions have altered the administration of the Placement programs after one or more years of desegregation. Unitary zoning systems were thereafter introduced, discriminatory criteria for reassignment to other schools were relaxed, and operations have gone forward under increasingly simple rules which left the choice of schools largely up to the individual.

The further spread of desegregation into districts still segregated should for a time move at an accelerating rate. There has, of course, been no desegregation whatever of public schools at elementary and secondary levels in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina as yet. It appears likely that this will occur in Alabama and South Carolina in the Fall of 1963, although any serious blow-up either at the University of Alabama or at Clemson University in South Carolina beforehand may delay things in either of those states for another year. Some new districts will almost certainly be added in Georgia and Louisiana in Fall 1963.

Much will depend upon initiative taken by Negroes themselves. Should a way be found to involve the Department of Justice in the process of initiating desegregation actions generally, this should also speed things along. The federal courts, particularly at the level of the Courts of Appeal, have become much more sure-footed in handling these cases, and workable systems for inaugurating desegregation and for subsequently speeding it up are now at hand.

A few federal District judges still find it impossible to face up to their responsibilities in desegregation cases. The Courts of Appeal have, however, worked out adequate ways of dealing with such recalcitrance, although the process is slower and usually embarrassing for everyone involved. All told, the stage in the South is pretty well set for major change and the rate at which it comes will depend largely upon the forces of initiative so far as commencing actions is concerned.

The problems in the North and West are less well worked out. There are hard questions still unresolved as to the role judicial action can play in dealing with de facto segregation. Established precedents call for judicial relief in situations created by racial discrimination which is conscious and invidious. Gerrymandering of school districts can be corrected by court action. So, probably, can be instances of overcrowding and other tangible evidences of unequal educational opportunity.

Whether, without any more, the mere existence of racial concentrations in a school resulting from residential patterns can be undone on Fourteenth Amendment grounds raises thorny questions. One involves the view which has uniformly been taken of the Fourteenth Amendment itself: while the state may act to prevent private discrimination, the Amendment imposes no positive obligation upon it to do so. In this view it appears that the state can justify existing school segregation by showing that - ignoring racial considerations - its schools are organized and operate on rational educational and geographic grounds.

For wholly understandable reasons, however, Negroes continue to insist that school authorities have the duty to mitigate the effects of residential segregation. The farthest reach of judicial language on this point came from the case in Hempstead, Long Island, in April 1962. The school board moved to dismiss the case before trial on the grounds that residential patterns, not board practices, produced the school segregation. The court denied the motion to dismiss, indicating the board had an obligation to mitigate the effects of segregation, whatever its cause. The board's obligation, the court said, could be discharged either by doing something to relieve segregation or by "a conclusive demonstration that no circumstantially possible effort can effect any significant mitigation." Branche v. Board of Education of the Town of Hempstead, School District No. 1, 204 F. Supp. 150 at 153, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 361 at 364 (E.D. N.Y., 1962).

Apart from the serious constitutional question which the Hempstead case raises, it also appears to have narrowed the choices of school organization to the alternative likely to do most in mitigating the effects of segregation. A central difficulty with this theory is that reasonable men are in fundamental disagreement over what constitutes the best alternative. It might well be that a maximum of racial mixing in schools would not in every case be the "best" answer for education or for mitigating the effects of segregation either.

Perhaps the best answer to a Hempstead kind of problem - for some time to come at least - is to apply the more traditional division of responsibility between judicial and legislative processes.

As a judicial matter, the constitutional question would be one of a school board's intention to segregate. The earlier cases involving school segregation made it clear that plaintiffs can make a prima facie case for relief by demonstrating that segregation exists in the schools. The burden then would shift to the defendant school authorities to rebut the case made against them. Where school officials can demonstrate that the system operates on rational educational and geographic grounds designed without an intent to preserve segregation and can show that segregation results from other forces, the plaintiffs would be denied judicial relief. Judicial relief could, of course, be granted where such justification cannot be demonstrated.

On the other hand, failure to obtain judicial relief would not exhaust the plaintiffs' opportunities to press for change. By political action they could then appeal to the legislative processes of the state and community for organization of schools in a manner which mitigated the effects of residential segregation. So long as the state confined itself to alternatives which did not significantly disadvantage any group and which dispelled any intent to segregate, it could experiment within a wide range of choice.

In short, school officials could be either color-blind or could become benignly color conscious and act to mitigate the effects of private segregation in housing. The choice between these alternatives would be a political one, not judicially enforceable.

There are numerous instances in which communities have made the political choice of taking race benignly into account. Highland Park, Michigan, Oberlin, Ohio, and Princeton, New Jersey, have consciously re-zoned schools to promote integration. San Francisco, after protests had been received, closed down a junior high school altogether in the Fall of 1962 which would have been 60 percent Negro and dispersed the pupils through other schools to produce more integration. And in October 1962 California's Board of Education adopted a policy which directed local school boards to consider the "ethnic composition" of schools in fixing zone lines and in locating new schools, thus directing the whole state to become benignly conscious of race in the organization and operation of its schools.

What seems clear from all of this is that the problems of school segregation vary greatly from community to community and that sweeping solutions for them are not at hand. What seems needed is much more experimentation. Open enrollment and free transfer systems need more study. So do other systems which focus on holding all children in neighborhood patterns and work at creating better schools.

Proposals for Congress: Generally

Suggestions for increased federal involvement in problems of school segregation have taken numerous forms. Some of those to be considered here could probably be carried out by Executive action under powers implied from existing authority. All the suggestions, however, are appropriate subjects for Congressional action and many of them can be carried out only with further Congressional support.

For convenience of discussion the suggestions have been grouped into five categories which in some measure overlap each other. They are:

I. Explicit Policy Support by Congress of School Desegregation

II. Improvement of Machinery for Enforcing Desegregation

III. Withholding Federal Funds

IV. Funds to Aid Implementation of Desegregation

V. Federal Services to Aid Implementation

The suggestions compiled below have been drawn from many sources. They come variously from bills which have been introduced in earlier Congresses, from recommendations of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, from suggestions advanced by both the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations, and from private sources as well. The comments upon the suggestions are my own and are intended only to initiate and stimulate discussion. There is ample room for different value judgments than those expressed here.

I. Explicit Policy Support by Congress of School Desegregation

Congress has not yet thrown its prestige behind the policy of desegregating public schools. In the years immediately following the Brown decisions the Supreme Court came under heavy attack and the failure of both the Congress and the President to support the decision was widely cited as evidence that the decision was both improper and unconstitutional. The attacks have in large measure subsided as the desegregation process matured and a sense of inevitability settled across the South.

The Executive Branch by this time has generally identified itself with support of the decision, but it would still be useful for Congress to declare itself unequivocally as well. Even a simple resolution of agreement, while not constitutionally required to validate the principle, would serve a useful purpose. In the past, however, such declarations of support have been coupled with substantive provisions which Congress failed to adopt and it has not yet been possible to place the question cleanly before Congress, unencumbered by substantive matters which divided those who supported desegregation in principle.

Perhaps it is now too late to give serious thought to an isolated declaration of support. Overt substantive backing of desegregation would speak for itself and is needed. But if substantive support cannot be had, a declaration of agreement in principle with desegregation should be insisted upon.

II. Improvement of Machinery for Enforcing Desegregation

A. Initiating desegregation actions in the name of the United States.

The proposal that the Attorney General be authorized to initiate school desegregation actions has been advanced in several forms. The two principal ones discussed here are (1) the so-called Title III provision advanced by Attorney General Brownell in 1956; and (2) the bill introduced in 1961 by Senator Joseph Clark and Representative Emanuel Celler entitled "Public School Desegregation Act."

(1) The Title III proposal was designed essentially to provide a new remedy for a federal Civil Rights Act, known as the Ku Klux Klan Act, that dated back to 1871.[11] This Act had provided civil remedies for persons injured by those who conspired to deprive another of equal protection of the laws or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws. The principal effect of Title III would have been to permit the United States to bring actions on behalf of persons whose rights under the Ku Klux Klan Act were threatened or invaded. Since the Brown case was decided on equal protection grounds, school desegregation actions fall within the scope of the Ku Klux Klan Act and Title III would thus have authorized the Attorney General to initiate suit where there were reasonable grounds to believe children were being excluded from public schools on grounds of race. A further provision of Title III would have struck a hard blow at the Pupil Placement Acts erected by the South after Brown to delay and evade desegregation: the provision dispensed with any requirement of exhaustion of state remedies before a federal enforcement action could be commenced. The Placement Acts created elaborate administrative remedies which under existing judicial doctrine had first to be exhausted before court action could be commenced. This produced great delay and often so heavy a burden that Negroes abandoned their efforts before completing the administrative proceedings. Only in the past several years have the courts placed substantial curbs on this feature of the Placement Acts.

(2) The Clark-Celler Bill of 1961, unlike Title III, was a comprehensive effort to deal specifically with school desegregation.[12] A companion bill introduced at the same time would have authorized the Attorney General to bring actions in the name of the United States for enforcement of other civil rights than those involving school problems.[13]

The Clark-Celler School Desegregation Bill proposed a statutory duty on school boards to desegregate. Unless a board were under a court order to desegregate or had already achieved substantial desegregation, it would be obligated to file a plan for desegregation with the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare within 180 days following enactment of the bill. The plan would be required to specify a detailed program for prompt and complete elimination of racial factors from its school operations and to provide for "first-step compliance" with that program not later than the commencement of the 1963-1964 school year. Finally, each board required to submit a plan was obligated to implement it in good faith and with all deliberate speed.

Another part of the bill authorized the Attorney General to bring suits in the name of the United States to enforce the duties to adopt and implement a desegregation program. Enforcement would be directed against school boards which failed to submit satisfactory plans to the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare or which did not execute the plans adequately thereafter.

Several other features of the Clark-Celler bill deserve reference.

First, the bill defined "desegregation" in terms which required school officials to adopt a color-blind attitude:

> Sec. 101. As used in this Act--
> (a) "Desegregation" means the assignment of all students to public schools irrespective of their race or color. No assignment system in which race or color is a factor in the initial assignment of students to particular public schools shall be deemed to have achieved desegregation even though placement or other tests or transfers or options may be available to change such assignment.

This definition stands in sharp contrast to the concept of desegregation urged on behalf of Negroes attacking de facto segregation in communities of the North and West. As discussed earlier in this memorandum, many of the demands made in those areas insist upon benign awareness of race and color in order that schools may be organized to promote integration by mitigating the effects of residential segregation. The Clark-Celler definition, if legislatively adopted, is now likely to spur protests from many Negroes. It would imply policy restrictions on integration as they are now striving for it and would curtail in any event the involvement of the federal government in many problems they insist must be solved through reorganization of schools.

Another feature of the bill carried over the proposal from Title III which dispensed with the need for exhausting state remedies as a prerequisite to federal enforcement of desegregation. As previously noted, recent judicial decisions have moved far in this direction. This has occurred in cases which hold that administrative remedies need not be followed in systems which leave dual schools in existence and merely permit desegregation for individuals who affirmatively seek it. The right secured in Brown, these courts have said, is to a unitary system of schools. See Northcross v. Board of Education of the City of Memphis, 302 F. 2d 818 at 822-823, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 40 at 44 (C.A. 6, 1962), cert. denied 370 U.S. 944 (1962); Bush v. Orleans Parish School Board, 308 F. 2d 491 at 499, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 693 at 700 (C.A. 5, 1962); Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction, 306 F. 2d 862 at 869, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 669 at 674 (C.A. 5, 1962); and compare Jeffers v. Whitley, [unreported as this is written] (C.A. 4, 1962).

Another feature of Clark-Celler would appear to confine the Justice Department's initial proceedings to members of the school board, defined as any agency or person that directs or controls the assignment of pupils to public schools. Whether those who threaten to cut off state school aids or who interfere in ways not directly connected with assignment of pupils may be joined in the action prior to rendition of a decree is perhaps questionable in light of the language in the bill. The bill does, however, make provision for proceeding against successors to board members, thus dealing with the circumstance which may arise when a board resigns to evade a duty to desegregate.

Finally, the bill would authorize annual appropriations of 40 million dollars for technical assistance and financial aids to desegregation. This will be discussed further in IV, infra.

In its 1961 biennial Report, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights backed in substance the major provisions of the Clark-Celler bill discussed above.[14]

Both Title III and the Clark-Celler approach to increasing federal involvement in the enforcement of desegregation have substantial virtues. Neither seems to meet the concerns, referred to earlier on pages 12 and 13 of this memorandum, that federal involvement might displace Negroes from their vanguard position in enforcing desegregation and that federal enforcement agencies might settle for more conservative desegregation programs than could be won in the courts by more highly motivated private action. The color-blind definition of desegregation contained in the Clark-Celler bill seems evidently at odds with the benignly color-conscious concept being sought on behalf of Negroes in the North and West. Arguably, such efforts to define criteria legislatively in light of the picture as it is now understood could hamper future organic developments through the judicial process.

B. Expediting Desegregation Litigation.

Delay in court has been a serious problem in the enforcement of school desegregation. Attorneys for school officials frequently have engaged in all sorts of dilatory tactics simply to buy time. They have thus taken advantage of any procedural mis-steps by the attorneys for the plaintiffs and have re-litigated time and again questions which have been solidly put to rest by prior precedents. Occasionally, too, some federal judges have been slow in setting motions for hearings or cases for trial. But the delay cannot in all cases be attributed to the courts and the attorneys for school officials. Attorneys representing Negro plaintiffs have in some instances been long in seeking to try actions which they have commenced, sometimes for tactical reasons and at other times because the plaintiffs themselves have proven hesitant to go forward with the case.

Numerous suggestions have been made for expediting desegregation litigation, of which four will be considered here.

(1) Use of three-judge District courts. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights suggested in its 1960 report on higher education that three-judge District courts be authorized to hear cases involving a substantial question of whether equal protection in education was being denied.[15] One advantage in this device lies in the fact that appeals from three-judge courts may be taken directly to the Supreme Court, circumventing review by the Court of Appeals.

Several good reasons exist for resisting the temptation to by-pass the Courts of Appeal. For one, the judges of the Courts of Appeal probably have as a group the most comprehensive overview of the desegregation process of any group of judges. The Supreme Court has heard few of the cases on their merits; the Circuit Courts, many from numerous places. And the experience of District judges has almost invariably been confined to cases in their own locale. Again, practical considerations of greatest importance argue against burdening the Supreme Court with working out the details of the transition; the Courts of Appeal have been forceful, imaginative, and effective in developing implementing details and resolving conflicts among the District courts. Finally, the principal justification for side-stepping the Courts of Appeal is to save time. Since ways exist for mitigating the delaying effects of an appeal, these should be explored before adding to the burden of an overloaded Supreme Court.

(2) Declaring a priority for desegregation cases. Numerous provisions exist for speeding exceptional cases ahead of ordinary litigation in federal courts. The calendar practices and rules for advancing cases to trial vary from one judicial district to another, as do the calendar practices in the Courts of Appeal. But it is generally safe to say that on motion and for cause shown any kind of judicial proceeding may be advanced in time in both the District courts and the Courts of Appeal. And under Rule 43 (4) of the Supreme Court of the United States it is provided that "Cases may be advanced or postponed by order of the court, upon motion duly made showing good cause therefor."

A general declaration of policy by Congress that school desegregation proceedings are presumptively entitled to priority in handling over the general run of federal litigation would bring these cases within the ambit of the various rules for advancing the time of hearing and determining of particular kinds of issues. Probably the priority status should be available on motion rather than assigned automatically; speed is not in all cases helpful and the parties should have the option of requesting a priority position. It might also be well to provide that an order denying a motion to advance a proceeding growing out of a school desegregation action should be accompanied by findings of fact and conclusions of law which constitute the grounds for denying the motion; this would simplify proceedings for a writ of mandamus from the next higher appellate court.

(3) Denying stays pending appeal from desegregation decrees. Where District courts have entered orders directing desegregation there has been a marked tendency to withhold relief until the final appeal has been put to rest, regardless of the nature of the objections which the losing party may have advanced. This practice has tended to encourage appeals simply because of the added delay occasioned.

A policy of withholding relief pending appeal had considerable justification in the period immediately following the Brown case. The federal courts at every level were feeling their way toward workable solutions for a host of substantial questions which grew both out of the complexities of school administration and out of the widespread adoption of evasive devices. By this time, however, a great many of these earlier questions have been settled. The District courts have not displayed much tendency to decree more desegregation than the higher courts thought was called for under the circumstances.[16] Experience has been that a District court desegregation order has either been affirmed on appeal or altered to require more, rather than less, desegregation. And, finally, a wide variety of court approved desegregation plans is at hand and the choice of one of these will reduce virtually to zero the chances that such a plan will be set aside on appeal for going farther than the Constitution requires.

Already there are precedents for putting desegregation plans into effect in advance of an appeal where there are no substantial questions left for appeal. As long ago as the Autherine Lucy case the Supreme Court ordered reinstatement of a District court injunction against racial discrimination by officials at the University of Alabama after the District court had granted the defendants a stay of injunction pending appeal. The Supreme Court's order reinstating the injunction came down before the appeal had been heard by the Court of Appeals and the cases cited by the Court suggested that the petitioner's rights to immediate enrollment had been made clear by earlier decisions and the taking of an appeal by the defendants in her case could not operate to impose a further delay. Lucy v. Adams, 350 U.S. 1 (1955). Similarly, in the Meredith case Mr. Justice Black declined to permit a stay of the order admitting Meredith when the University of Mississippi asked for delay in order that it could seek review in the Supreme Court. Meredith v. Fair, 83 S.Ct. 10 (1962).[17]

It may be useful for Congress to declare that desegregation orders of District courts shall take immediate effect, regardless of the taking of an appeal, in the absence of a showing either (a) that there is substantial likelihood the appeal will invalidate the relief granted; or (b) that the issues posed for appeal are substantial and of such novelty that the enforcement of the decree should be withheld pending their final resolution on appeal.

Considerable care will be required in framing such a rule. If it were too inflexible, its tendency might be to discourage entry of any but the most token kinds of desegregation decrees, or still more likely, would result in fixing time limits which would enable taking an appeal before the District court decree was due to become effective.

But any rules which encourage putting District court orders immediately into effect will discourage taking appeals, and will surely speed the process substantially. Such a practice of immediate enforcement might also tend to encourage greater compliance since the Supreme Court has suggested in another context that dismissal of an appeal may be an appropriate sanction against an appellant shown to be in contempt of the court for violating orders of the court below. See National Union of Marine Cooks v. Arnold, 348 U.S. 37 (1954).

(4) Sanctions against dilatory tactics. Typically in American litigation a victorious party does not recover all his out-of-pocket expenses for conducting litigation. He will get a judgment for his damages (if any), plus some statutory "costs" which reimburse him for but a small part of his attorney's fees and other expenses of litigation. There are, however, some exceptions to this general rule. Some federal statutes expressly authorize recovery of actual costs of litigation[18] and an equitable doctrine recognized by the federal courts permits recovery of out-of-pocket expenses where another's conduct has put the party to the burden of having to litigate frivolous issues.[19]

I have earlier discussed with a number of Negro attorneys the question of seeking recovery of out-of-pocket costs in school litigation in cases where the defendants have continued to litigate well-settled questions. They have generally indicated that they were concerned about the tactics of this and somewhat fearful that the practice might be used against them by prejudiced judges. Interestingly, however, attorneys for Negro plaintiffs in a Virginia school case recently asked the court for award of full attorneys' fees on the grounds that the defendants were deliberately evading the plaintiffs' constitutional rights and the plaintiffs were without funds to employ counsel.[20]

It is perhaps worthwhile considering whether to recommend adoption of a federal statute authorizing litigation costs in school cases where completely frivolous issues are inserted for purposes of delay or harassment.

C. Mediation and Conciliation Services.

Early in 1959 then Senator Lyndon Johnson proposed the formation of an independent federal agency to be known as the "Community Relations Service." The duty of this agency would be to "provide conciliation assistance in communities where (1) disagreements or difficulties regarding the laws or Constitution of the United States, or (2) disagreements or difficulties which affect or may affect interstate commerce, are disrupting, or are threatening to disrupt, peaceful relations among citizens of such communities."[21]

In a similar vein, the Commission on Civil Rights has twice recommended that it be given authority to establish a conciliation service to assist in the process of school desegregation.[22]

The proposals for federal mediation or conciliation services to assist school desegregation do not appear to have won much support anywhere. Surely the use of such a service should not be required as a preliminary condition for bringing judicial action; to do so would simply introduce another instrument of delay. Perhaps the proposal could serve a worthwhile purpose in communities of the North and West, but in the resistant areas of the South the symbol of federal intervention is regarded with hostility for the most part and the federal courts, accepted for many purposes, seem better equipped to handle the matter with dispatch. The use of technical and consultative services, to be supplied on request from local communities, is discussed in V, infra, and appears to be a more acceptable approach.

III. Withholding Federal Funds

As pointed out at the beginning of this memorandum, federal funds reach directly and indirectly both public and private elementary and secondary schools through a number of programs. There have been numerous proposals for cutting off these funds where they are being employed in schools which persist in racial segregation. The proposals have been advanced both on grounds of general policy and of illegality in using the funds in segregated situations.

The legality of using public funds to promote segregation seems clearly to be in doubt, but the question - so far as elementary and secondary schools are concerned - is whether to cut off the funds or to permit them to be used and employ other machinery to enforce desegregation of the schools which employ them.

Over the dissent of one of its members, the Commission on Civil Rights recommended a partial withholding of federal grants for elementary and secondary schools in states which still operated completely segregated school districts.[23] The Commission formula would have cut the aids in half for states in which no desegregation had occurred. States partially desegregated would receive half their allotment plus a share of the balance represented by the ratio of desegregated districts to all the biracial districts in the state.

The Commission's proposal would presumably qualify a district which had undertaken even the barest token desegregation to count for purposes of receiving full federal funds, and thus would not directly encourage more substantial desegregation. Yet the problem of allocating federal funds according to the extent to which desegregation has taken place would appear to be an almost impossible task in view of the widely variable patterns of school organization and the still unresolved question of what constitutes a "desegregated" school in constitutional terms.

A more general difficulty with proposals for withholding funds from elementary and secondary schools is the direct effect they have on children in the areas affected. Children at these grade levels usually attend schools near their homes; there is not the mobility which exists among students in obtaining higher education. Moreover, the districts which still remain entirely segregated at present tend to operate what are academically and otherwise the poorest schools and these districts need all the help they can get. The larger urban districts of the South, with their generally better schools, have for the most part experienced at least some token desegregation.

All told, withholding of federal funds from elementary and secondary schools to enforce at least token desegregation appears to be a harsh sanction which penalizes Negro and white children alike. Incidentally, the Clark-Celler bill of 1961 did not contain such a proposal.

IV. Funds to Aid Implementation of Desegregation

Other proposals have suggested making federal funds available to assist in meeting some of the special problems which grow out of efforts to implement desegregation. The Commission on Civil Rights has made general recommendations to this effect[24] and the Clark-Celler bill would have authorized annual appropriations of 40 million dollars for this purpose. The bill authorizing general federal aid to education which passed the Senate in 1961 would have permitted states to use approximately 10 percent of their annual allotment for purposes of special education projects, a provision which might have furnished further funds for remedial and other kinds of programs which would have assisted problems related to desegregation.[25]

The 40 million dollar authorization in the Clark-Celler bill for special federal aids would have permitted grants to be allocated for any of the following purposes:

(1) Employing additional personnel such as teachers and community counselors;

(2) in-service training programs for school personnel;

(3) replacing funds withheld from schools or teachers by local or state authorities because of desegregation [the Commission on Civil Rights alternatively recommended the use of loans rather than grants for this purpose; the Commission proposal appears more sound since the availability of grants might simply have encouraged the cutting off of local and state funds when schools desegregated];[26]

(4) construction or alteration of school facilities; and

(5) other costs directly related to the process of eliminating segregation.

The general federal aid bill would have authorized annual appropriations of 850 million dollars for each of three succeeding years in the form of grants to states, restricted to use in public schools, which could be employed both for school construction and teacher salaries, in addition to use in special education projects as earlier mentioned. State aids were to be based on a complex formula which would have produced an average grant of $18.54 per child within the 5 to 17 year age group. No state would receive less than half the national average per child ($9.27) nor more than half again the average ($27.81). Between those extremes the states would receive an amount roughly equal to the inverse ratio of its per capita income per child compared to the national average per child.

The poorer states would, of course, have been the principal beneficiaries of the legislation had it passed.

Without entering the debate over the propriety of turning to federal sources for such aid, the need for further assistance to elementary and secondary education seems manifest. The general provisions of both the Clark-Celler bill and the Federal Aid bill would appear to make good sense as one way of meeting urgent problems, especially as they grow out of the cultural and social deprivations which lie so heavy on many children of minority group and rural extraction. Certainly school desegregation is severely handicapped by the relative position of disadvantage of many Negro children who have simply not had the training required to permit them to compete on equal terms with most white children at the same grade levels. And there is need, too, for specialized training of teachers who work with disadvantaged children; part of this can be furnished by in-service training programs but it is of at least equal importance that schools of education prepare a substantial fraction of would-be teachers to handle the distinctive problems of the disadvantaged child.

In short, real need exists for the financial aids contained in both the Clark-Celler bill and the general federal aid bill.

V. Federal Services to Aid Implementation

Apart from direct federal aids to the states which can assist school desegregation, there appear to be distinctive services which can best be performed at a national level. Four such activities will be suggested.

A. Surveillance of Racial Problems in Education.

Under the authority thus far granted it in the three two-year terms of its existence, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has been able to devote some attention to questions of equal protection as they relate to education. Earlier the Commission's operations in the field of education were confined to detailed legal studies relating to education, or to conferences and public hearings which tended to focus on spectacular, big picture evidences of discrimination rather than detailed consideration of the impact of economic and social discrimination, education theory and practices, and law upon segregation in schools. In its two recent series of field studies of school segregation the Commission has turned more attention to these problems but much more inquiry of this kind is needed.

Another function, almost untouched by the Commission, involves surveillance of federal administrative policies and practices in agencies which have some impact upon education. There is good reason to believe that the administration of the existing federal aid and service programs affecting elementary and public schools has been largely indifferent to, and even fearful of, questions of racial discrimination. At best this kind of indifference merely fosters the continuation of state practices of discrimination and may in subtle ways serve to encourage them.

The problem of internally policing the policies and practices of the federal government - the largest business in the world - is of course much broader than merely the concern over federal involvement with public education. With federal activities touching so many facets of national life, it seems imperative that conscious surveillance of federal practices be undertaken by some agency of the government, seeking to understand what goes on, and trying to fashion ways of correcting discrimination where it is found to exist.

Whether a reconstituted Commission on Civil Rights is an appropriate vehicle for achieving the kind of federal housekeeping that is required presents a difficult question. The more important point, however, is not the question of determining which agency undertakes the job but, rather, that some agency be created to do the housekeeping. Some thought and discussion can usefully be given to the needs and shape of such an agency.

B. Research into Segregation Problems; School Censuses by Ethnic Composition.

Good reasons can be mustered for placing in the hands of the Office of Education responsibility for sponsoring both public and private research into problems of school segregation and reporting on various processes which have been at work aimed at mitigating its effects. Thus far, the work of the Commission on Civil Rights appears to represent about the only federal contribution to this needed area.

If, as it is probably not possible to do, we could write on a clean slate, a good case can be made for abandoning the Office of Education (and much of its personnel perhaps) and starting anew with an agency into which could be consolidated the responsibility for the myriad federal aid and service programs to education. That agency could also be charged with primary responsibility for being consciously on guard against the existence of discriminatory policies and practices in these programs. Whether the same agency could also have a hand in administration of the countless programs which pour research funds into institutions of higher education for such things as health, defense and space programs is probably impossible. Nevertheless, the impact of these programs on institutions of higher learning is tremendous and raises not only questions of racial discrimination but many others as well which require far more thought than they get.

But without attempting something so extravagant as a major overhauling of the agencies which have impact on American education and a re-thinking of their roles, there are some lesser things which can be done that will help. With its annual summary for 1953-1954, the Office of Education abandoned the practice of keeping its school statistics by race. Surely this would be restored and enlarged to embrace periodic and extensive school censuses by race. Information based on head counts furnishes aid which is often invaluable in locating discriminatory practices. Nowhere is this kind of thing comprehensively available. The Commission on Civil Rights has recommended such census taking and it makes good sense.[27] Moreover, the Office of Education should undertake a present hard-headed look at the programs it administers and see to it that some of the funds it administers for studies of school problems go into racial problems affecting education. Whether Congressional action is needed to spur this is perhaps questionable, but it may be the only way for this to be achieved.

C. Clearinghouse Services for Materials Related to Desegregation.

There is urgent need for a clearinghouse activity to distribute materials relating to problems of school segregation. This function should include materials from public sources and, where permission can be obtained, from private sources as well. It should also furnish bibliographic services. The Commission on Civil Rights has recommended that such a function be given to it,[28] but the Office of Education has recently announced the intention of undertaking some function of this kind. It is too early to evaluate the program in the Office of Education and perhaps there would be some utility in having both agencies work at the job. The job, in any case, should be done.

D. Consultative Services.

As previously noted in II, C, supra, the Commission on Civil Rights has twice requested authority to undertake mediation and conciliation services to assist desegregation. There are good reasons to believe that a more useful function would be to supply, on request, the services of consultants who could assist communities in planning to meet racial problems which arise in education. There is real need for these and if furnished, it is probably desirable that they come from the Office of Education rather than the Commission on Civil Rights simply because it appears likely that resistant communities would be more willing to accept them from the Office of Education.

Part II, dealing with problems of higher education, follows.

PART II. HIGHER EDUCATION

Federal Involvement: Generally

Federal involvement in higher education is substantial. An extensive report by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights at the end of 1960 estimated that federal expenditures affecting higher education at that time ran between 1.5 and 2 billion dollars annually.[29]

The patterns of federal involvement in higher education differ in significant respects from that for elementary and secondary schools. There is little centralization of the total effort: a bewildering array of programs is administered by numerous agencies which tend to work independently of one another. Nor are federal contributions confined largely to public institutions; rather, the programs tend to flow either to individuals or to non-profit institutions both private and public. Again, a major fraction of the funds is concentrated either on research or upon the improvement of academic standards in mathematics, languages, and the biological and physical sciences, with emphasis focused on the merits of particular projects.

A few of the programs overtly contribute to racial discrimination, most notably in the explicit legislative approval of separate Negro and white land grant colleges. More indirectly, racial discrimination is fostered by programs which go into institutions which either practice complete segregation or permit only token desegregation. The heavy emphasis upon merit in the selection of particular projects also works to the Negro's disadvantage because of the generally inferior academic quality of all-Negro institutions and the usually poorer training of Negroes at every level of education.

Discussion of the major federal programs affecting higher education follows.

Federal Involvement: College Housing

Title IV of the Housing Act of 1950 provides direct long-term loans at low interest rates to assist private and public institutions of higher learning in the development of housing and related facilities for students and faculty. The program is administered by the Community Facilities Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. With the year ending June 30, 1961, the total of outstanding loans was authorized to reach a ceiling of 1,675 million dollars. Legislation subsequently effective provides for increasing the lending power annually by 300 million dollars through the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1964.

Loans have gone to colleges and universities, both private and public, which practice racial discrimination in their admission or dormitory policies or both. The President's Executive Order for housing, signed November 20, 1962, appears - literally at least - to apply nondiscriminatory requirements as to all future loans made under the program. The fact that the Executive Order does not apply retroactively leaves unresolved the question of discrimination in facilities provided for by previous loans.[30]

Federal Involvement: Improving Educational Quality

(1) National Defense Education Act. The Commissioner on Education administers at least four programs authorized by the National Defense Education Act to provide grants for use by private and public institutions of higher learning:

(a) National defense fellowships, designed to enlarge the supply of college teachers and to promote a broader geographic distribution of graduate training facilities;[31]

(b) Institutes to enhance training of high school guidance counselors;[32]

(c) Advanced training in foreign areas and languages, including training centers, language institutes, and research in foreign language training;[33] and

(d) Research in educational media.[34]

(2) National Science Foundation "Institutes." The National Science Foundation, an independent agency established by Congress in 1950,[35] operates an extensive program which sponsors institutes to improve the competence of teachers in the fields of science, mathematics and engineering. The institutes are operated by colleges and universities under NSF grants which support the operating costs and provide stipends for those who attend the institutes. The institutes provide training for teachers at all levels and thus benefit elementary and secondary schools as well as institutions of higher learning. The types of institutes vary considerably in content and time. Some run for an entire academic year, others over the course of the summer, and still others provide for in-service training of teachers. All told approximately 70 million dollars was available for these during 1961 and more than 33,000 persons were involved as participants. In 1960 the National Science Foundation thus described to the Commission on Civil Rights the criteria it followed in awarding grants for the institute program:

In general, awards are made in support of those programs judged to be most meritorious. However, in cases of substantially equal merit, factors such as geographic and subject matter balance in the program are considered, and institutions which do not practice discrimination are given preference over those in which discrimination is believed to exist. As in the case of Foundation-supported research, unilateral action by the Foundation could result in a substantial geographic gap with respect to strengthening of education in the sciences throughout the nation.[36]

Federal Involvement: Agricultural and Mechanical Arts

The Morrill Act of 1862[37] represented the first major federal commitment to higher education and was apparently done with the design of democratizing the process by installing programs which furnished training in agricultural and mechanical arts that would be useful to a larger segment of the people. Aid was furnished in the form of grants of public lands to the states to create a perpetual fund for support of at least one college in each state which could have as its leading object the promotion of "liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."[38]

Direct annual financial aids to the land grant colleges were inaugurated with passage of the second Morrill Act of 1890 and later amendments over the years have increased the amount of aid and enlarged the scope of the program.[39] The second Morrill Act reflected the spirit of its time and specifically authorized use of the funds for separate Negro and white schools, provided the funds were equitably divided among the races; this separate but equal provision remains on the books today.[40] As the Jim Crow movement swept across the South in the 1890's and the early 1900's, separate land grant colleges were designated for Negroes, although elsewhere in the country only a single college (presumably desegregated) was designated for each state.

The Office of Education today administers the program of direct financial aids to land grant colleges. These grants total approximately 2.5 million dollars annually and in the states which continue to operate two land grant colleges apparently divide the funds equitably between the Negro and white schools.[41]

Two other programs affecting the land grant colleges appear to operate to the considerable disadvantage of Negroes in the Southern states. The older of the programs, first established by the Hatch Act of 1887,[42] provides for grants which help support an agricultural experiment station to be operated in connection with a land grant college in each state. The second program provides support for agricultural extension services to be operated by a land grant college in each state.[43] Federal statutes in both instances permit the legislatures of the states which operate both Negro and white land grant colleges to designate which of the schools shall operate the experimental station and provide the extension services. And the Southern states have uniformly designated the white rather than the Negro land grant college to perform these functions in the state. The fact that segregation substantially persists in many of these two-college states means of course that Negroes pretty well lose out on participation in both the experiment station operation and in the extension activities.

Funds to land grant colleges for operation of agricultural experiment stations and providing agricultural extension activities are administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. For 1960 some 30 million dollars went to the land grant colleges for operation of the experiment stations and more than 52 million for extension activities.

Federal Involvement: Research

The major fraction of federal funds going annually to higher education institutions, both private and public, consists of grants or contracts for research. These come from numerous sources and are administered by different agencies. Because these programs seek primarily to promote particular research ends and call for placement of funds in hands most likely to get the best results, the agencies which administer the programs generally concede that they ignore racial considerations. Funds thus may go to institutions which do engage in various discriminatory practices. Moreover, research programs which require substantial physical plants or large numbers of specially qualified people tend to by-pass the all-Negro colleges and universities because of the limitations which so many of those institutions suffer.

The Armed Forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Science Foundation, the National Institute of Health and the Department of Agriculture - among others - administer large sums of money which go into grants or contracts for both basic and applied research.

Federal Involvement: Direct Aid to Students

Reference has already been made to programs administered by the National Science Foundation and under the National Defense Education Act which provide for grants to teachers and would-be teachers in such fields as mathematics, languages, the natural and physical sciences, and engineering. The National Science Foundation also administers a highly competitive program of merit graduate fellowships aimed at creating a reservoir of trained scientists; the recipient of the award is free to use it at the institution of his choice, whether private or public.[44]

Apart from these specialized stipends and awards to individuals there are at least three other kinds of financial assistance to students:

(1) Student loans under National Defense Education Act. This program makes annual contributions of nearly 60 million dollars for loans to students enrolled in generally accredited colleges and universities, both private and public.[45] The Commissioner of Education allocates the funds among the states according to the ratio between college students enrolled in the state and all such students enrolled in the nation. A given institution, to participate in the program, must contribute an amount available for loans equal to one-ninth of the federal contribution it receives. The allocation made to each state is in turn distributed proportionately among the locally eligible institutions according to their enrollment. Students may obtain low-interest loans of as much as $1,000 annually up to an amount not to exceed $5,000 per individual. Need and ability are the criteria for dispersing the loans and students enrolled in any recognized academic program are eligible (i.e., loans are not restricted to those majoring in science or other specialized areas). In 1961 some 145,000 students obtained loans through 1,400 different institutions of higher education. The program appears to operate without racial discrimination, although institutions which practice discrimination participate in it.

(2) Education of Korean Conflict Veterans. The Korean G.I. education program is dropping off sharply at present. An estimated 100,000 Korean veterans received college benefits in fiscal 1961 and the number was expected to drop to half that level in 1962.[46] The veteran may select any generally accredited school and discrimination appears to enter the picture only insofar as he may be barred from private or public institutions.

(3) War Orphans' Educational Assistance. This 1956 legislation provides financial support for 36 months of education to children of persons who died as a result of service-connected disabilities sustained in World Wars I or II, or in the Korean conflict.[47] Support becomes available when the child reaches 18 or has completed secondary school, whichever comes first. The recipient may use the aid either to complete his secondary education, to go on to college, or for special vocational training. The number of orphans receiving benefits in fiscal 1962 was estimated at about 12,000 and the overall number is expected to rise. As in the case of the earlier G.I. bill, the recipient may use the support at any generally accredited school of his choice. The Veterans Administration administers this program, as it does the Korean veteran educational program.

Proposals for Congress: Generally

Discrimination in institutions of higher learning poses some considerations different from those encountered with respect to elementary and secondary education.

Substantial federal funds go into private, non-profit institutions, the operation of which, without more, appears to be free of controls imposed by either the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendments. Decisions under the Fourteenth Amendment have, however, barred the use of public funds in private schools which practice segregation, notably in the instance of Prince Edward County, Virginia. On the other hand, it does not yet seem clear that judicial relief can be obtained to enforce desegregation of institutions which accept public funds; and it may well be that judicial action is confined to cutting off public funds for institutions which persist in discriminatory practices.

Again, it would appear that it lies within the power of Congress to condition expenditure of public funds upon the requirement that institutions may receive them only if they abandon discrimination. It is also reasonable that an institution which accepted public funds upon such a condition could also be subjected to judicial action to compel desegregation. Whether, without the declaration of such a condition by Congress, coercive judicial action may be employed to enforce desegregation because federal funds have been employed is - as previously indicated - still an open question.

Where public institutions are concerned there is of course an existing obligation imposed either by the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment to abandon discrimination, regardless of whether federal funds are accepted by them. Until now, however, there have been few suggestions that the Attorney General bring actions in the name of the United States to enforce desegregation of public institutions of higher learning. The Clark-Celler School Desegregation Bill, previously discussed, spoke only to actions by the United States against secondary and elementary schools, although a companion proposal introduced with it would have provided general authority to enforce civil rights of individuals in the name of the United States. This presumably would embrace rights to non-discriminatory admission in public institutions of higher learning. Recommendations from the Commission on Civil Rights have not thus far suggested the use of actions by the Attorney General to enforce desegregation at the college or university level, however.

The question of authorizing actions in the name of the United States to enforce desegregation of both private and public institutions of higher learning is one which this conference can appropriately discuss.

I. Explicit Federal Policy Against Racial Discrimination

As in the case of elementary and secondary schools, Congress has not declared a federal policy against discriminatory practices by institutions which receive federal assistance. The power to declare such a policy seems clear in light of prevailing views of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment. Nor should such a declaration be inconsistent with a strongly marked Congressional policy of insisting that federal aids not be conditioned upon federal control over the administration, curriculum or personnel of the institution which receives them. It must be conceded that the two policies in some measure conflict but insistence that racial discrimination not be practiced in making choices respecting administrative, curricular or personnel decisions.

At a minimum Congress should at least remove explicit statutory recognition of the separate but equal doctrine. This, it will be recalled, still exists in the provisions of the second Morrill Act with respect to the establishment of racially separate land grant colleges. [The School Lunch Program, available only at secondary and elementary levels, also contains a provision requiring equitable distribution of funds by states which operate segregated schools, a point which should have been raised in the previous part of this paper.[48]]

Apart from statutes explicitly recognizing the right to pursue racially discriminatory practices, however, there remains good reason for Congress broadly to declare itself against the practice of discrimination by those who administer or receive federal funds.

From Attorney John Silard has come a comprehensive proposal for declaring and implementing a federal policy against discriminatory practices in education.[49] He would declare a policy in favor of using federal funds to promote desegregation in colleges and universities. He questioned the recommendation, twice made by the Commission on Civil Rights,[50] which called for withholding federal aids from public institutions which practiced discrimination, arguing that this would cut off aids to all-Negro schools which operated under state laws requiring segregation. Mr. Silard would permit funds to go into these all-Negro schools where it could be shown that the result was likely to strengthen their programs, thus improving prospects for their ultimate desegregation and also helping Negroes prepare themselves to compete in desegregated situations.

At the same time, Mr. Silard would employ the sanction of withholding funds where they were unlikely to promote desegregation. He would also encourage selective use of funds to promote desegregation in other ways. In programs based upon merit he would choose - where cases of comparable merit were submitted - the institution which had done most to desegregate, hopefully to encourage schools which had undertaken only token desegregation to speed up the process.

The difficulty involved in withholding funds is the same here as in the case of elementary and secondary schools, discussed on pages 43 and 44 of this memorandum. Nevertheless, Mr. Silard's proposal is an interesting one which merits discussion.

II. Funds to Aid Implementation of Desegregation

Inadequate prior training and generally lower academic levels in all-Negro colleges impose severe handicaps upon many Negroes at the college level. Both the National Defense Act and the National Science Foundation are directed at broadening the geographic distribution of and strengthening educational programs at the college and graduate levels. Both programs, however, place stress on specialized areas such as mathematics, languages, science and engineering.

An interesting proposal has come from the House Committee on Education and Labor for expanding the concept employed in both those programs of contracting with colleges and universities to conduct institutes for elementary and secondary teachers to improve their skills in teaching all general academic subjects.[51] Responsibility for the program would be in the hands of the Commissioner of Education, who would also be given enlarged powers under the Cooperative Research in Education Act to encourage development of remedial programs. While this House Committee proposal would only indirectly affect higher education, it would assist in ultimately preparing more culturally disadvantaged children for college and surely work to the Negro's advantage if adopted.

How much more, in the form of federal aids, can be done to implement desegregation at the university level should be discussed. Without question many all-Negro colleges both private and public need much strengthening. So for that matter do many other colleges which do not practice discrimination. How far this strengthening process can be aided by federal funds over a short time base is a real question. Factors of prestige and the greater general resources of the better known universities tend to attract the most competent professors and the question of shoring up the weaker schools is a problem likely to haunt us for some time to come.

FOOTNOTES

1. Total federal funds involved in the School Lunch Program reached something more than 300 million dollars in 1962, while state and local contributions (largely payments by children) amounted to more than three-quarters of a billion dollars. Conceived as a benefit to children, the program is available to private and sectarian schools as well as public ones and all told nearly one-third of the nation's school children participate in the program. See generally 42 USC §§1751-1760.

2. The "Impact-Area" program is authorized in 20 USC §§631-645. Between 1951 and 1961 something more than one billion dollars was expended for more than 50,000 classrooms housing about 1.6 million pupils. Appropriations for fiscal 1961 amounted to about 60 million dollars. Since a portion of these funds was used to furnish assistance to districts for children whose parents worked on federal reservations but resided elsewhere, the Administration recommended in 1961 a reduction of the Impact-Area program to less than half this amount for 1962 on the grounds that Congress should reconsider this phase of the program if it undertook to enact general federal aid to education. The proposals for general federal aid of course failed in the last Congress.

3. The National Defense Education Act appears generally in 20 USC §§401-589. The Act more directly benefits institutions of higher education than it does the elementary and secondary schools. Some 50 million dollars was available in fiscal 1961 for grants to states and loans to nonprofit private schools for the development of programs for teaching science, mathematics, and foreign languages [funds must be used either for acquiring equipment, minor remodeling of laboratories, or for administration of the program]. Another 15 million dollars was available for grants to states for development of guidance counseling and a further 9 million was available for development of area vocational programs.

4. The George-Barden Act and the Smith-Hughes Act, codified at 20 USC §§11-34, provide something more than 40 million dollars for matching grants to states for training students and teachers in agriculture, home economics, trades and industry, distributive occupations, practical nursing, and the fishing trades. The specific provisions of the two acts have a strong rural flavor and the earmarked authorizations for the various vocations suggest that the farmers and home economists walked off with the largest shares of the funds.

5. See 20 USC §§351-358. The amount appropriated for fiscal 1961 was 7.5 million dollars. According to the 1961 Education Report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, p. 147, the formula for distribution of grants to the states weighed heavily in favor of the Southern states because of their rural character and they received 43 percent of the granted funds. The Commission Report also found substantial evidence that these states, or some of them, had systematically discriminated against Negroes in the use they made of the funds.

6. Grants for teaching the mentally retarded are authorized in 20 USC §§611-617 and appropriations for 1961 came to one million dollars, more than half of which was available for grants to states for training personnel to supervise educational programs for the mentally retarded. Grants for teaching the deaf go directly to both public and private nonprofit institutions, See 20 USC §§671-676. An appropriation of 1.5 million was authorized for the program in fiscal 1961, the first year of the program.

7. For 1961 appropriations of 56.2 million dollars were available for matching grants to states to provide both training and medical restoration of the handicapped; and an additional 15.4 million for research and teacher training involving the handicapped. See 29 USC §§31-42.

8. The Cooperative Research in Education Act, 20 USC §§331-332, with appropriations for fiscal 1961 of 3.4 million dollars, would appear to afford an excellent vehicle for conducting studies of school segregation and for evolving programs to aid the desegregation process. It has not at this time been put to work for such an end in any material sense.

12. The Clark-Celler Bill was introduced in the Senate as S. 1817 and a summary of the bill's contents appears in the Congressional Record, 87 Cong., 1st Sess., p. 7457. This summary is reproduced as Appendix C of this memorandum.

18. A partial list of federal statutes making special provision for recovery of litigation costs in particular situations is found in 6 MOORE, FEDERAL PRACTICE, 2d ed. pp. 1318-1322. In state courts, wives - even when unsuccessful - may usually recover reasonable attorney fees in actions for separation or divorce; and states in numerous other instances make special provision for reimbursement of litigation costs.

A. 4, 1951) [a case involving racial discrimination in which Negro plaintiffs were allowed to recover the full amount of their attorneys' fees because the defendants had forced them back into court by asserting frivolous defenses.

20. The request for attorneys' fees in the Virginia case is reported in Southern School News, Dec. 1962, p. 9. The case in question is Bell v. Powhatan County School Board, not reported as this is written.

21. The Johnson conciliation proposal was introduced into the Senate as S. 499, 86 Cong., 1st Sess. (1959).

22. The recommendation first appeared as Recommendation 1 (b) in the REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS, 1959, p. 326. The proposal was renewed as Recommendation 6 (b) in the Commission's 1961 biennial report, reproduced in Appendix A of this memorandum.

23. See the Commission's "Recommendation 2" which is set forth in Appendix B of this memorandum. 25. The Federal Aid to Education bill, entitled "School Assistance Act of 1961," passed the Senate May 25, 1961, as S. 1021, 87 Cong., 1st Sess. See also Sen. Report 255, Calendar No. 228, 87 Cong., 1st Sess. The legislation was thereafter killed in the House. The provision for special education projects appeared in Section 109 of the bill as it passed the Senate.

29. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS IN PUBLIC HIGHER EDUCATION, 1960, p. 266. Washington: U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The report, it will be noted, is confined to the impact of federal programs on public higher education. The limitation was the product of a deep-seated division among the then members of the Commission over the scope of the authority granted the Commission by Congress. All the Commissioners apparently conceded Congress might have authorized inquiry into discrimination attending the use of federal funds by private institutions, but three of the six Commissioners felt that Congress had not given them authority to do so.

30. See President's Executive Order 11063, entitled "Equal Opportunity in Housing." The College Housing Program is authorized under the provisions of 12 USC §1749 and the same section ear-marks a small portion of the loan funds for use by hospitals in providing similar housing facilities.

31. Approximately 20 million dollars was authorized to provide 1,500 graduate fellowships with the aim of strengthening some 570 graduate programs. The scholarships are awarded to meritorious individuals but the grants for each scholarship are made to the institution in which the recipient is enrolled.

32. For fiscal 1961 some 6.2 million dollars was authorized for contracts with colleges and universities under which training institutes for guidance counselors were operated. An estimated 3,356 persons attended such institutes during that year. This fund is separate from the grants made directly to states for creation of improved guidance counseling programs in secondary schools (see footnote 3, supra).

33. More than 12 million dollars was authorized for fiscal 1961, divided among 843 individuals who received stipends for working on language and foreign area studies, 4,333 participants in language institutes, and for some 95 or more contracts for research in foreign language instruction.

34. A total of 120 grants or contracts was made during 1961, amounting to approximately 3.8 million dollars, to provide for research in developing new media for education.

35. The powers and duties of the National Science Foundation are set forth in 42 USC §§1861-1881.

39. Act of August 30, 1890, 26 Stat. 417, as amended 7 USC §§321-329.

40. 7 USC §323 (1958). Earlier than the Morrill Act there had been legislation which established the principle of using proceeds from the sale of public lands to create school funds. The so-called Survey Ordinance of 1785 contemplated this for states that in time were carved out of the Northwest Territory and various acts of Congress admitting new states had specified a reservation of public lands for creating a fund to establish a state university.

41. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS IN PUBLIC HIGHER EDUCATION, 1960, p. 213. Washington: Commission on Civil Rights. The Commission reported that, as of 1960, most of the Southern states divided the funds between Negro and white colleges according to the ratio of the two groups in the total population. The two exceptions, Florida and South Carolina, were even more generous to the Negro college in that they divided the funds equally between the two groups despite a white preponderance in the population of both states.

42. The Hatch Act, 24 Stat. 440, now appears as amended and expanded by later legislation in 7 USC §§361-385.

43. Present legislative authority for aid to extension services appears in 7 USC §§341-349.

44. For 1960 the National Science Foundation awarded some 13 million dollars for some 3,600 merit fellowships.

45. See 20 USC §§421-429 for authorization of student loan program.

47. War Orphans' Educational Assistance Act of 1956, 72 Stat. 1193, 38 USC §§1701-1768 (1958).

48. 42 USC §1760(c), part of the School Lunch Act, provides in part: "If a State maintains separate schools for minority and for majority races, no funds made available pursuant to this chapter shall be paid or dispersed to it unless a just and equitable distribution is made within the State, for the benefit of such minority races, of funds paid to it under this chapter." Two bills introduced in the last Congress, H.R. 11665 and H.R. 11707, 87 Cong., 2d Sess., would respectively provide for elimination of the separate but equal provisions presently found in the School Lunch Program and in the Morrill Act.

Southern Education Reporting Service

APPENDIX A

Findings and Recommendations for Higher Education, Commission on Civil Rights, 1960

Introductory Note: The material set forth below is copied in its entirety from Part IX of Equal Protection of the Laws in Public Higher Education, United States Commission on Civil Rights, 1960.

General Findings

1. The Commission's statutory directives to "study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution" and to "appraise the laws and policies of the Federal Government with respect to equal protection of the laws under the Constitution" have limited the Commission's study in the field of higher education to colleges and universities which are controlled by States or political subdivisions thereof. Discrimination by such colleges on grounds of race, religion, or national origin is a denial of equal protection of the laws.

2. Such unconstitutional discrimination by public colleges and universities, while it has diminished substantially in the past generation, remains a serious national problem. Seventy percent of the public institutions of higher education in the United States, by means of inquiries on their admission forms or other requirements connected therewith, provide themselves with information susceptible to use for discrimination in admission on the grounds of race, religion, or national origin. Some institutions, both North and South, in fact, use the information so acquired to effect such discrimination.

In addition, in the academic year 1959-60, 6 years after the United States Supreme Court held that racial segregation in public education is of itself a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution, at least 86 of the 211 public higher educational institutions formerly for white students only in the 17 Southern States continued to exclude Negro applicants on the ground of race in violation of the law of the land.

3. Unlawful discrimination today in the admission policies and practices of public colleges and universities is principally directed against the American Negro, who comprises more than 10 percent of the total population of the Nation; the proportion is much higher in the region of the country where such discrimination is most prevalent.

4. The responsibility for conforming their admission policies and practices to constitutional requirements rests initially with the publicly controlled institutions of higher education themselves, and with the States which support them. Insofar as these continue to fail to recognize their constitutional duties, however, the Federal Government has an obligation to take appropriate measures to prevent discrimination. The types of action which the Federal Government can and should take in this regard include measures to assure that no action or policy of the Federal Government increases the effect of the unconstitutional acts of others; to help those deprived realize their constitutional rights promptly, without undue individual burden or delay; and to assist in overcoming the cumulative effects of past deprivations.

Federal Funds in Support of Higher Education

Findings

1. The Federal Government is deeply involved financially in the higher education of its citizens. Its expenditure for general support of colleges and universities; for aid to students, teachers, and institutions for specific educational programs; and for research in or by colleges and universities is estimated to be $1.5 to $2 billion a year.

2. Insofar as applicants to publicly controlled colleges and universities are denied admission on such arbitrary grounds as their race, religion, or national origin, they not only are denied equal protection of the laws under the Constitution, but also are denied the opportunity to participate, directly or indirectly, in the benefits resulting from the use by such institutions of Federal funds.

3. Insofar as the Federal Government, whether by allotment, grant, or contract, disburses funds to publicly controlled colleges and universities practicing racial exclusion, whether of Negro students or white, it is supporting operations in violation of the Constitution.

4. The Supreme Court has held that the Federal Government is prohibited by the Constitution from maintaining racially segregated educational institutions. It is not sound policy for the Federal Government to subsidize the unconstitutional operations of others; to do indirectly what it is not permitted to do directly.

5. It is not a sound policy for the Federal Government to disburse public funds in such a manner that it increases the adverse effects on some citizens of denials of equal protection of the laws by States and political subdivisions thereof.

6. In its study of Federal programs of aid to higher education, the Commission has found that programs of direct assistance to individual students on the basis of merit (NSF fellowships), need (National Defense Education Act students' loans), and Federal obligation (VA and War Orphans assistance) are not administered so as to be discriminatory on grounds of race, religion, or national origin.

7. Other Federal programs in support of higher education, however, by reason of the failure of the Federal Government to give any consideration to the presence or absence of discriminatory practices by the recipient institution, have the effect of supporting racial segregation, and continue the educational deprivation of those excluded from such institutions. In five of the programs studied by the Commission, college housing, national defense fellowships, national defense education act, educational media, NSF institutes, and agricultural research and extension, 62 percent or more of the funds expended in seven selected Southern States went to institutions which exclude applicants solely on the basis of race. In five other such programs, National Defense Education Act counseling and guidance institutes, National Defense Education Act language institutes, NIH grants under contract, NSF grants in support of basic research, AEC grants for research fellowships and other training, 40 to 50 percent of the funds expended in the seven States were received by such institutions.

8. The disbursement of Federal funds under these and other programs to segregated white institutions in the four States maintaining complete segregation at the higher education level increases the disparity between the public financial support of colleges for white students and colleges for Negroes. In fiscal year 1958, for instance, the amount of Federal funds expended in support of public white institutions, per student enrolled, exceeded the amount expended for public Negro institutions by $130.99 in Alabama, $171.33 in Georgia, $179.50 in Mississippi, and $141.89 in South Carolina. The effect of this discrepancy is to contribute to the continuation of inferior segregated institutions and to magnify the disparity between the quality of the public higher education offered to white students and that offered to Negro students in such States. The same situation exists in other States, but, owing to desegregation in some degree of one or more public colleges or universities, the effect on a Statewide basis is not so great.

Recommendation No. 1

1. Therefore, the Commission recommends that the Federal Government, either by executive or, if necessary, by congressional action, take such measures as may be required to assure that funds under the various programs of Federal assistance to higher education are disbursed only to such publicly controlled institutions of higher education as do not discriminate on grounds of race, color, religion, or national origin.

The Commission agrees that in any such Federal action taken it should be stipulated that no Federal agency or official shall be given power to direct, supervise or control the administration, curricula or personnel of an institution operated and maintained by a State or a political subdivision thereof.

CONCURRING STATEMENTS

Vice Chairman Storey: This recommendation seems to assume that executive or administrative action to withhold such funds might be proper under some existing laws because broad powers are conferred upon some agencies or officials without legislative prohibition of such administrative action. Strong arguments can be made for the opposite point of view, namely, that had Congress intended to curtail the distribution of federal funds to institutions which discriminate in admission policies, it would have delegated such powers expressly and would have set forth specifically the conditions under which such funds should be withheld. It is reasonable to conclude that not having delegated such power Congress did not intend it to be assumed or exercised.

Commissioner Rankin: I sincerely support the orderly and gradual achievement of equal protection of the laws for all citizens, and I recognize that the Federal Government has a responsibility to assure that the funds it disburses for any general welfare purpose are available on equal terms to all without regard to race, religion or national origin. However, I must express my concern that this recommendation, if put into effect in an immediate and drastic fashion, would be interpreted by many citizens as a punitive measure rather than one in support of proper constitutional objectives. I am interested in promoting sound public education; I seek compliance with the Constitution, not the imposition of penalties. Additionally, if the conditioning of Federal funds were to result in widespread refusal to accept Federal assistance, those who would suffer would not be those who made the decision but the students who directly or indirectly benefit from Federal grants-in-aid to education.

I, therefore, concur in this recommendation in principle but could not support certain procedures that would, in my mind, be unwise means of implementation.

DISSENTING STATEMENTS

Commissioner Doyle E. Carlton: I join the Commission in commending the Staff on the detailed and well-documented study of the legal developments in connection with the matter of denial of rights in public higher education. The report reflects great progress made in this area over the last twenty years. However, much remains to be done. Our real question is how best to obtain our objective.

As to recommendation 1, it is my opinion that this objective will not be attained by any action which has the effect of withholding public funds from institutions that do not conform to a Federal pattern. The withholding of such funds is to me unsound from a political, governmental and moral standpoint. I cannot approve the withholding of money, coming as it does to the Federal Government from the taxpayers of the several States, as a club to forge any fixed pattern set forth by a Federal agency. Such action would impede rather than advance public higher education. It would also create resentment and ill will to the injury of both races. Progress can be made on the basis of good will without such arbitrary action.

Enforcement of Constitutional Rights

Findings

1. The long process of eliminating segregation in the public colleges and universities of the 17 Southern States began at the graduate and professional school level in 1936. In the following 18 years the State universities in three States opened their graduate divisions voluntarily to all qualified students without regard to race. The graduate divisions, or specific schools therein, were similarly opened in certain public institutions in eight additional States by court action. Likewise, the undergraduate division of some 4-year colleges and junior colleges, formerly for white students only, in four States were voluntarily opened on a nondiscriminatory basis before the Supreme Court's decision in the School Segregation Cases in 1954. Undergraduate students were also admitted by Federal court order to certain public colleges in four States prior to 1954.

2. In 1954 and 1955, following the Supreme Court's decision in the School Segregation Cases, six States and the District of Columbia officially and voluntarily abolished all racial designations for their State colleges and universities and declared them open to all qualified students. Voluntary desegregation since 1955 has been limited to such action by individual colleges and universities after a court order had required desegregation of another public institution in the same State. However, in the academic year 1959-60 racial segregation was still maintained in at least 86 public colleges and universities in Southern States. Further extension of voluntary compliance with constitutional requirements does not now seem probable; future gains will depend increasingly upon individual court suits to compel the dropping of racial barriers.

3. At present, action to secure admission to a public college or university by court action is a long, arduous, and costly affair. The average length of such suits in Federal district courts (excluding the few cases in which the defendant did not file an appeal from an order admitting the plaintiff) in all cases finally determined since May 1954 is slightly more than 2-1/2 years.

4. An individual should not be subjected to such delay in securing a judicial determination of his constitutional rights. In the case of a college applicant, the delay causes irreparable harm to the individual and also to the Nation that needs to realize the highest potential of its manpower.

5. The application of a State law, custom, or practice in such a way as to deny constitutional rights involves a question of State-Federal relationship of delicacy and importance comparable to that involved in a challenge to the constitutionality of a State statute. In the latter case the Congress, in order to assure an adequate hearing and full deliberation of the issue, has provided for an expeditious hearing by a court composed of three judges, and a direct appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Such a procedure, long established and familiar to judges and lawyers alike, could be extended to include cases presenting a factual issue of denial of equal protection of the laws and would promote the speedy and correct determination of such cases.

Recommendation No. 2

Therefore, the Commission recommends that Congress consider the advisability of authorizing the use of three-judge courts under section 2284 of the United States Judicial Code (U.S.C., title 28) to cases presenting a substantial factual issue as to whether persons are being denied equal protection of the laws with respect to public education. [1]

DISSENTING STATEMENTS

Vice Chairman Storey: This recommendation affects jurisdiction of the Federal courts which should not be disturbed. Delays in litigation are often due to causes other than jurisdiction. In vesting a fact-finding function in the three-judge Federal court for all public education cases it is, in effect, recommending the transferal of the duties of the United States District Courts to other Federal courts.

Commissioner Carlton: I see no reason for this recommendation. Our courts are ample and are proving repeatedly that the problem is being handled efficiently.

Affirmative Federal Action to Alleviate Academic Handicaps

Findings

1. The overall effect of segregation in public education, at both the college and the public school levels, has been to give a substantial portion of the population the opportunity to obtain only an inferior education. Moreover, the effects of such deprivations are self-perpetuating; that is, students from inferior schools can attend only inferior colleges, where they are often trained as inferior teachers, and from which they return to teach in the same inferior schools.

2. It is the national interest in this time of world crisis to educate and train all citizens to the utmost of their abilities and talents.

3. The Federal Government sponsors various programs having as their general objective improvement of the quality of education and other programs which are designed to identify and assist talented students. These have been of little value to Negroes in some Southern States because of the discriminatory admission policies of the institutions in which they were sponsored. Recommendation 1 above, if implemented effectively, should eliminate discrimination in such programs in the future, but it would not wipe out the cumulative effects of years of educational deprivation. Affirmative attack against inferior educational opportunities is needed to break the vicious circle of self-perpetuating inferiority.

4. Programs could be designed that aim at raising the quality of education throughout the Nation by giving assistance to persons, both teachers and students, who have potential talent but are academically handicapped as a result of the inferior educational opportunities that have been available to them. Such programs might include, among others: (1) Institutes to improve the competence of public school teachers in English, history, and social sciences, similar to those now sponsored in science, mathematics, and foreign languages; (2) summer institutes conducted by public colleges for incoming students of potential ability whose academic preparation is inadequate for college-level work; (3) special academic-year institutes conducted by colleges and universities or by outstanding secondary schools for talented but academically deficient high school graduates to prepare them for college.

Recommendation No. 3

Therefore, the Commission recommends that the Federal Government sponsor in the several States, upon request from the several States, educational programs designed to assist public school teachers and students of native talent and ability who are handicapped professionally or scholastically as a result of inferior educational opportunity and training.[2]

ADDITIONAL PROPOSALS OF CHAIRMAN HANNAH AND COMMISSIONERS HESBURGH AND JOHNSON

I.

Federal Funds to Private Colleges

The Commission has recommended that the Federal Government, either by executive or, if necessary, by congressional action, take such measures as may be required to assure that funds under the various programs of Federal assistance to higher education are disbursed only to such publicly controlled institutions of higher education as do not discriminate on grounds of race, color, religion, or national origin. This recommendation has our complete endorsement, but we believe it does not go far enough.

Private colleges and universities that may discriminate in their admission policies on the grounds of race, religion, or national origin also receive Federal aid in building dormitories and facilities for research, and for the conduct of special educational programs, institutes, and research.

Our colleagues contend that recommendations concerning private institutions that are not subject to the requirements of the 14th amendment are beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission, although they agree that Congress may constitutionally condition any grant of public funds to either a public or private university upon a stipulation that the recipient does not discriminate among applicants for admission on the ground of color, race, religion, or national origin.

The effects of exclusion on the grounds of race, religion, or national origin by a private college that receives Federal funds, although such exclusion is not unconstitutional, are exactly the same as exclusion on such grounds by a public institution. The individual arbitrarily excluded is deprived of the benefits flowing from public funds that those not so excluded receive. It should not be possible for public funds, collected from all of the taxpayers of the Nation to promote the general welfare of all citizens, to be so disbursed that any group or groups of the population may be precluded arbitrarily from any possibility of benefiting therefrom. The imposition of such a condition upon the recipient of public funds in no way constitutes Federal supervision or control of the recipient institution; those that cannot or will not conform to the national policy of nondiscrimination merely forego the benefit of Federal funds.

The problem of the proper use of public funds by private colleges and universities is too closely tied to such use by public institutions to direct a recommendation only to the latter on the sole ground that there is not yet a court decision holding that the mere receipt of substantial public funds by a private institution brings it within the purview of the 14th amendment.

Therefore, we propose that the Federal Government, either by executive or, if necessary, by congressional action, take such measures as may be required to assure that funds under the various programs of Federal assistance to higher education are not disbursed to any public or private institution of higher education which discriminates on grounds of race, religion, or national origin.

Enforcement of Constitutional Rights

II.

Additional Powers for the Attorney General

The individual enjoyment of constitutional rights is a matter of public interest: The burden of vindicating such rights should not rest solely on the individual deprived nor on private organizations. The Federal Government should assume an active role in the prosecution of legal action to achieve such rights as well as enact legislation to expedite the judicial process. The President has in the past unsuccessfully requested the Congress to give the Attorney General general authority to institute civil action to enforce constitutional rights of individual persons. Such requested authority would not have been limited to the power to protect the rights of persons not to be denied the equal protection of the laws with respect to public education. Since the Commission's present study has been concerned only with this constitutional right, our proposal is limited thereto.

Therefore, we propose that the Congress consider the advisability of granting the Attorney General statutory authority to institute, or intervene in civil actions to enforce the constitutional rights of individual persons not to be denied equal protection of the laws with respect to public higher education.

SEPARATE STATEMENTS OF VICE CHAIRMAN STOREY AND COMMISSIONERS CARLTON AND RANKIN WITH REGARD TO GRANTING ADDITIONAL POWERS TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Vice Chairman Storey: This proposal differs little from some previously considered and rejected by the Congress. Additional specific powers were given the Attorney General by the Civil Rights Act of 1960. No additional powers should be considered until these are fully tested.

Commissioner Carlton: I also am opposed to arming the Attorney General with any additional authority to institute civil suits. We have ample laws to meet this situation, as is being proven day after day.

Commissioner Rankin: I know that existing procedures place a great burden both financially and personally upon the individuals seeking to realize their constitutional rights. But I cannot support the proposal because it would vest unlimited power in the Attorney General to bring legal action in the name of the United States to enforce the rights of individuals whenever and wherever he might decide such action was appropriate. Without some express limitation this would grant excessive power to a single member of one branch of the Federal Government.

1. The Commissioners understand that under usual circumstances the judges appointed to a three-judge court are selected from among the federal district courts and court of appeal of the circuit in which the case arises. They believe this to be sound practice and in cases involving factual questions of denial of equal protection of the laws would be of great importance. The delicate questions of Federal-State relationships in this type of case can best be resolved by those having an understanding of local attitudes and problems as well as a knowledge of governing constitutional principles.

2. The Commission believes that local authorities can best plan and develop educational programs appropriate to their needs without Federal interference, and agrees that this recommendation can and should be implemented without direction, supervision, or control by any Federal agency or official of the personnel, curricula or administration of any education institution not operated and maintained by the Federal Government.

APPENDIX B

Recommendations for Higher Education,
Commission on Civil Rights, 1961

Introductory Note: The material set forth below is copied in its entirety from Chapter 12 of Education, United States Commission on Civil Rights Report, Book 2, 1961.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Federal action to speed desegregation

Recommendation 1. --That the Congress enact legislation making it the duty of every local school board which maintains any public school from which pupils are excluded on the basis of race, to file a plan for desegregation with a designated Federal agency within six months after the adoption of such legislation, said plan to call for at least a first step toward full compliance with the Supreme Court's decision in the School Segregation Cases at the beginning of the following school year, and complete desegregation as soon as practicable thereafter. Further, that Congress direct the Attorney General to take appropriate action to enforce this obligation.

Recommendation 2. --That the Congress provide that any and all Federal grants-in-aid to the various States for educational programs in elementary and secondary public schools be allocated so that States wherein all school districts are operated on a nondiscriminatory basis shall receive the full amount computed under the applicable statutory formula; that States wherein no school districts are so operated shall receive only 50 percent of such funds; that States wherein school districts have initiated desegregation programs shall receive 50 percent of such sum plus the same proportion of the remaining 50 percent as the number of pupils enrolled in all school districts in the State which have initiated a program of desegregation bears to the total number of pupils enrolled in all school districts in the particular State which have a biracial school population.

Dissent to Recommendation 2 by Commissioner Rankin

Although this recommendation does not provide for the withholding of all funds from public schools, its purpose is similar to that of the "Powell Amendment" and its net effect might be punitive. I do not believe that school children should be made to suffer for the errors of their elders.

Recommendations requiring the withholding of funds from States which are not completely desegregated would warrant serious consideration only if there were no other way to achieve conformity with the Constitution without penalizing students. Many of the other recommendations in this report are designed to bring about desegregation without harming education.

Thus I dissent from Recommendation 2 because I believe it to be unnecessary and potentially punitive.

Recommendation 3. --That Congress consider the advisability of adopting measures to expedite the hearing and final determination of actions brought in Federal courts to secure admission to publicly-controlled educational institutions without regard to race, color, religion or national origin. [1]

Federal assistance to desegregating school districts

Recommendation 4. --That the Congress enact legislation authorizing a Federal agency, upon request, to provide technical or financial assistance to local school systems at any time within 5 years after the initiation of a desegregation program, or to local citizens' groups attempting to help solve problems arising from such desegregation, in any of the following ways: (1) financial aid to school districts on a 50-50 matching basis for the employment of social workers, or specialists in desegregation problems, or for inservice training programs for teachers or guidance counselors; (2) technical assistance to school districts or citizens' groups to train school personnel or community leaders in techniques useful in solving desegregation problems, including the establishment of home study programs for the academically and culturally handicapped; provided, however, that the desegregation program and its execution shall have been found by the agency administering the program to meet constitutional requirements.

Recommendation 5. --That the Congress enact legislation authorizing loans to local school districts from which State or local financial aid has been withdrawn as a result of desegregation, or whose ability to borrow funds from commercial sources has been cut off by State or local action, said loans to be repayable by the borrower upon the receipt of the State or local aid withheld or the restoration of commercial credit.

Recommendation 6. --(a) That the President direct, or the Congress enact legislation authorizing, the Commission on Civil Rights, if extended, to serve as a clearinghouse to collect and disseminate information concerning programs and procedures used by school districts to achieve an organization and operation of their schools in accordance with constitutional principles, including data as to the known effects of such programs on the quality of education and the cost thereof; (b) That the Commission further be authorized to establish an advisory and conciliation service to assist local school officials in developing plans designed to meet constitutional requirements and local conditions, and to attempt to mediate and conciliate disputes between school officials and school patrons, upon the request of either, as to desegregation of schools--proposed plans for desegregation, or the implementation of plans already in operation. The Commission agrees that the use of such an advisory and conciliation service should not be a prerequisite to the bringing of legal action in a Federal court nor a ground for delay in the prosecution of a pending action; that its purpose is to obviate the necessity of legal action where possible and, in the case of pending suits, to speed, not delay, a final determination.[2]

Federal protection to school officials and citizens

Recommendation 7. --That the President or the Congress direct the Attorney General to take such action as may be appropriate, in any case where a school system is operating under a plan to bring it into conformance with the requirements of the 14th amendment, to protect the school board members carrying out such plan, supervisory officials and teachers in school systems executing the orders of such school boards, school children of both races attempting to attend schools affected by the plan and their parents, and citizens helping such children or their parents, from bodily harm, harassment, intimidation, and/or reprisal by officials or private persons.

Education of dependents of military personnel

Recommendation 8. --That the President direct the Department of Defense to make a complete survey of the segregated-desegregated status of public schools attended by dependents of military personnel living on-base or in the absence of sufficient housing on-base, living in the vicinity of a base, and report its findings to him. Further, that insofar as such dependents are found to be attending compulsorily racially segregated schools, the President instruct the Commissioner of Education to make suitable arrangements for their education in public schools or on-base schools open to all such dependents without discrimination because of color or race.

Recommendation 9. --That the President direct the Office of Education of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, to make a survey of the practices of all public libraries receiving Federal financial aid under the Library Services Act of 1956 to determine whether or not they are offering free service to all residents of the community as required by the terms of that law and by the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment of the Constitution. Further, that the Commissioner, as provided in the law granting such Federal aid, withhold Federal funds from States which include under the State plan libraries not serving all residents of the community or not serving all of them in a manner consonant with constitutional principles.

Alleviation of academic handicaps

Recommendation 10. --That the Federal Government sponsor in the several States, upon their application therefor, educational programs designed to identify and assist teachers and students of native talent and ability who are handicapped professionally or scholastically as a result of inferior training or educational opportunity.[3]

Higher education

Recommendation 11. --That the Federal Government, either by executive or by congressional action, take such measures as may be required to assure that funds under the various programs of Federal assistance to higher education are disbursed only to such publicly-controlled institutions of higher education as do not discriminate on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin.

The Commission agrees that in any such Federal action taken it should be stipulated that no Federal agency or official shall be given power to direct, supervise or control the administration, curricula or personnel of an institution operated and maintained by a State or a political subdivision thereof;[4]

School census by ethnic classification

Recommendation 12. --That the President or the Congress direct a Federal agency or agencies to conduct an annual school survey to determine the number and ethnic classification of all students enrolled in all public educational institutions in the United States and compile such data by States, by school districts, by individual schools, and by individual institutions of higher education within each State.[5]

---

1. Recommendation 3 reaffirms in principle one made by the Commission in its Higher Education Report. At that time the Commission suggested the use of three-judge courts to expedite final determinations in desegregation cases at the college level. Since there are additional ways that desegregation cases may be expedited, the Commission has now framed its recommendation in general terms and expanded it to include desegregation cases at the elementary and secondary school levels as well.

2. Recommendation 6 is similar to a recommendation made by the Commission in its 1959 Report.

3. Recommendation 10 reaffirms a recommendation made by the Commission in its Higher Education Report.

4. Recommendation 11 reaffirms without change one made in the Higher Education Report. Four Commissioners believe, however, that as a matter of sound public policy the same principle should be extended to privately controlled institutions.

5. Recommendation 12 reaffirms a similar recommendation made by the Commission in its 1959 Report. The Commission reemphasizes its position that this recommendation does not contemplate the establishment of school records by race or ethnic classification. The trend toward the elimination of such identification on student records should, in fact, be accelerated.

APPENDIX C

Section-by-Section Analysis of Clark-Celler Bill, Entitled "Public School Desegregation Act"

Title I - Definitions

Section 101(a): "Desegregation" is achieved only when race or color is completely eliminated as a factor in assigning students to public schools.

(b) "Public school" is defined to include any elementary or secondary school operated principally or substantially from or through the use of governmental funds, or funds derived from a governmental source.

(c) "School board" includes any agency or person that controls or directs the assignment of pupils to public schools.

(d) "First-step compliance" means the affording of desegregated education to a substnatial number of students at each public school within the jurisdiction of the school board, not later than the commencement of the 1963-64 school year.

Title II - Duty to Adopt and Implement Desegregation Plans

Section 201 requires every school board which, on the date of enactment of this act, has failed to achieve desegregation in all public schools within its jurisdiction to adopt a desegregation plan and file it within 180 days after enactment of this act with the Secretary of Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Section 202: Such a desegregation plan must provide for two things:

1. A program of ultimate desegregation to be attained with all deliberate speed, pursuant to a schedule setting forth the time when and the manner in which desegregation is to be achieved for each class, grade, school and district within the jurisdiction of the school board, and

2. A program for "first-step compliance" not later than the commencement of the 1963-64 school year.

Section 203 requires every school board adopting a desegregation plan pursuant to this act to implement it in good faith and with all deliberate speed until desegregation is fully achieved in its district.

Section 204 provides that the duties required of a school board under this act shall devolve immediately upon any successor should the school board's authority be relinquished. This is aimed at obviating slowdowns resulting from the resignation of school boards or from the elimination of such boards. It means that any public body, local or State, that assumes control over local schools, can be made subject to the provisions of this bill.

Section 205 provides for the joint exercise of obligations under the bill by school boards, the jurisdiction of which might overlap. Prevents a situation arising where nothing would be done under this bill because neither of two school boards would desire to exercise its jurisdiction.

Section 206 provides that this bill shall not apply to any public school which on the date of enactment of this bill, is subject to a court order providing for or approving a desegregation plan for said school.

Title III - Technical Assistance by Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to Facilitate Desegregation

Section 301 authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, upon application therefor, to render technical assistance to school boards in preparing, adopting, or implementing desegregation plans required by this bill. Such assistance might include dissemination of information, appointment of advisory councils, the holding of conferences, etc.

Title IV - Financial Assistance by Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to Facilitate Desegregation

Section 401 requires the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to review every desegregation plan filed under this bill to ascertain that it complies with the provisions of the bill. Permits the Secretary, in the case of such plans that qualify and upon application therefor, to make grants to school boards, States, etc., to assist in meeting costs which the Secretary determines to be reasonably necessary for the implementation of a desegregation plan. Grants can be made to meet the costs of (1) employing additional personnel such as teachers and community counselors, (2) in-service training programs for school personnel, (3) replacing funds withheld from schools or teachers by local or State authorities because of desegregation, (4) construction or alteration of school facilities, and (5) other costs directly related to the process of eliminating segregation.

Section 402 authorizes the Secretary to provide grants to school boards, States, etc., to assist in meeting costs he determines to be reasonably necessary for the implementation of court-approved desegregation plans not subject to the requirements of this bill.

Section 403 requires the Secretary to prescribe regulations governing the granting of funds under this title and requires each application for such a grant to conform to the requirements of the Secretary. Provides that the Secretary might require that a grant be conditioned upon the local authority contributing similarly of its own funds.

Sets forth criteria to guide the Secretary in making the grants funds available, financial condition of applicant, etc.

Section 404 provides that grants can be paid by way of reimbursement for expenses already undertaken by a school district, or in advance for expenses to be undertaken.

Section 405 authorizes the appropriation of $40 million each fiscal year to carry out the grant provisions.

Title V - Enforcement of Duty to Adopt and Implement Desegregation Plans

Section 501 provides that when a school board or its successor violates any of the obligations required by this bill (filing desegregation plans and implementing them), the U.S. Attorney General is authorized to institute in the local U.S. district court, in the name of the United States, a civil action or other proceeding for preventive relief against such school board or its successor. Upon finding that there has been a violation of title II of this bill, the court may require the school board or its successor to adopt a school desegregation plan or to implement any other school desegregation plan which the court may find appropriate and consistent with the terms of this bill, or to issue such other orders or grant such other relief as will most expeditiously achieve first-step compliance and desegregation.

Section 502 provides that the jurisdiction of U.S. district courts shall extend to such proceedings regardless of whether administrative or other remedies provided by law have been exhausted.

Title VI - Miscellaneous

Section 601 provides that nothing in the bill shall be construed to impair any right guaranteed by the Constitution or laws nor prevent individuals or private organizations from acting to enforce or safeguard any constitutional right or remedy.

Section 602: Saving clause in the event any provision is held invalid.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT:

Proposals for Corrective Action

Notre Dame Conference

February 8-11, 1963

January, 1963

Daniel H. Pollitt
Professor of Law
University of North Carolina

I.

INTRODUCTION

Item. In 1946 Jackie Robinson broke the color-bar in organized baseball and became the idol and inspiration of athletic-minded Negro youth. By 1962, eight of the top ten batters in the National League were members of the Negro race.

Item. On the centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation, Governor Terry Sanford announced the formation of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council with a two-fold mission: (1) to encourage merit employment without regard to race, and (2) to urge youth to become better trained and qualified for employment. The Governor stated that "Reluctance to accept the Negro in employment is the greatest single block to his continued progress and to the full use of the human potential of the Nation and its States".[1]

Item. The R. J. Reynolds tobacco company recently integrated its modern $32,000,000 Winston-Salem plant. Negro forewomen supervise the work of white employees, and the only signs of segregation are the rest rooms, still kept separate under North Carolina law. Officials report that the workers at the 115-acre industrial complex "responded well to desegregation," and this comment is borne out by the remarks of white and Negro employees who work side by side on the same machine, share the cafeteria line "like salt and pepper," but generally, though not always, tend to segregate at the tables.[2]

Item. Negroes Step Up Use of Boycotts to Back Drive for Better Jobs. A & P Is Hit in Philadelphia; Campaigns Start in Detroit, Baltimore and New York. So reads the headline to an article summarizing the "selective patronage" technique originated by the Philadelphia Negro clergy nearly three years ago.[3] A & P is the twentieth company directly affected by the Philadelphia program, all of whom ultimately have met the Negro demands. Some concede that in retrospect

they are not entirely unhappy. An oil company reports that prior to the boycott there were few if any Negro job applicants because "No intelligent Negro will apply to a lily-white company because he doesn't want to get turned down. Since the boycott," continued the spokesman, "we're now getting some crackerjack Negro salesman" and sales have been stronger. One Negro minister commented in explanation that "The Negro community speaks with its dollars to show it has no resentment."

Item. Discrimination in Cook County (Chicago) can be conservatively computed to cost $70 million per year. So testified the Director of the Cook County Department of Public Aid. This is the amount spent for the Aid to Dependent Children program, one designed to take care of children whose mothers have been deserted by their fathers. Almost all the recipients of the aid program in Chicago are Negro women who came to Chicago from the South some 15 or so years earlier, and who remain on the program for an average time of between two and three years. The director of the program testified to a Congressional Committee that the principal reason for this was the unavailability of employment for Negro girls and women:

> The white woman whose husband dies or disappears usually finds work; the Negro woman in the same predicament is denied work; she has one and only one job possibility available and that is day-work -- the dismal, grinding drudgery of finding, not one, but five or six different jobs, then accommodating herself to the diverse personalities of five or six different employers, and then dragging herself home with one of the lowest wages being paid in today's market. In addition, even before she considers the bleak prospect of day-work, she must contrive to make suitable arrangements for the care of her children.[4]

Item. Mayor Stan R. Brookshire of Charlotte, North Carolina recently called upon the business community to help the Negro help himself by providing better employment opportunities. "Second-class citizens," he said, "are a liability and a drain upon the resources of the community. Because of them our per capita income is low and our governmental and welfare costs are high." The Raleigh News and Observer editorialized favorably upon this call for action with the comment that "second-class citizens mean a second-class South for everybody in it."[5]

The above random-selected items illustrate the tragic waste of Negro potential, the community burden of job discrimination, the growing unrest within the Negro community, and a determination by thoughtful political and industrial leaders to rid America of its "second-class" heritage.

Despite encouraging but isolated "break-throughs"[6] the Negro remains at the bottom of the economic pyramid. Used to the run-around, fearing rebuff, lacking incentive, denied fair union representation, closed from job and training opportunities, his is the job with the broom and shovel, with pay approximately half that of the white.[7] The johnny-come-lately in most industries, he is the first to be fired and he is the victim of every cyclical, seasonal, residual, technological, ethnic, and economic maladjustment of the economy.[8] Moreover, his prospects are worsening, not getting better. Factory "automation" has resulted in one white man with a machine doing the work done a few years back by twenty, thirty, or forty blue-jeaned Negroes.[9] Changes in working conditions have denied the Negro jobs which were once his exclusive province. The locomotive fireman that once shoveled coal was Negro; the fireman that now tends the diesel engine is usually white. Changes in social customs have also adversely hit the Negro. The Negro artisan once had a near monopoly in the Southern building trades, but more and more he is relegated to work in the "Negro" community. Census reports for ten Southern states reveal that from 1920 to 1950 Negro carpenters declined from 23% to 10% of the total; painters, from 25% to 13%; bricklayers, from 54% to 37%; and plasterers, from 66% to 57%.[10] And the decline is accentuating with the decrease in apprenticeship opportunities.

The employment problem is not confined to any one region. In North Carolina, over 90% of all Negroes (but less than 30% of all whites) employed through the State Employment Security Commission in 1959 were placed in "service" or "unskilled" jobs.[11]

In California, a Congressional Committee received undisputed testimony that Negroes were virtually excluded from all jobs as bellboys in Los Angeles and San Francisco hotels, from jobs as waiters, from the San Francisco bottling industry (except as strikebreakers), from all but the most menial jobs on the railroads, from the maritime industry (except in the "stewards department"), among the longshoremen, from the white-collar and craft jobs in the movie industry, from the printing, building and construction trades industries, from the petroleum industry (with few exceptions), from white-collar positions in the retail stores, and even from the better paying jobs in agriculture.[12]

Similar testimony was made about job discrimination in Illinois. William Karp, chairman of the Committee on Merit Employment in the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, testified that a study of over 100,000 job orders for white collar jobs showed that 98% of them were "restricted" as to race.[13] He further testified that top representatives of the Meat Packing Industry denied "pen" jobs to Negroes on the theory that they "laugh, sing, and dance and distrub the cattle."[14] N.A.A.C.P. representatives cited job discrimination in Illinois by chapter and verse. The following typifies the testimony of Dr. Lucien H. Holman, State President of the Illinois Conference of the N.A.A.C.P.: "In Aurora a few manufacturing plants under UAW and other union contracts hire Negroes on a generally fair basis... On the other hand, there are a number of companies that do not hire qualified Negroes. They are Richard-Wilcox Manufacturing Co., the National Brush Co., Sears, Roebuck & Co., ...and Thor Equipment Co. The Aurora Chamber of Commerce has passed the following resolution... "Resolved, that the Board of Directors...

declare it to be a policy that all members are encouraged to voluntarily maintain merit employment practices..."[15]

The situation in New York is not much better. Professor Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University testified that the big employment opportunities for Negroes since 1940 have been in the semiskilled industrial jobs, the jobs hardest hit by automation.[16] Representatives of the N.A.A.C.P. cited the specifics of job discrimination, for example: "In the city of New York, the major industry, as a matter of fact, the basic source of manufacturing in this city, is the garment industry. Negroes still work here on the lowest economic levels, unskilled jobs and the lowest paid jobs."[17] Otis E. Finley, Jr., of the National Urban League, told of a survey in a slum area of 125,000 people, mostly Negro, where a sampling of the youth population showed that roughly 70% of the boys and girls aged 16 to 21 were out of school and unemployed. "Too many of these young people are able but frustrated In other cases, the spark of ambition has been all but snuffed out."[18]

II.
PROPOSALS FOR ACTION

This mass betrayal of the American Dream, the national denial of the individual's right to be, has been condemned from many a rostrum[19] and pulpit,[20] from street-corners[21] and from national political conventions.[22] Remedial proposals have come to us from the city hall,[23] state houses,[24] and from the White House in Washington, D. C.[25] The national problem of racial job discrimination has been particularized, and the current situation in the various areas of racial discrimination are discussed below.

A. Federal Employment.

The federal government maintains the nation's largest payroll, employing approximately 2.3 million civilian employees.[26] Since 1940 the appropriate Congressional statutes have mandated merit employment without regard to race, creed, or color,[27] and Negroes, denied private employment, have flocked to the government in disproportionate number. They are found, again in disproportionate number, clustered in the lower grades of the civil service. For example, in Los Angeles approximately 14% of the total population, but over 55% of the Postal employees, are Negro. The explanation given for this is simple: "Most of the Negroes come to the Post Office because it is hard for them to get employment anywhere else."[28]

Yet only 14% of the supervisors in the Los Angeles Post Office are Negro (generally found in "Negro" sections of the city) and there are many complaints of discrimination in up-grading and promotion, viz: "There is the case of a clerk of Japanese extraction who bid on the position of general clerk, foreign records unit, airport mail facility, a level 5 position. Placed No. 2 on the list according to the specifications of the job, and seniority, Clerk Tsukahira did not receive the courtesy of an interview. The No. 4 man was selected.[29]

There is no question but that much remains to be done if the theory of "merit" employment is to become an everyday fact of governmental operation. The United States Commission on Civil Rights reported in 1961 that "patterns of Federal employment...do not differ significantly from local employment patterns," and further stated that recent improvements in the federal employment situation were paralleled by similar improvements in the private employment situation.[30]

Under the personal leadership of President Kennedy,[31] the top governmental officials have made a determined effort to stamp out discrimination in federal employment.

All agencies made a survey of their own employment patterns to (1) spot discriminatory practices, and (2) serve as a bench-mark for future surveys.[32] Each agency appointed a Deputy Employment Policy Officer with the fixed obligation to concern himself with minority employment problems.[33] A complaint procedure has been strengthened, and those complaining of job discrimination are sometimes provided with counsel from the Department's legal staff.[34] The Civil Service Commission and many of the agencies have sent high-ranking representatives to "sell" federal employment to the graduates of leading Negro colleges.[35] The agencies have barred discrimination in agency-sponsored recreational programs, and some of the agencies (Post Office and Veteran's Administration) have notified all field stations that management will not deal with employee unions maintaining segregated locals or which practice any other form of discrimination.[36] The Treasury Department appointed the first Negro professor at the Coast Guard Academy.[37] All agencies have made progress reports to the President's Committee, thereby ensuring that some action will be taken to further the President's Executive Order. The report of the Department of Justice, briefer than most, is representative of them all:

> "Shortly after taking office, the Attorney General reviewed the numbers of minority personnel employed by the Department. The statistics showed that a very small number of Negro lawyers had been employed by the Department in responsible positions.
> "Mr. Kennedy directed that a study be made to determine the causes. This disclosed that at least one major cause was a lack of applications particularly from qualified Negro lawyers.
> "In May 1961 the Attorney General wrote letters to the deans of approximately 50 leading law schools asking for the names of qualified Negro lawyers of their acquaintance, and of qualified Negro law students who would be interested in a career in the Department. The letter stated that the Department did not employ on the basis of race but was seeking lawyers of ability to serve in it particularly as career employees; that the Attorney General was anxious to take some steps to break down the race barrier which had apparently existed...
> "Affirmative steps were also taken with respect to the field offices of the United States Attorneys.... Two Negro United States Attorneys were appointed and a substantial number of Assistant United States Attorneys and Deputy Marshals who were Negroes.

"...In early 1962 Maceo Hubbard, a career lawyer in the Department, was appointed as Employment Policy Officer....

"A new complaints procedure was recently instituted...."[38]

The big problem lies in transmitting the spirit of Washington to the field offices. Within some areas of Government employment "racial discrimination is deeply entrenched and widely practiced."[39] Moreover, even a conscientious field director, especially one policing a statute--such as the minimum wage law or the National Labor Relations Act--unpopular with the vested community interests, might hesitate to risk the effectuation of his program by hiring Negroes to positions where they deal with the outside public.[40]

Those who would resist the desegregation of federal employment find a handy justification in the "rule of three." Appropriate statutes require that the Civil Service Commission maintain a roster of eligible employees (resulting from an open examination) and that federal agencies fill their vacancies from among the highest three persons on this roster.[41] An illustrative abuse of the "rule of three" was recently presented to a Congressional Committee:

"In California, Negroes are discriminated against in civil service employment. One Negro female, after passing the test for clerk-stenographer, in San Francisco, with scores above 90 in shorthand, typing, and general clerical aptitude, was called in by nine different agencies for interviews and each time the job was given to another one of the 'top three names' on the roster. The applicant had prior civil service experience and some 7 years of secretarial experience.

"Several of the interviewers told the applicant that she was 'over-qualified' for the job, inasmuch as she had a college degree in secretarial science. In one case the interviewers told applicant, 'I just don't feel you would be happy in this job.'"[42]

Discretion in employment, especially at high levels, is undoubtedly required when job efficiency demands an intense and intimate interchange of ideas, which interchange may be dammed by personality difficulties. It is doubtful that the "rule of three" provides this necessary discretion. In any event, the necessity for a "rule of three" is dubious when the job effectuation does not require continued intimacy of intellectual exchange. Most federal employees can and do dictate a memo to anyone sent from the secretarial "pool," regardless of a potential personality conflict. Similiarly, most federal employees can and do work in harmony, office-to-office or desk-to-desk, with persons they choose not to see after office hours.

It follows that there is much to commend in legislative action abolishing the "rule of three," the device which makes discriminatory employment practices possible. Lacking such legislative action, the Civil Service Commission could minimize its harmful potential by giving less weight to the "oral," as contrasted with the written, examination. Or, additionally, the Civil Service Commission could require a written explanation of why the agency selected the second or third person, rather than the applicant first on the list.

Recent innovations requiring only administrative determination--a periodic head count of minority group employees, the addition of Employment Policy Officers to look for trouble spots, an expedited complaint procedure, the permeation of a spirit from on high to make progress in this area--may make the Congressional mandate of "merit employment" a felt reality.

The United States Civil Rights Commission has recommended, in line with the 1960 Republican Party platform,[43] that "Congress grant statutory authority to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity."[44]

B. Federal Contract Employment.

The United States government is the world's largest purchaser. It contracts with mines for the purchase of metals; with manufacturers for the fabrication of airplanes, missiles, ships, clothing, shoes, and other munitions of war; with farmers for the food set before the soldiers, the patients in the Veterans' Administration Hospitals, the school children who receive "hot lunches"; with universities for the supply of knowledge and skills; with utilities for the service of electric energy; and so on, almost infinitum. Lightbulbs, ink, books, automobiles, desks, new buildings, maintenance and repair services, telephones, radios, pocket knives, candy, chewing gum, and entertainment services, all are purchased in sizeable quantities by the federal government. In fiscal 1961 between $25 and $30 billions were expended for federal contracts; and ten million persons were employed by the 100 largest defense contractors and subcontractors alone.[45]

Anxious that the money it spends not be utilized to perpetuate racial job discrimination, the federal government has, since 1941, adhered to a "fair employment" policy. In that year, President Roosevelt established a Fair Employment Practices Committee, with its initial assignment being to ensure "merit" employment in the "defense" industries.[46] The FEPC came under Congressional fire, and in 1944 an amendment offered by Georgia's Senator Russell was tacked on to the annual Independent Offices Appropriation Act, providing that no appropriation could be allotted to any agency established by executive order and in existence for more than one year "if the Congress has not appropriated any money specifically for such agency...or specifically authorized the expenditure of funds by it."[47] The next day, the FEPC was granted a specific appropriation for the current fiscal year, but in the following year, 1945, it was told to liquidate its affairs. It issued its final report and went out of business on June 28, 1946.[48]

In 1951, following the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, President Truman issued a series of Executive Orders directing certain government agencies to include non-discrimination clauses in their procurement contracts. Truman also established a Committee on Government Contract Compliance, whose primary duty was to study and assess the effectiveness of the existing program. This committee began operations in April, 1952 and issued a report the following January with the change in administration. It noted that the "non-discrimination" clause was "almost forgotten, dead and buried under thousands of words of standard legal and technical language in government procurement contracts."[49]

President Eisenhower, on August 13, 1953 declared the public policy to be one of promoting "equal employment opportunity for all qualified persons employed or entitled to employment on government contracts." He established a Committee on Government Contracts under the leadership of Vice President Nixon to keep an overall eye on the program operation. The committee concerned itself primarily with education and persuasion, and not much was achieved. A survey of representative cities in 1961 by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights disclosed that "in most industries studied, patterns of Negro employment by federal contractors conformed to local industrial employment patterns... In Atlanta, the two automobile assembly plants contacted employed no Negroes in assembly operations. Except for one driver of an inside power truck, all Negro employees observed were engaged in janitorial work -- sweeping, mopping, or carrying away trash."[50] No company was ever placed on an "ineligible" list, or denied a contract, on the basis of its employment policies, no matter how flagrant the violation of the "non-discrimination" contractual provision. At times, there was outright defiance. Some public utility companies flatly refused to furnish the government with necessary services rather than adopt a policy of non-discriminatory employment. The government backed away from this challenge by "waiving" the non-discriminatory requirement. Similarly, in some industries, such as textile, where the percentage of government contract business is not large, the management would rather forego this business than change longstanding employment practices. Thus, shortly after the announcement of the new Kennedy executive order, the Wall Street Journal reported that "textile manufacturers have practically stopped bidding on military contracts for the past few weeks."[52] It is ironic, and almost unbelievable, that public utilities, monopolies chartered by the public and regulated by the state, and the textile industry, hard hit and seeking additional tariff protection, should be able to defy an important government policy.

On March 6, 1961, President Kennedy issued Executive Order 10925 designed, like its predecessors, "to promote and ensure equal opportunity for all qualified persons, without regard to race...employed or seeking employment with the federal government and on government contracts."[53] The standard non-discrimination clause now requires all contractors to "take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and the employees are treated...without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin." The "affirmative action" contemplates, as a minimal, that all "want ads" must specify that all qualified applicants will be considered without regard to race.[54] The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under the leadership of Vice President Johnson, was established to monitor this program and given authority to enforce the program by use of these sanctions, some of which were denied its predecessors:

1. conference, conciliation, mediation, or persuasion;
2. publicizing the names of contractors or unions which have either complied, or failed to comply;
3. recommending action by the Department of Justice, including injunctions against individuals or groups interferring with compliance and criminal proceedings against those furnishing false information;

4. terminating all or part of any contract for failure of the contractor to comply; and
5. requiring that contracting agencies of the government refrain from entering into new contracts with any non-complying contractor until he complies.[55]

The Johnson Committee has entered into a "Plans For Progress" program with many of the top industrial concerns of the nation. Typically, the ten point plan for progress initiated in the case of Lockheed Aircraft Co. binds the employer to:

1. provide all management levels with an up-to-date statement of its non-discrimination policy;
2. "aggressively seek out more qualified minority group candidates" for many job categories, including engineering, technical, administrative and clerical positions, and factory operatives;
3. instruct State Employment Officers and other recruitment sources that job applicants are to be referred irrespective of race, creed, color or national origin;
4. re-analyze its available salaried jobs to be certain that all eligible minority group employees have been considered for placement and upgrading;
5. re-examine personnel records of minority group employees to determine whether those qualified and eligible can be used for filling job openings;
6. institute a program of familiarizing universities with employment needs and opportunities, to include hiring teachers who are members of minority groups for summer work and arranging plant tours for teachers and student counselors;
7. support the inclusion of minority group members in all its apprenticeship and other training programs including supervisory and pre-supervisory training classes;

8. encourage the establishment of vocational training programs and the participation of minority group employees in such programs;
9. maintaining eating facilities, rest rooms, and recreational facilities on a nonsegregated basis; and
10. institute periodic checks to insure that the policies and objectives of the plan are being carried out.

How well is the Kennedy program functioning? A study of North Carolina federal contractors, issued six months after the Kennedy program was initiated, indicates that the program got off to a very slow start indeed.[56] The survey concerned the recruitment, the employment, the promotion, the on-the-job training, and other personnel practices of 262 North Carolina firms holding government contracts. In essence, the employment patterns in these government-contract firms paralleled those in firms without government contracts. This is how the survey summarized its findings:

> There appears to be a significant under utilization of Negro manpower in North Carolina firms holding contracts with the federal government. The patterns of under utilization are reflected in the significant number of firms that hire no Negroes, in the occupational levels at which Negroes are hired, in the narrow and limited representation of Negroes in white-collar positions, in the upgrading patterns, and in the use of Negro female resources.[57]

The almost uniform refusal of North Carolina federal contractors to utilize Negro manpower, either at all or at a level above the menial job, is significant for these reasons: (1) firms hiring Negroes reported in overwhelming number (77%) that their Negro employees were as efficient or better than their white employees; (2) those companies which utilized Negroes reported in overwhelming number (90%) that they had no difficulty because of this;[58] and (3) the largest proportion of firms indicated that they have no minimum educational requirement for hiring in the lower occupational categories, so the extent to which Negroes are wholly excluded is not a reflection on the lack of qualifications on the part of Negroes. Probably the most significant disclosure for present purposes is the following:

> Twenty-one of the 22 firms without Negro employees indicated that they have never discussed the matter of employing Negroes with any federal agency. Eighty-seven of the 100 responding firms that do employ Negroes indicated that they had never discussed the problem with any federal agency.[59]

Thus it would appear that six months after the Kennedy program was launched in Washington, it still remained a dead letter in North Carolina.

It is not fair to place all the blame on management. Unions must take the onus of sharing in and even initiating racial discrimination. Numerous unions have denied Negro employees a right to union membership, and thereby deprived them a voice and a vote in the policy decisions which affect their wages, their hours, and other conditions of employment.[60] Many other unions have established separate and segregated locals for Negro employees where they have scant more voice than if totally excluded, and still others have negotiated contracts wherein Negro employees were relegated, as a class, to unskilled and unpromotable positions. These separate racial seniority lines in collective bargaining agreements are especially galling. Negroes are hired in classifications designated as "common laborer," or "yard labor," or "non-operating department," or "maintenance department," and limited to promotion within the departments. Thus, a Negro with 20 years seniority can look forward to being promoted from "toilet attendant" to "sweeper."[61]

These union practices violate the Supreme Court's requirement that unions represent all employees "without hostile discrimination, fairly, impartially, and in good faith."[62]

These union practices have been recently condemned by the AFL-CIO Executive Council: "Resolved, That racially segregated local unions be eliminated by national and international unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO";[63] and by the 1961 AFL-CIO Constitutional Convention: "We welcome the nationwide agreements entered into by the Bricklayers...the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and other unions with respective national contractors' associations, to make non-discrimination on account of race, creed, color and national origin a standard to be observed in all apprenticeship training programs. Many of the major industrial unions have adopted "Plans for Progress to eliminate these practices."[64]

The National Labor Relations Board, which has original jurisdiction over these practices, recently indicated that it would countenance them no longer. Denying a discriminating union the normal protection against the necessity of participating in a representation election during a reasonable contractual period, the Labor Board, citing the Supreme Court school decision,[65] made this comment:

> Consistent with clear court decisions in other contexts which condemn governmental sanctioning of racially separate groupings as inherently discriminatory, the Board will not permit its contract bar rules to be utilized to shield contracts such as those here involved from challenge or otherwise appropriate election petitions. We therefore hold that, where the bargaining representative of employees in an appropriate unit executes separate contracts, or even a single contract, discriminating between Negro and white employees on racial lines, the Board will not deem such contracts as a bar to an election.
> We are not confronted in this proceeding with any attack on the validity of the Intervenor's (discriminating union's) outstanding certification in consequence of the separate contracts which it executed on the basis of race. Although the execution of such contracts is in patent derogation of the certification and would warrant revocation of the certification, we deem it unnecessary to take such action at this time in view of the impending election which we here direct.[66]

In short, union discrimination in industrial employment opportunities seems on the wane. "It is unfair and inaccurate to leave the impression that President Kennedy's Committee has not made progress," Duane Greathouse, a vice president of the United Auto Workers, testified to a Congressional Committee.

> Through the work of the Committee in these few months there are Negroes in technical skills in the oil industry in the St. Louis, Mo. area where there had been none before. There are minority group members now employed as seamstresses in a South Carolina textile plant for the first time. There are Negro tobacco workers in integrated production operations in North Carolina. Government contract facilities in Nashville, Tenn., and in Nevada, are employing integrated work forces because of the Committee's efforts. Negroes are now employed in skilled jobs on electronics in Dallas, Texas--jobs previously closed tight against them. The Committee opened government contract jobs for Negro carpenters in Miami, Fla.[67]

The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity now has the "tools."[68] If it can get the money and the staff, all it needs is determination to get the job done.

The United States Commission on Civil Rights correctly points out that the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, established only by executive action, is necessarily limited in budget and legal authority. Its jurisdiction over labor unions is indirect and tenuous. Therefore, the Commission recommends:

> That Congress grant statutory authority to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity or establish a similar agency to encourage and enforce a policy of equal employment opportunity in all federal employment and all employment created or supported by government contracts and federal grant funds."[69]

C. Federal Grant-in-Aid Employment

Grants-in-aid to state and local government, to public institutions, and to private nonprofit institutions are a method of federal subsidization of employment second in importance only to government contracts. In fiscal 1961 the federal grant-in-aid programs cost the taxpayers (white and Negro alike) some 7.5 billion dollars.[70] The largest expeditures went for the construction of hospitals ($154 million), schools ($63.3 million), public airports ($83.3 million), highways ($2.7 billion), and public housing, slum clearance, and urban redevelopment (over $300 million).[71]

Thousands upon thousands of skilled construction jobs were thereby created, and by and large they were denied to Negroes. The U. S. Commission on Civil Rights made a field study of employment created by these grants-in-aid programs in the cities of Detroit, Baltimore, and Atlanta. The results of this study showed: (1) Negro employment was greatest at the unskilled level, in every case outnumbering white employment at that level on these jobs. (2) As the skill level increased, the percentage of Negro employment decreased. (3) There was little difference in Negro employment patterns among the three cities surveyed; although in Atlanta almost all the skilled Negroes worked in the trowel trades (cement finishers, bricklayers) while in Detroit and Baltimore skilled Negroes were working as carpenters, operating engineers, and labor foremen as well.[72]

During the 1930's, the New Deal "pump-priming" make-work programs--the WPA, the PWA, the NYA, etc.--contained non-discriminatory clauses. The Unemployment Relief Act of 1933, for example, provided that "in employing citizens for the purpose of this Act no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color or creed;"[73] and the Hatch Act of 1939 contained a proviso making it unlawful to deprive any persons of employment or other benefit made possible "by any Act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity."[74] When Congress failed to ban discriminatory hiring practices, as in the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933, those administering the public works program issued regulations designed to end job discrimination, and punished the violators.[75]

During the 1960's, we find no such general governmental policy in grant-in-aid employment. The Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constituent agencies which administer the Low Rent Housing and the Urban Redevelopment programs, construe grant project agreements to be government contracts within the meaning of Executive Order 10925 and accordingly require a "non-discriminatory" clause in all contracts.[76] The Urban Redevelopment Program has three steps: first, the local government, with federal financial assistance, acquires and clears slum areas; second, the local government, without federal assistance, then improves the site; and third, the cleared land is then sold to private contractors for redevelopment. The non-discriminatory clause applies only in the first process, i.e., acquiring and clearing the land.

The Federal Aviation Agency has, since April 1961, required non-discrimination in employment created by airport grant projects,[77] but due to staff limitations leaves enforcement to the local sponsors.[78]

The Bureau of Public Roads, within the Department of Commerce, which administers grants for highway construction has, since 1941, inserted a "short-form" non-discriminatory clause in all contracts. The Bureau has not adopted the more meaningful provisions of the Kennedy Executive Order "for fear that any change in the clause would call attention to it."[79] There is no machinery for its enforcement.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which administers the hospital and impact-school construction programs, makes no requirement that employment on these projects be non-discriminatory.

The federal grants-in-aid are conditioned upon compliance with specified standards, and certainly for purposes of equal protection have no different standing than the ordinary government contract.[81]

In 1961, Congressman William Fitts Ryan introduced a bill, H.R. 7143, to establish the Civil Rights Commission as a permanent agency with broad powers to end employment discrimination on federal grants-in-aid programs. The Civil Rights Commission has recommended that:

> the President issue an Executive Order making clear that employment supported by federal grant funds is subject to the same non-discrimination policy and the same requirements as those set forth in Executive Order 10925 applicable to employment by government contractors and that both the "federal contract" and "federal grant-in-aid" anti-discrimination programs be given congressional sanction and approval.[82]

D. The State Employment Services.

A special grant-in-aid program, created by the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933[83] is the Federally subsidized "national system of public employment offices." The function of these offices is (1) to assist unemployed workers in finding jobs, and (2) to assist employers in securing qualified workers. In fiscal 1961, approximately $107 million in Federal grants were spent for this purpose.[84]

The persons in these local offices man the gates: they can open the door to "merit" employment, or, alternatively, they can bar Negro access to the better paying jobs. Indications are that they do the latter.

The North Carolina Employment Security Commission operated in 1960 on a budget of $5,555,960.00, entirely paid for by the Federal government. The headquarters agency in Raleigh employed a total of 10 Negroes: one maid, two elevator operators, five janitors, and two janitor messengers. Some thirty-nine Negroes (and 681 whites) were employed in a professional capacity throughout the state to serve the Negro applicants for employment. When a job order is received, it is sent to the offices manned by whites if the order specifies white employees. If the order specifies Negro employees, it is handled by the Negro-manned divisional offices. If the order does not specify race, it is sent to either the white or Negro office according to "local knowledge of customary hiring requirements." In case of doubt, the employer is requested to indicate a preference. The result of this system is that in 1960, 95,576 whites were directed to employment, largely in professional, clerical, sales, skilled and semi-skilled jobs; and 73,473 Negroes were placed, largely in service and unskilled positions. By this system, the employer is denied both the opportunity and the responsibility to hire on the basis of merit.[85]

The experience in North Carolina is not unique. "If a known Government contractor insists on a discriminatory job order in Atlanta, it will be honored, as will a discriminatory request from a Federal agency."[86] An employee of the Michigan

Employment Security Commission explains: "I get rated by the number of people I place. If I don't place enough, I get called upstairs. Therefore, I send people to places where I think they will be employed, and this means that I send them by race."[87]

When Secretary Goldberg assumed office, the Department of Labor "determined that one objective in its relationship with state employment services, in line with the President's national policy, would be the making available of equal employment opportunities through the 1800 local employment offices. It therefore set about encouraging the states to review their staffs, giving greater understanding toward the national policy of equal employment opportunity." Additionally, the Department of Labor prohibited the processing of "discriminatory" job orders -- not only from Federal agencies and Federal contractors as was formerly the rule -- but from private employers as well.[88] But the basic cause for racial job assignment, i. e., basing promotions and allocations of funds according to the number of job placements, has not been changed.

A basic policy of the United States Employment Service is to promote employment for all applicants "on the basis of their skills, abilities and job qualifications."[89] This policy would be better effectuated if promotions and the allocation of funds were based, at least in part, according to the number of Negro job applicants placed in "non-traditional" positions. This is one of the recommendations of the United States Commission on Civil Rights:

"Recommendation. 7.--That steps be taken, either by executive or congressional action, to reaffirm and strengthen the Bureau of Employment Security policy, in rendering recruitment and placement services, of encouraging merit employment and assisting minority group members in overcoming obstacles to employment and in obtaining equal job opportunities. In this connection, consideration should be given to changing the method utilized to determine Federal appropriations to State employment offices, presently keyed primarily to the number of job placements made, to reflect other factors (such as the greater degree of difficulty and time involved in placing qualified minority group workers), so that the budgetary formula used will encourage rather than discourage referral on a nondiscriminatory basis. In addition, regulations and statements of policy with respect to the operation of State employment offices should be reexamined to insure that such regulations and statements conform to the overall USES policy of discouraging employment discrimination and encouraging merit employment.

"Recommendation 8.--That the President direct the Secretary of Labor to grant funds for the operation of State employment offices only to those offices which offer their services to all, on a nonsegregated basis, and which refuse to accept and/or process discriminatory job orders."[90]

E. Apprenticeship Programs.

A skilled trade is a must in today's job market. Technological changes and the replacement of new industries for old have been largely responsible for increased unemployment. But even in a "depressed" area like Detroit, "jobs... are going begging for lack of skilled workers to fill them." [91] The demand for skilled workers will continue to grow. It is estimated that for every 100 skilled workers the nation had in 1955, it will need 122 in 1965, and 145 in 1975: "The New York State Department of Labor indicates, in a survey of jobs in 1960 to 1970, that 46,000 additional craftsmen will be needed annually if the State's needs for skilled workers in the 1960's are to be satisfied."[92] Yet today the apprenticeship training programs are not even producing enough skilled workers to replace those who retire, and Negroes are experiencing "a major crisis in unemployment because it is almost impossible as a result of discrimination for them to make the jump from unskilled jobs being wiped out by automation to the skilled ones that the new technology creates."[93]

1. Discrimination In Building Trade Apprentice Programs.

Uncontradicted testimony bears this out. "Open access to plumbing and pipe-fitting apprenticeship controlled by the Plumbers Union is a very rare experience for young Negroes in the North as well as in the South ....

"Among the most important of the building trades craft unions is the Carpenters Union which has severely limited the opportunities of colored craftsmen by organizing segregated Negro locals (in those instances where Negroes are permitted to join) and giving them jurisdiction over areas where there was little or no construction....

"A recent study made by the Council for Civic Unity of San Francisco revealed that Negroes are not participating in the electrical, plumbing, and carpentry apprenticeship training programs in that city and that only one Negro served as an apprentice in the metal trades.

"A report made by the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission indicates the exclusion of Negro youth in the structural steel, sheet metal, lathers, and tile setters apprenticeship programs in Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, and Muskegon.

"The Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights has published a study which concludes that a similar condition exists in virtually the entire State of Connecticut.

"In a study entitled 'Negro Employment Practices in the Chattanooga Area' it is found that there was an absolute ban on apprenticeship opportunities for Negroes in the building trades.....

"In Newark, N. J., where there are 3,523 apprentices currently participating, not a single Negro apprentice is to be found in electrical installation, plumbing, painting, and other building trades apprenticeship programs....

"An examination of available data makes evident that less than 1 per cent of the apprentices in the building and construction industry throughout the United States are Negro."[94]

The absence of Negroes from the construction crafts is not, as one offical of an electrical union would have it, due to the fact that "Negroes fear electricity."[95] At the end of the Civil War, 100,000 of the 1230 artisans in the South were Negroes.[96] In 1920, in 10 states of the old South, 23 per cent of the carpenters, 25 per cent of the painters, 54 per cent of the bricklayers, and 66 per cent of the plasterers were Negro.[97] Today, Negroes have a hard time getting a toehold in the apprentice programs. The reason for the total absence of Negro plumbers was explained by a Plumbers Union official, who said that the apprenticeship program -- jointly administered by the union and management -- gave priority to the sons and relatives of those in the trade:

Mr. Rhodes (Business Manager of Local No. 4 of the Plumbers Union): It is true our local union favors, gives preference to sons, employees' sons and members' sons, and the like of that, you know, kinfolks....

Congressman Pucinski: What is the reasoning ---

Mr. Rhodes. What is the reason? Well, No. 1, your membership. You have got an 800-man membership. They all have boys that want to become plumbers. And they insist that the apprenticeship committee take care of their people, their own people... After all, how could a committee tell a member that we are going to take somebody else other than his son before we take his son?

Congressman Roosevelt: Will the gentleman yield? What you are saying, though, is that a plumbers' local is the same thing as a private club or a private school ... is it right to be able to make that union into what in essence tends to become pretty much a private club?

Mr. Rhodes: That is not what we are attempting to do, or not what we are doing. We take boys other than plumbers' sons. However, we give plumbers' sons preference.

Congressman Roosevelt: But only when you don't have enough sons?

Mr. Rhodes. Well, that has happened. There were a few years back when there were not enough plumbers' sons....

Congressman Roosevelt. If a Negro did apply, and was qualified, can you tell me honestly that you think he would be given a fair chance to enter the apprenticeship training?

Mr. Rhodes. He would be processed the same as any other candidate.

Congressman Roosevelt. What is the total membership of your union?

Mr. Rhodes. 824.

Congressman Roosevelt. Is this a mixed racial union, or are they all white?

Mr. Rhodes. As far as I know, they are all white."[98]

President George Meany of the AFL-CIO testified that: "There is racial discrimination in apprenticeship and vocational training programs, and we in the AFL-CIO have opposed and do oppose it. We want it ended."[99] J. C. Haggerty, President of the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, testified that "It would be fruitless to deny that discrimination exists in the building and construction industry."[100] Both gentlemen urged the enactment of H. R. 8219, introduced by Congressman Powell, which is designed to bar the Secretary of Labor from fostering discriminatory apprenticeship training programs. The proposed legislation has several facets.

First. The Davis-Bacon and the Walsh-Healy Act require government contractors to pay "prevailing," and the Fair Labor Standards Act requires all employers in interstate commerce to pay "minimum," wages to their employees. Each statute, however, permits the Secretary of Labor to authorize "exemptions" from the wage requirements in the case of apprentices. The proposed legislation would prohibit the Secretary of Labor from "exempting" any apprenticeship program where discrimination is practiced. This proposal would have limited impact, as only sixty-six exemptions were issued in the United States last year;[101] and in any event, former Secretary of Labor Goldberg announced that "exemptions" will not be granted to apprentice programs that discriminate.[102]

Second. The Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training, U. S. Department of Labor currently "certifies" apprenticeship programs which meet agreed-upon standards. The purpose is to upgrade the programs and assure uniformity of training. Certificates are awarded those graduating from these programs. Approximately half (160,000) the current apprentices are in a "certified" program.[103] The proposed legislation would bar the Secretary of Labor from certifying a program if it discriminates. The Secretary of Labor, by administrative action, has already taken this course.

Third. Most apprenticeship programs involve both on-the-job training and class-room work. The class-room work is supported by federal funds; and the legislative proposal is to withhold these funds from the apprenticeship programs which discriminate. There is a question as to how effective this would be in achieving its objective. Prior to 1954, when Washington, D. C. schools were segregated, most of the major craft unions utilized public schools for the class-room aspects of their apprentice programs. Subsequent to the desegregation of the schools, "many of the unions set up their own separate training facilities,"[104] and this is a trend that is nationwide, "more so where the unions have the resources to do it."[105]

A more direct approach has been taken to the problem of racial discrimination in on-the-job apprenticeship programs. The union, whose membership is closed to Negroes, is not permitted by the Courts to restrict employment opportunities to its members.[106] The Supreme Court has ruled that a union representing a majority of the employees in an appropriate craft or unit may not use its bargaining power to the detriment of minority Negro employees within the craft,[107] or to the detriment of Negro employees in a sister craft or unit. "Bargaining agents who enjoy the advantages of the Railway Labor Act's provisions must execute their trust without lawless invasion of the rights of other workers."[108] All these decisions concerned job restrictions by unions against Negroes then on the job. However, the National Labor Relations Act requires unions to give "fair representation" to "employees"; job applicants have come within the meaning of the term "employees" in other contexts; and a good case has been made for the proposition that it is an unfair labor practice for a union, controlling job access, to discriminate against job applicants on the basis of race.[109] The issue, however, has not yet been decided, although it is now pending before the National Labor Relations Board.[110] Should the Labor Board deny statutory authority to rectify the situation, federal legislation modeled on the Ohio Code (making it unlawful for any labor organization to discriminate against any person, or limit his employment opportunities, on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry)[111] seems appropriate.

The Civil Rights Commission does not go this far. It recommends only that "Congress amend the Labor-Management and Disclosure Act of 1959 to include in title 1 thereof a provision that no labor organization shall refuse membership to, segregate, or expel any person because of race, color, religion, or national origin."[112]

2. Discrimination in Industrial Apprenticeship Programs. Thus far, the discussion has concerned discrimination in the building craft apprenticeship programs administered (at least jointly) by the craft unions. But an equally invidious type of discrimination is found in the industrial apprenticeship programs administered by management.

"In industrial apprenticeship training programs the opportunities for Negroes appear to be no greater than in the construction crafts."[113] Thus, a study of the auto industry's apprenticeship training program reveals that "Chrysler Corp. had 350 apprentices in its Detroit area plants, not one of whom was a Negro. General Motors Corp. showed a slight improvement in that they had one Negro apprentice out of the 289 apprentices in training in its Detroit area plants. However, at the General Motors Institute in Flint which enrolls 2,400 students in a five-year work and training program, there is not a single Negro student."[114] "In the apprenticeship training program conducted jointly by the Automotive Tool & Die Manufacturers Association and the UAW, there are approximately 370 apprentices, all white. Only one Negro has ever participated in this program."[115]

Private employers who discriminate in industrial apprenticeship programs can be reached by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity if they have Government contract employment. The typical "Plan for Progress" requires the employer to "support the inclusion of minority group members in all its apprenticeship and other training programs."[116] If the private employer does not have a government program, his discriminatory practices can be curbed only by enactment of a Fair Employment Practices Law.

F. Vocational Education.

The greatest resources of any nation are the skill and know-how of its people. This philosophy has been embedded in federal law for many years. A subsidized program of vocational education was instituted in 1914 with the Smith-Hughes Act with the stated purposes: "To conserve and develop our national resources, to permit a productive and more prosperous agriculture, to prevent waste of human labor, to provide a supplement to apprenticeship; to increase wage earning power; to meet the increasing demand for trained workmen; to offset the increased cost of living; to serve as a wise business investment; and to promote our national security and economy."[117]

The import of vocational education as it relates to the need for highly skilled and technically trained manpower for the space age, has been underscored by the enactment of title

VIII of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 which makes provisions for area vocational educational programs "to train highly skilled technicians in fields necessary for national defense." [118]

The vocational education programs operate in the following manner: states willing to match federal funds and accept federal supervision receive grants from the federal government to help pay "the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, and teachers of trade, home economics, and insustrial subjects."[119]

The Office of Education within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare administers the programs. The long-time policy of the Office of Education was "to fit persons for useful employment and, hence, training would be offered only when it was evident that those trained could reasonably expect to find employment locally. Since Negroes were denied employment in certain occupations, ... there was no use to train a Negro for an occupation in which he could not find employment; i. e., to train Negroes as electricians in most States would have been a waste of money and the time of the persons so trained."[120] Since 1948, the Office of Education has adopted the policy that "in the administration of federally aided programs of vocational education there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed, or color." However, the present position of the Office of Education is that "the Commissioner does not have the power to withhold funds because schools are segregated."[121] The result of this approach is as may be expected: Negroes are excluded, segregated, and usually placed in training for "Negro" jobs.

"In Louisiana, there are twenty-seven state supported trade and technical schools -- twenty-three for whites -- four for Negroes.... Recently I visited two trade schools in New Orleans, one for Negroes and the other for whites. The Orleans Area Vocational and Technical School, which is for Negroes, offers only seven courses. The other school... offers forty-seven."[122]

In Atlanta, "the use of segregated public schools for vocational training produces a marked difference in the types of programs available to different racial groups... At Carver School, Negroes are trained for 'jobs traditionally open to them'. These are the most menial, requiring the lowest level of skills. They are precisely the ones for which the national economy has less and less need."[123]

In North Carolina, the situation is not so extreme. A survey of nine Industrial Education Centers reveals racial segregation in some: "in at least three this includes separate courses of study."[124] Instruction is available on the basis of job opportunities, and in some instances this is construed to mean job opportunities within the community. Thus, "if it was known not to be the custom for Negroes to be employed as upholsterers in the area served by the Center" then there was not job opportunity for Negroes and they were denied the training unless a "specific job" was assured.[125] Generally, however, the stated admission policy was to exclude race as a factor. The preponderance of white students (over 90 per cent) was explained by the lack of Negro interest and qualifications. One administrator stated that he had "recently shown forty-seven Negro men through the school and invited them to take courses; that only four applied, and of these only one completed the necessary examinations and he did so poorly that he was not admitted."[126]

Lack of motivation and ability, of course, is itself the product of long-suffered discrimination. The vicious circle of discrimination in employment opportunities is clear; the Negro is denied, or fails to apply for training for jobs in which employment opportunities have traditionally been denied him; when jobs do become available, there are consequently few, if any, qualified Negroes available to fill them; and often, because of lack of knowledge of such newly opened opportunities, even the few who are qualified fail to apply.

The United States Civil Rights Commission has recommended that Congress and the President take appropriate measures to meet the manpower needs of the coming years by:

(1) Providing that, as a condition of federal assiatance, all such programs be administered on a nondiscriminatory, nonsegregated basis; and

(2) Amending present regulations regarding admission to vocational classes;to provide that admission be based on present and probable future national occupational needs, rather than, as presently interpreted, on traditional and local needs and opportunities.

Additionally, of a more positive nature, the Commission recommended action:

(3) Expanding and supplementing existing programs of federal assistance to vocational education;

(4) Providing for retraining as well as training and for funds to enable jobless workers to move to areas where jobs are available and their skills in demand; and that Congress enact legislation to provide equality of training and employment opportunities for youths (aged 16 to 21), and particularly minority group youths, to assist them in obtaining employment and completing their education;

(5) Through a system of federally subsidized employment and training made available on a nondiscriminatory basis; and

(6) Through the provision of funds for special placement services in the schools in connection with part-time and cooperative vocational education programs.

Finally, the Commission recommended "That the President direct that appropriate measure be taken for the conduct, on a continuing basis, of an affirmative program of dissemination of information:

(7) To make known the availability on a non-discriminatory basis of jobs in the Federal Government and with Government contractors; and

(8) To encourage all individuals to train for and apply for such jobs, and particularly those jobs where there is currently a shortage of qualified applicants."[127]

G. Private Employment.

All the above programs and proposals have no immediate and only indirect impact on private discriminatory employment practices. A national program--prohibiting discriminatory employment practices by employer and union alike -- is needed. Federal legislation on this score has been introduced in each Congress since the 78th and supported by religious leaders of all persuasions, constitutional authorities, sociologists, economists, businessmen, and leaders of organized labor. Every report that has issued from a House or Senate Committee has recommended the enactment of fair employment legislation.

In the absence of final Congressional action, the states have moved in. New York first, under the leadership of Governor Thomas E. Dewey, next New Jersey, and today some twenty-four of the most populous states in the North, in the North Central, and in the West have enacted some type of fair employment practice legislation.[128] This, however, is not adequate to the occasion. First, there is some doubt that the Constitution permits the application of these state laws to "Interstate Commerce."[129]

Second, these state laws have no applicability in the area of the country where the need for such laws is the greatest. Finally, the problem is national in scope as populations migrate from one section of the country to another.

National legislation is a must. As one witness put it: "FEPC is a workable, sound, tested instrumentality that is good for 110 million people in twenty states; surely, gentlemen, it is good for 180 million people in fifty states."[130] Or, to quote George Meany:

> I could speak at length about the physical loss of good brains and strong bodies we suffer because of those who judge a man by other standards than his abilities. That would be tragic enough in an era when we need every ounce of our strength, and the fullest development of our resources, to secure our nation against attack.
> But the greatest loss to America is moral and spiritual. If a citizen of this country finds his way blocked, if he cannot achieve his highest degree of usefulness, only because he is a Negro or a Jew, a Catholic or an Asiatic; because he is an Italian or a Pole; because he is thirty-five or forty or forty-five, those who are responsible for blocking him are betraying the American ideal in the eyes of the world."[131]

III

Summary and Conclusion

Is this, the year of the Emancipation Proclamation, the year for an FEPC? The defeat of those who sought to amend Senate Rule 22 and thereby avert the threat of a filibuster is not a happy harbinger of civil rights legislation. But ours is a rapidly changing world. Six years ago, there was no sputnik, and the word "Astronaut" was unknown. Five years ago Governor Faubus was an obscure southern Governor, and a liberal one to boot. Martin Luther King, Jr., was a young and obscure southern minister, with no particular mark for greatness. Three years ago, the first Negro youth had yet to walk into a white lunch counter and ask for a cup of coffee. Three months ago, no governor of South Carolina had ever asked for the peaceful acceptance of an integrated state university. One month ago, no governor of North Carolina had ever asked for a Good Neighbor Council to end employment discrimination. The segregationist may think he is fighting John Kennedy, Earl Warren, and the NAACP. Actually, he is fighting Marconi, macadam, and Henry Ford -- in short, the Twentieth Century. The outcome of this unequal struggle is not for a moment in doubt. If FEPC legislation comes not this year, it comes soon. But much remains to be done, and on many fronts.

Within the federal civil service there are pockets of racism; aided and abetted by the use and abuse of the "rule of three." Energetic transmission of the Washington spirit to the field offices is necessary if federal employment and employment opportunities are to be based solely on factors of "merit." Periodic "headcounts," the addition of "minority specialists" to employment staffs, good communication, and Congressional approval and ratification of the guiding agency -- the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity -- will keep this program on sound footing.

The "fair and equal employment" clause in the standard government contract has for too long been forgotten, "dead and buried under thousands of words of standard legal and technical language." President Kennedy has unearthed this provision and appointed a Committee under Vice-President Johnson to enforce it. Sanctions are available, and the Plans for Progress, if implemented, give great hope of progress. The entire program would be strengthened by Congressional authorization, support, and appropriations.

The anti-discrimination clauses contained (and enforced) in the 1930 grant-in-aid programs are not present in today's programs. The consequence is that thousands of Negroes are denied good jobs on projects created by Federal funds. There is no valid Constitutional reason why Federally created job opportunities under grant-in-aid programs should be treated differently from Federally created job opportunities under Federal procurement contract programs. The Civil Rights Commission recommends that the grant-in-aid program be brought within the protection and requirements of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

The United States Government finances the world's largest employment agency; and this agency in turn often stands as a barrier between the Negro and better job opportunities. Operating through segregated offices, the state employment services, at least until lately, processed discriminatory job requests under the federal spurt which based promotion and appropriations on the number of unemployed persons put back to work. The Civil Rights Commission has recommended that (1) consideration should be given to changing the method utilized to determine federal appropriations, presently keyed to the number of job placements made, to reflect other factors (such as the greater degree of difficulty and time involved in placing qualified minority group workers) so that the budgetary formula will encourage, rather than discourage, referral on a nondiscriminatory basis; and (2) that the President direct the Secretary of Labor to grant funds only to state employment services which offer their services on a non-segregated basis and which refuse to accept and/or process discriminatory job offers.

America suffers from a surplus of unskilled and a dearth of skilled employees. And thousands of youths, age 16 to 21, are out of school, out of work, on the streets headed for trouble, petty crimes, and ultimately to public relief. The federal government seeks to give skills, work, and hope to these citizens by training in federally sponsored apprenticeship programs and federally financed industrial training centers. Yet these programs are not only woefully inadequate in size and number; they also discriminate against the Negro entirely, or at best train him for "traditional" jobs which are rapidly passing from the industrial scene. The Civil Rights Commission recommends corrective action in the federally supported apprenticeship programs by withholding federal aid and support from those which discriminate. It recommends corrective action against federally supported industrial training programs through similar techniques. And it recommends a positive approach to the total problem of creating skills needed in the coming years, of rekindling belief in the sceptical youth, through a program of guidance counseling, making the youth aware of federal and federal contract employment opportunities; through a program of extensive training in useful and challenging skills; and through a program of mass training and retraining akin to that of the Civil Conservation Corps during the 1930s -- a domestic Peace Corps if you will, permitting a simultaneous experience of education, skill gaining, and helping others to help themselves.

We find ourselves at another frontier. Do we retreat, vacillate, or press on? The problem is grave, the challenge a thrill, and the promise of solution a reward without measure.

On to Appomattox.

REGISTRATION AND VOTING IN THE SOUTH

Wiley A. Branton

This paper is intended to serve solely as a background paper for discussion on proposed civil rights legislation at the Notre Dame Conference on Civil Rights Legislation to be held at Notre Dame, Indiana, February 8-11, 1963. It deals with problems of registration and voting. None of the material contained herein should be quoted or printed without the express consent of the author.

REGISTRATION AND VOTING IN THE SOUTH
Proposals for Congressional Action

Introduction

Shortly after the White Primary was outlawed in 1944,[1] voter registration by Negroes in the South rose rapidly from a few hundred thousand so that by 1947, there were 595,000 registered Negro voters in the eleven southern states.[2] By 1952, there were slightly over a million registered Negroes in the South, and by 1956, the number stood at 1,238,038. Prior to the White Primary case, there was little incentive for Negroes to register and vote in the South because the whole area was solidly Democratic, and Negroes could not vote in the Democratic Primary elections where nomination was tantamount to election. Prior to 1944, the few persons of color who were registered to vote could only participate in the general elections, and most times, the Republican party offered no candidates or only token opposition. Because of rejection by the Democrats, Negro political leaders in the South maintained their loyalty to the Republican party, and became Republican party leaders in most of the states, and even took control of party affairs in such states as Mississippi and Georgia.

Subsequent to the 1956 registration figures mentioned above, Congress adopted the first legislation dealing with civil rights since the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment. The Civil Rights Acts of 1957[3] and 1960[4] both have provisions designed to protect the right to register and vote. Even though several suits have been brought by the Department of Justice to protect the rights of Negroes to vote under the Civil Rights Acts, and there has been a continued increase in Negro registration, nevertheless, registration figures are much too low, and additional measures must be taken to remove the barriers from Negro registration.

Current Statistics

The Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council recently compared notes with other agencies and individuals interested in Negro registration, and the best estimates and official figures are listed below:

Negro Registration in the South in December, 1962

State	Negroes Registered	Percent of Total Registration*	Negroes Unregistered
Alabama	90,000	9%	418,731
Arkansas	75,000	13%	127,593

Abstract of Present Federal Laws Protecting the Right to Vote

Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Section 1 - The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2 - The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Civil Rights Act of 1957

Title I. Created Commission on Civil Rights composed of six members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be from the same political party.

Empowered the Commission to investigate allegations that certain citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and have that vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion, or national origin.

Title II. Authorized the appointment of one additional Assistant Attorney General in the Department of Justice.

Title III. Extended the jurisdiction of the federal district court to include any civil action begun to recover damages, or secure equitable relief under any Act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights, including the right to vote.

Title IV. Prohibits attempts to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote in general or primary elections for federal officials.

Empowered the Attorney General to seek an injunction when any person is about to engage in any act or practice which would deprive another of his right to vote.

Gave district courts jurisdiction of above proceedings, and provided that administrative remedies need not be first exhausted.

Provided for right of counsel and production of witnesses for any person cited for contempt.

Title V. -

Provided punishment by fine or imprisonment upon conviction in criminal contempt cases arising from provisions of Civil Rights Act of 1957.

Set maximum fine for an individual under these provisions at $1,000 or six months in jail, or both.

Allowed the judge to decide whether defendent in a criminal case involving voting rights would be tried before the court, or with a jury.

Provided for trial de novo before a jury for any defendent found guilty in trial before the court, and given a sentence in excess of forty-five days, or fined in excess of $300.

Civil Rights Act of 1960

Title I.- Provided that anyone who attempts to prevent, obstruct, impede, or interfere with the due exercise of rights, or the performance of duties under any order of a court of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisioned not more than one year, or both. Such acts could be enjoined by private suits seeking court injunctions, even though acts may be criminal in nature.

Title III.

Required every election official to preserve for a period of twenty-two months following all federal elections, including primaries, all papers requisite to registration and voting for that election. Provides fine up to $1,000 or imprisonment up to one year, or both, for any person convicted for violation of requirement, or for anyone convicted for willfully stealing, destroying, concealing, mutilating, or altering the registration records.

Required that such records be turned over to Attorney General or his representative upon demand in writing for inspection, reproduction and copying at the office of records custodian.

Prohibits disclosure of information regarding records by Justice Department except to Congress, governmental agencies, or before a court or grand jury.

Vests district court in district where demand for records is made with jurisdiction to compel the production of such record or paper.

Title IV. Enpowered the members of the Civil Rights Commission to administer oaths and take sworn statements.

Title VI.

Provided that where the court finds that any person has been deprived of the right to register or vote in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, Attorney General may then ask court to make a finding whether such deprivation was or is pursuant to a pattern or practice.

If court found such a "pattern or practice" of racial discrimination, then any person of such race (Negroes) living in the affected area could apply to the court for an order declaring him qualified to vote if he proved (1) he was qualified to vote under state law; (2) he had tried to register after the "pattern or practice" finding; and (3) he had not been allowed to register or had been found unqualified by the registrar.

The application for such an order shall be heard within ten days and any order for actual registration shall be effective for as long as applicant would have been qualified if registered under state law. Election officials would be furnished copies of order and disobedience of same would constitute contempt of court.

To carry out the provisions of the order, the court may appoint one or more voting referees, who must be qualified voters in the judicial district. Referees would receive the applications for registration and hear the applicants testimony ex parte, including answers to any literacy questions required by state law, and make a report to the court. A copy of the report of the referee shall be served upon the State Attorney General and on each party, any of whom must show cause within ten days, or shorter time as the court may fix, why an order of the court should not be entered in accordance with such report. If exceptions to the report are filed on issues of facts, then it must be supported by a verified copy of a public record, or by affidavits of persons having personal knowledge of such facts or matter contained in the report; those relating to matters of law shall be supported by a memorandum of law. Issues of fact and law shall be determined by the court (or by referee if court directs) and a hearing shall be held only if it appears that there is a genuine issue of material fact. If the exceptions are dismissed, then the court or referee could issue a certificate declaring the applicant qualified to vote.

If an applicant applies for such a certificate twenty or more days prior to an election which is undetermined by the time of such election, the court shall issue an order authorizing the applicant to vote provisionally, provided applicant shall be qualified to vote under state law. Such an order is discretionary with the court where application is filed within twenty days prior to an election.

Voting referees would have the powers conferred upon a master by Rule 53(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (right to subpoena records, administer oaths, hear testimony, etc.) Court may take any action necessary or appropriate to enforce its decrees and is not limited solely to the order allowing an applicant to vote.

In any action instituted under these provisions, the discriminatory acts or practices of state officials shall be deemed that of the state and the state may be joined as a party defendant. If official resigns or is relieved of office and no successor has assumed such office, the state itself could be sued.

Legislative Problems

Minority groups have depended principally on judicial decisions for implementing the basic guarantees of civil rights. These judicial decisions prior to the Civil Rights Act of 1957 resulted largely from slowly expanding liberal interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Congress passed a number of civil rights acts during the first ten years following the Civil War, but, unfortunately, most of these civil rights laws were nullified by other laws or narrowly constructed or struck down by the courts. It was only by a more liberal construction of the Fourteenth Amendment and its application to the point in question that many of the decisions favorable to civil rights came into being. Although Congress was empowered to enforce the provisions of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments "by appropriate legislation," it was not able to get a single civil rights act passed until 1957. Anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, FEPC and other proposals had been introduced repeatedly, but all had failed to get the necessary votes to even kill the filibusters of southern Congressmen.

President Roosevelt set up a civil rights section in the Justice Department in 1939 by adminstrative action. All of the party platforms since 1944, of the Democrats and Republicans, have included fairly good civil rights planks. Many people feel that the ballot is the most powerful weapon which minorities can use and that if enough Negroes are given the right to vote that many civil rights problems will be settled at the ballot box.

Southerners are more unified in their fight against civil rights legislation than on any other proposal. The question of states' rights is invariably raised against any legislation dealing with civil rights by contending that such legislation interferes with rights reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment.

When the 1957 Civil Rights Act was being considered, it originally included the now famous Title III which would have provided power for the Attorney General to bring injunctive actions against the deprivation of any civil right. Congress not only rejected Title III, but also restricted the courts in punishing those who violated the voting rights laws, by requiring jury trials under certain conditions. Senator Strom Thurmond (D., S.C.) established a record filibuster when he carried on a marathon speech against the 1957 act which lasted more than 24 hours.

The only real legislative problem, as this writer sees it, is the one involving the attitudes of all southern Congressmen regarding any civil rights legislation. The voting procedure in the House is such that favorable action can be taken on proposals before that body in a relatively short time. It is in the Senate where liberal legislation runs into all sorts of delaying tactics and the powerful filibuster.

HOUSE VOTING PROCEDURE

The House generally resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole when it is considering any major legislation and frequently does so on other bills upon acceptance of a motion by a member. The Speaker appoints a chairman and the rules of the House permit the Committee of the Whole to meet with any 100 members on the floor and to act on legislation or amendments with the quorum of 100 members present. An agreement is reached regarding the time to be spent in general debate on the bill and this time is equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill. When the time for general debate has expired the bill is then read section by section for amendments. Although debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes normally, it is fairly common for time to be extended by unanimous consent or by resort to the use of some dilatory motion in order for a member to get in extra debate.

Votes in the Committee of the Whole are not on record but are by voice vote or by teller vote. The teller vote is obtained by having members walk down the aisle past counters who have been appointed. The total number of yea and nay votes are recorded concerning the actions of the Committee and no record is kept of the way each member votes. It is only on the voting for or against final passage of a bill that a roll call vote is taken. After action by the Committee of the Whole, the chairman reports the action taken to the House and gives the Committee's recommendations. The House then votes on the bill as amended and cannot reconsider any proposals or amendments rejected by the Committee of the Whole; however, it may vote to recommit a bill to the Committee of the Whole with instructions that a rejected proposal be added to the bill.

SENATE DELAYING TACTICS

At least 51 senators must be present to form a quorum to do business, although in many instances the Senate assumes the presence of a quorum when there is no objection. In an effort to delay action on any civil rights bill which is pending it is a common practice for southerners constantly to suggest the absence of a quorum. This requires the Senate Clerk to call the name of each senator and this can take anywhere from 15 minutes to an hour or more. These quorum calls give opponents of civil rights legislation a chance to map strategy or rest from long filibusters. If a quorum is not present then the Senate must either adjourn or direct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent members. If the Senate adjourns, then the Senate begins a new legislative day which requires the reading of the Journal of the preceding day's business, unless dispensed with by unanimous vote. Obviously, opponents to civil rights bills would argue for adjournment whenever possible.

On each new legislative day the Senate usually allows approximately an hour or longer for the introduction of bills, insertions in the Congressional Record, corrections in the Journal of Record and other matters.

Motions to table are frequently used as delaying tactics or to cut off debate. Rules of the Senate require an immediate vote without further debate once a motion to lay an amendment on the table has been made. All sorts of counter motions or motions of reconsideration are frequently tied in with motions to table.

CURRENT LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

Anti-Poll Tax Bill. Congress proposed a Constitutional amendment in its closing daysin the summer of 1962, which would prohibit the requirement of the payment of a poll tax to vote in any elections, including primaries, where federal officials are to be voted upon. Only five states yet retain the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. They are, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia. It is generally felt that the necessary three-fourths of the state legislatures will soon ratify the proposed amendment. Although the proposed amendment would only apply to federal elections, it is generally felt that the five states now requring poll taxes would not adopt two standards of voting requirements, one for state elections and another for federal elections. An effort to make the proposed amendment applicable to state elections was rejected by Congress.

LITERACY TEST

The Civil Rights Commission proposed that Congress declare all persons with at least six grades of schooling literate for voting purposes. A bill designed to set these literacy standards was introduced in Congress early in 1962 but died under a prolonged southern filibuster. It created loud opposition from the South and even from some quarters in the North. Many opponents to such a bill argue strongly that it is unconstitutional, as being in violation of the rights of states guaranteed in Article 1, Section 2, and the 17th Amendment, of the Constitution. Even a liberal such as Representative Emanuel Celler (D., N.Y.) Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, expressed serious doubts regarding the constitutionality of a literacy bill and favored the proposal of an amendment to the Constitution as a solution when the legislation was being considered last year.

According to an article in the Washington Post, January 14, 1963, Representative Celler announced that he will introduce and support the same measure as a simple bill needing only a majority vote in this session of Congress, a radical departure from his position in the last Congress.

The Atlanta Journal of February 4, 1963, carried a story regarding a proposal introduced in the Senate on that date by Senator John Sherman Cooper (R.,Ky.) and Senator Thomas J. Dodd (D.,Conn.).

Their bill would require all states using literacy tests to meet certain standards or do away with the tests. All tests would have to be given and rated in a uniform manner. In case of oral examination, a verbatim transcript would have to be made. The measure would also rule out insignificant errors in grammar and other minor mistakes as disqualifying voter applicants.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The 1961 United States Commission on Civil Rights Report contained the following recommendations:

Qualification of voters

Recommendation 1. - That Congress, acting under section 2 of the 15th amendment and sections 2 and 5 of the 14th amendment, (a) declare that voter qualifications other than age, residence, confinement, and conviction of a crime are susceptible of use, and have been used, to deny the right to vote on grounds of race and color; and (b)enact legislation providing that all citizens of the United States shall have a right to vote in Federal or State elections which shall not be denied or in any way abridged or interfered with by the United States or by any State for any cause except for inability to meet reasonable age or length-of-residence requirements uniformly applied to all persons within a State, legal confinement at the time of registration or election, or conviction of a felony; such right to vote to include the right to register or otherwise qualify to vote, and to have one's vote counted.

Dissent to recommendation 1 by Vice Chairman Storey

As pointed out in the 1959 report of this Commission, I strongly believe in the right of every qualified citizen of the United States, irrespective of his color, race, religion, or national origin, to register, vote, and have his vote counted. Full protection of these rights of suffrage by both State and Federal Governments is necessary and proper. However, I cannot join in so sweeping a recommendation as this.

Proposals to alter longstanding Federal-State relationships such as that incorporated in the Federal Constitution, declaring that the qualifications of electors shall be left to the several States, should not be made unless there is no alternative method to correct an existing evil. Such is not the case today.

The Federal Government has sufficient authority under the Constitution and the existing framework of laws to enable it effectively to deal with denials of the right to vote by reason of race, color, religion, and national origin.

The Civil Rights Act of 1957 authorized the Attorney General to institute civil suit in the Federal courts to prevent the denial of voting rights. The Civil Rights Act of 1960 provides that if in any such suit the court makes a finding that the denial of voting rights is "pursuant to a pattern or practice," the court may appoint voting referees to register qualified persons denied this right by local election officials. The further denial of the right to vote to these persons so registered by the court-appointed voting referees constitutes contempt of court and is punishable accordingly. The vigor with which these Civil Rights Acts are applied will significantly affect the extent to which voting denial practices will be discontinued.

Many States have voting requirements more extensive than age or length of residence, incarceration, or felony convictions. These qualifications, having nothing to do with race, religion, or national origin, are an important element in preserving the sanctity of the ballot. They are specific disqualifications which are felt justifiable for the good of the State. Disqualifications of persons whose mental condition makes it impossible for them competently to exercise the discrimination necessary in voting has long been accepted. Many States disqualify paupers supported by municipal or county officials on the theory that these people are too easily exploitable by such officials for their own purposes. The security and purity of the ballot can be destroyed by permitting illiterates to vote. And as the English language is still the official language of the United States, there is good justification for States requiring that voters have at least a rudimentary knowledge of this language.

Dissent to Recommendation 1 by Commissioner Rankin

I join in the dissenting statement of Vice Chairman Storey but would add the following personal comment.

The 15th amendment has been a part of our Constitution for almost a century, and Congress has never interpreted it as a mandate to usurp the power of each State to determine the qualifications of electors.

In 1957 and again in 1960, Congress did enact legislation to provide protection of the right to register and vote without discrimination on grounds of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It may be that further legislation will be required to reinforce the guarantees of the 15th amendment and of the 1957 and 1960 laws. But such measures should be kept within the well-recognized bounds of our Constitution and laws.

Our object must be compliance with the Constitution, not punishment, and for that reason I do not deem it wise to upset the balance of our Federal system to reach a result which can be achieved through less drastic means.

Recommendation 2. - That Congress enact legislation providing that in all elections in which, under State law, a "literacy" test, an "understanding" or "interpretation" test, or an "educational" test is administered to determine the qualifications of electors, it shall be sufficient for qualification that the elector have completed at least six grades of formal education.

Interference with the right to vote

Recommendation 3. - That Congress amend subsection (b) of 42 U.S.C. 1971 to prohibit any arbitrary action or (where there is a duty to act) arbitrary inaction, which deprives or threatens to deprive any person of the right to register, vote, and have that vote counted in any Federal election.

Dilution of the right to vote

Recommendation 4. - That Congress consider the advisability of enacting legislation (a) requiring that where voting districts are established within a State, for either Federal elections or State elections to any house of a State legislature which is elected on the basis of population, they shall be substantially equal in population; and (b) specifically granting the Federal courts jurisdiction of suits to enforce the requirements of the Constitution and of Federal law with regard to such electoral districts; but explicitly providing that such jurisdiction should not be deemed to preclude the jurisdiction of State courts to enforce rights provided under State law regarding such districts.

Statistical information

.. Recommendation 5.- That Congress direct the Bureau of the Census promptly to initiate a nationwide compilation of registration and voting statistics, to include a count of persons of voting age in every State and territory by race, color, and national origin, who are registered to vote, and a determination of the extent to which such persons have voted since January 1, 1960; and requiring that the Bureau of the Census compile such information in each next succeeding decennial census, and at such other time or times as the Congress may direct.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY AUTHOR

This writer concurs in each of the recommendations proposed by the Commission on Civil Rights and the proposals now pending in Congress which are designed to help remove the barriers to Negro registration, and proposes the following additional measures:

Author's Recommendation No. 1.
CREATION OF A COURT OF CIVIL RIGHTS

It is a well known fact that many federal judges in the South have contributed to the delay in the enforcement of civil rights legislation in many different ways. There are several cases involving civil rights which have been filed for more than a year and attorneys for the plaintiffs have been unable to get a hearing date set. When the cases are set for trial they are frequently passed at the last minute upon the flimsiest of excuses, all to the frustration of the plaintiffs. District judges have been known to hand down decisions which they surely must have known would be reversed on appeal, but they nevertheless ruled for the southern defendants and delay. Another tactic resorted to by judges cooperative to the South is to hear all of the testimony and evidence and then "take the matter under advisement." Many cases have been "under advisement" for several months, and in some instances for over a year, before an opinion was handed down. Although judges should not allow their personal feelings or fear of social ostracism from their neighbors and friends to interfere with their decisions in civil rights litigation, nevertheless, we must recognize the fact that such interferences do occur, and often.

To off-set such delaying tactics and speed up the administration of justice in civil rights cases, this author would recommend the creation of a Court of Civil Rights. We have previously recognized the need for special courts to handle litigation requiring special skills or which raise unusual problems. This is why we have our Customs Court, the Tax Court of the United States, United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, Court of Claims and the Court of Military Appeals.

A Court of Civil Rights should be created to hear all matters involving primarily the question of discrimination or a denial of some guarantee of Constitutional rights or federally protected right on account of race, creed or color. A sufficient number of Civil Rights Judges should be appointed in each Circuit to preside over Civil Rights Courts within the judicial circuit, regardless of district court boundary lines. Appeals could be taken from the Civil Rights Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the case arose, or, a special Court of Civil Rights Appeals could be created to hear such matters. This would relieve the federal district courts of all civil rights legislation and would serve also to help relieve the crowded district court dockets. A Court of Civil Rights might be created to take jurisdiction of civil rights litigation for a period of from ten to twenty years or such period of time as would be necessary to reduce the necessity for much civil rights litigation.

Author's Recommendation No.2

This writer recommends that necessary legislation be enacted to require that civil rights litigation take precedence over all other types of cases, in much the same manner as habeas corpus and mandamus actions. Such precedence should not take place as a matter of course but should be discretionary at the request of the plaintiff because there are situations where a delay in a hearing might work to the best interest of all parties concerned, including the plaintiff's.

Such a provision might also be incorporated into the rules of procedure for the Court of Civil Rights proposed in Author's Recommendation No. 1 above.

In the absence of a Court of Civil Rights, Recommendation No. 2 could be enacted so as to require federal district courts to both hear and decide civil rights litigation without unnecessary delay.

Conclusion:

I have not undertaken to burden the participants of this conference with stories and accounts of the harassment, intimidation and physical violence directed against persons active in voter registration in the South, as the news media carry many accounts every week regarding such difficulties. It is assumed that the parties are fully aware of the many problems and obstacles confronting the voter registration efforts in the South and this paper is intended to serve solely as background information to stimulate thinking and discussion on proposed legislation which might be offered to correct the problems which now exist.

Dear Wiley:

There have been some developments since our meeting at Notre Dame which I think may interest you. On Wednesday, February 20, Harold Fleming, John Silard, Bill Taylor and I had a long meeting with Burke Marshall in the Justice Department. The Administration, as we then understood it, had before it a number of proposals for possible introduction in the Congress. It did not then appear that any firm decision had been made concerning the scope of any Administration bill, but there is some reason to hope that there will be included at least some recommendations respecting education.

We learned also on the 20th that Senator Paul Douglas had put in the Congressional Record a copy of the preliminary report prepared by Leslie Dunbar and John Silard. Since it had not been my impression that we had intended at Notre Dame any more than a private circulation of the preliminary draft, I felt it desirable to write Senator Douglas explaining the context out of which the preliminary report had come and requesting that he also insert my letter in the Record to clarify things a bit. You will find enclosed copies both of the preliminary report and my letter to the senator. I hope that the effort I made in writing the letter will satisfy you as a reflection of the position taken generally by the Conference on the voting question.

After our meeting in Justice, we asked Leslie Dunbar to send Burke Marshall immediately a summary of the education recommendations the Conference had made. Burke seemed much interested in these and, hopefully, we may be able to influence somewhat the decision the Administration is likely to make in the next several weeks. Burke has also promised to let us know as promptly as possible the nature of the Administration's recommendations, and these will be sent you as quickly as they are in hand. It seems to me useful to do these things, since all of us will want to read Leslie Dunbar's report of the Conference in light of subsequent developments.

Do let me know if you have any further thoughts on the matter, for I have felt some hesitation in taking the actions just described without first clearing with all of you. My reason for it, however, was that it seemed essential to act promptly in the manner in which I did.

Faithfully,

Bill

Enclosures

February 20, 1963

The Honorable Paul H. Douglas United States Senate
Washington 25, D. C.

Dear Senator Douglas:

I have just learned that you placed in today's Congressional Record the preliminary draft report on "Voting Rights" from the Notre Dame Conference on Civil Rights, held February 8-10, 1963.

Lest there be misunderstanding, I think it important that the context in which the report came out of the Conference be fully understood. Several points are of significance.

The Conference addressed its attention to civil rights problems in the fields of education, employment and voting. As to these three, it was a strongly held consensus of the Conference that both education and employment more urgently need Congressional attention than does voting. It was also recognized that the major recent Congressional efforts have focused exclusively upon voting to the substantial detriment of attention and effort in other areas of civil rights. The opposition voiced, then, in the preliminary report was meant to apply to another legislative drive which would seriously concern itself only with voting problems.

The Conference felt there should be a broader focus of attention upon civil rights, specifically facing up to problems in education and employment. If, in that larger context, some improvements in voting machinery were included, I do not believe the conferees intended to commit themselves against such changes where it can be demonstrated that experience justifies them.

It was, however, the consensus that existing machinery for enforcement of voting rights stands in less need of attention than do other areas of civil rights. Existing legislation and maturing experience under it in the courts are, in the Conference view, generally sufficient to do the job, provided that the full resources of the Executive Branch are energetically used and that Congress sees to it that sufficient staff is provided the Department of Justice.

The final report of the Conference will not be ready for publication until mid-April. Since the preliminary report on voting rights has been made public through the Congressional Record. I would appreciate having you insert this letter in the Congressional Record also for purposes of clarifying the context out of which it came.

Sincerely,

A Preliminary Report on Voting Rights from the Notre Dame Conference on Civil Rights, February 8-10, 1963.

The conference considered needs for new or improved Congressional legislation to strengthen education, employment, and voting rights and opportunities. A full report of the conference's conclusions with recommendations for new legislation in the fields of education and employment will be issued later. This preliminary report sets forth the consensus reached regarding the need for additional voting legislation, because the conferees understood that this was a matter of current legislative interest.

The conclusion of the conference was that discrimination against voting rights is an abuse which can be amply and sufficiently corrected by the authority and powers now possessed by the Executive Department and by the Federal courts. Further legislation at this time would be, therefore, unnecessary and the inevitable legislative struggle to enact it could well hinder the prompt and thorough enforcement of present law.

Participants in the conference were Carl A. Auerbach, University of Minnesota Law School; Wiley A. Branton, Voter Education Project; Thomas F. Broden, Jr., Notre Dame Law School; Leslie W. Dunbar, Southern Regional Council; John G. Feild, President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity; Harold C. Fleming, The Potomac Institute; G. W. Foster, Jr., Law School, University of Wisconsin; Eli Ginzberg, Conservation of Human Resources, Columbia University; Vivian W. Henderson, Economics, Fisk University; Paul H. Norgren, Industrial Relations Section, Princeton University; Dean Joseph O'Meara, Notre Dame Law School; John de J. Pemberton, American Civil Liberties Union; Daniel H. Pollitt, University of North Carolina Law School; John Silard, Attorney, Washington, D. C.; Michael I. Sovern, Columbia University School of Law; William Taylor, U. S. Commission on Civil Rights; John H. Wheeler, Attorney, Durham, North Carolina.

Recent examples conclusively demonstrate that a number of southern communities do not yet intend to permit free Negro registration. The obstructions used are many. They include acts of private violence, such as church burnings in two counties of southwest Georgia, and several shocking cases of violence against persons or personal property, in the same area of Georgia and in Amite and Sunflower counties of Mississippi. There have been, as well, instances where officials have violently treated registration workers, as recognized in the Federal action brought, unsuccessfully, against a police official of Terrell County (Ga.). Retaliatory arrests have been common against registration workers, on charges as frivolous and essentially contemptuous as loitering, when in a moving automobile. In counties of the Mississippi Delta, water service and tax exemption of Negro churches used for registration meetings have been discontinued, and distribution of Federal surplus food commodities cut off. There is harassment and intimidation by private persons as well. Negroes asserting their constitutional rights have frequently been discharged from jobs or had their local credit suspended.

These tactics describe a system whereby, standing between the Negro and his constitutional right, there is massive intimidation calculated to induce acute personal insecurity. To the Negro of one of these counties, natural authority and power must, even now in 1963, seem far less real than that of his hostile community.

In most of such areas, and particularly in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi there is the added factor of literacy requirements administered unfairly and with deliberate intent to disqualify all or almost all Negroes applying. Cases under the laws of 1957 and 1960 have demonstrated that this problem can be reached by Federal courts. The abuse continues, however, and in Mississippi is aggravated by a statutory requirement of publication of names of applicants for registration, thus advertising every Negro seeking to exercise the responsibilities of citizenship. Louisiana has revised its literacy tests to make them more resistant to Negro success. The suit filed some months ago by the Department of Justice against the State of Mississippi, but not yet brought to trial, may strike at the roots of the literacy test problem; it almost certainly, however, will be long in the courts.

Voting discrimination is a national disaster, and its demise a necessity for national self-respect. The problem must, therefore, be seen clearly and candidly. As of now, voting discrimination occurs, with but few exceptions, only against Negroes and only in some localities of the South. By their defiance of the constitutional order, these places are virtually outlaw communities. New and more refined legislative remedies are not required to reach this blatant defiance of constitutional and statutory rights. Systematic enforcement of present law can provide full relief.

The objective should be that, by the next Federal election, voting discrimination will be everywhere eradicated. Remembering that flagrant discrimination occurs in only a fraction of southern locales, achievement of the objective through the forthright use of executive and judicial authority is not unrealistic.

Throughout southern states today, an unprecedented and determined effort is being made by Negroes to broaden the electorate. In many parts of the South this is altogether a matter of self-help. But in the areas of discrimination, Negro efforts to register are met by determined resistance from both official and private sources, and Federal help is absolutely required.

Given the fact of this uniquely intensive Negro effort, there can be clearly foreseen a multiplication of incidents requiring Federal attention. The Federal executive should enforce strictly the Federal right to register and vote, as these rights are claimed and asserted by large numbers who never before have done so, in communities which never before have tolerated them.

The Federal executive has ample authority to secure voter registration from all manner of obstructions. Lawlessness may be contained and disarmed, if a clear Federal presence is provided at the first sign of obstruction or retaliation. To this end, Federal marshalls can forthwith be dispatched to the scene. Federal attorneys can move without delay to secure protective orders from the courts. To contain the spread of unlawful obstruction, the protective authority of Federal courts and law enforcement officials must be clear and present, so as to denote the certainty of the Federal commitment.

Nor can the Federal protection be limited to guarantee of physical security for persons and possessions. Where authorities employ economic threats or sanctions, or conspire with private parties to this purpose, the executive can move swiftly and surely. Where necessary, protective injunctions can reach the entire local officialdom. Economic retaliation can be redressed by Federal supports for the victims. And Federal privileges cannot be continued for Constitution violators. They must be reminded that the executive authority reaches far and it reaches deep, when fundamental rights are in jeopardy.

A principal means for achieving nationwide enfranchisement inheres in the authority of Federal courts. The Department of Justice has recently filed numerous suits where registration officials continue to bar qualified Negro voters. In these cases the courts have ample power.

But a long road lies between the filing of a suit and the actual enfranchisement. In the brief months until the 1964 elections, numerous pending suits must be tried and resolved. Decrees must be entered and fair registration provided in time to allow thousands of previously disfranchised voters the right of the ballot. Present efforts will not achieve this goal. Also, there has to be candid recognition that some district judges have not been interested in the expeditious settlement of civil rights cases. The Department of Justice must more urgently seek to bring its cases to trial, even over the reluctance of busy or unenthusiastic Federal judges. Decrees can be sought which will provide more meaningful relief to all previously denied their constitutional rights. Where literacy tests have been instruments of abuse, their continued use can be enjoined. Registration powers can be taken from the hands of officials who have flouted the Federal Constitution. The government must seek not merely to unlock the doors of the voting booth for Negro citizens, but to open the doors as clearly as they were previously closed to Negro applicants.

Finally, the time has come for Federal recognition of power and obligation to assist by affirmative support the enfranchisement of Negro citizens. By encouraging the registration of populations previously barred from the ballot, the Government could to some extent redress past injustices. By posters in Federal buildings and on Federal mail trucks, the President can communicate the message of liberty. Thus can we replace the ingrained image of official discrimination, to announce that government has opened the polls for our minority citizens.

The means of defiance are varied and potent, but the combined power of Federal courts and executive is greater by far. In these circumstances, another effort at Congressional voting rights legislation appears misguided. No new law is now required, while two recent enactments and the reservoir of executive authority are yet to be wholly tested. Another legislative debate could only serve to obscure the magnitude of available authority to achieve the necessary objective.

Dear Mr. Willis:

Pursuant to your request of February 21st, I am enclosing herein a copy of my paper "Registration and Voting in the South" which I distributed at the lawyers meeting. I am only able to furnish you one copy because of the fact that we only have a limited number remaining.

We joked about my failure to come through with some money for your Memphis registration project, but I would like to get the chance to tell you what we had actually done.

When the voting project was first organized, we launched ninety-day crash programs in order to get off the ground, and funds were given to the NAACP for work in the Memphis area. On September 10, 1962, we made a further grant to the NAACP in the amount of $5,000 for work in Tennessee, the bulk of which was to be spent in Memphis and surrounding counties. I mention this only to show we are contributing money toward registration in your city, and I would appreciate any comments you might have regarding the effectiveness of this program.

Events have overtaken us, and the report of the Notre Dame Conference must be got out quickly, if it is to have the attention we all desired.

A group of the conferees met with me in Washington on June 28 to review a draft I had prepared. My draft was revised and improved as per the enclosure.

This comes to you, therefore, with the approval of Feild, Fleming, Pemberton, Pollitt, Silard, and Dunbar.

CAN YOU REVIEW AT ONCE?

Please write or phone your comments to Harold Fleming by July 8 if at all possible.

Dear Leslie:

It has not been possible for me to read the draft enclosed with your letter of June 24, except the introductory portion. Tom Broden has read it, however, and has sent me a memorandum in which he describes it as "an excellent job". He then appends the following comment:

> "While I agree with Les' version of American history (with one or two exceptions) on pp.3-6, I'm sure many would be inflamed by it. Is this part of the introduction necessary? Could pp.3-6 be deleted without great loss?"

I know less history than either of you but it does occur to me that the pages Tom refers to do not reflect anything said or done at the Conference. The views you express may be wholly right, and it is not my purpose to take issue with them. Tom's comment has raised the question, however, it seems to me, whether this expression of your views is appropriate in a report of the Conference.

I tried to get Tom on the telephone to ask him to write you directly about the matter. As I could not reach him immediately I decided to write you myself and ask him at the first opportunity to send on any supplementary comments he may have to offer.

With all best wishes, I am

CIVIL RIGHTS CONFERENCE, FEBRUARY 14, 1960, NOTRE DAME LAW SCHOOL, NOTRE DAME, IND.

Dean O'MEARA. The Civil Rights Conference will come to order. We want this to be informal, so I'm going to sit down for the few remarks I have to make to begin with.

America is equal opportunity or it is nothing: not equal opportunity as regards this or that, but equal opportunity in every area of American life. In all frankness, I do not see how an American could seriously challenge this proposition. We have our differences as to method and timing, but the central idea, the affirmation of equal opportunity for all, is not only part of the American dream but a built-in and essential feature of the fundamental law of the land. That is a postulate of this conference. We are met to consider how best to bring the promise of the Constitution to fulfillment.

On this day, Sunday, a day on which many of us are expected to concern ourselves in a special way with spiritual values, and in these academic surroundings I hope we will be able to lay aside prejudices and partisan considerations and approach this important subject with as much objectivity as humans are capable of.

As you know, each of the three areas of discussion is to be introduced by a short statement by a member of the Notre Dame law faculty. Then will come the discussion, in which I hope everyone will feel free to participate, both by question and by comment. This is the heart of the conference, and it will be fruitful in proportion as the discussion is frank and perceptive and stimulating.

Before we get to that, however, I have the very real privilege of presenting to you to say a word of welcome the president of the University of Notre Dame, Father Theodore M. Hesburgh.

Father HESBURGH. Thank you, Dean O'Meara. Governor Williams, Senator DOUGLAS, distinguished guests, dear friends.

I trust that the brevity of my remarks this morning will not detract from the very real fact that we are simply delighted to have all of you with us for this most important occasion. I think it just another experi-

I regret the delay in getting this copy to you, and hope that you receive it before leaving for Notre Dame. If not, copies will be available at the conference.

Legislative Problems

Minority groups have depended principally on judicial decisions for implementing the basic guarantees of civil rights. These judicial decisions prior to the Civil Rights Act of 1957 resulted largely from slowly expanding liberal interpretations of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Congress passed a number of civil rights acts during the first ten years following the Civil War, but unfortunately most of these civil rights laws were nullified by other laws or narrowly constructed or struck down by the courts. It was only by a more liberal construction of the Fourteenth Amendment and its application to the point in question that many of the decisions favorable to civil rights came into being. Although Congress was empowered to enforce the provisions of the 13th, 14th & 15th Amendments "by appropriate legislation", it was not able to get a single civil rights act passed until 1957. Anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, FEPC and other proposals had been introduced repeatedly, but all had failed to get the necessary votes to even kill the filibusters of southern Congressmen.

President Roosevelt set up a civil rights section in the Justice Department in 1939 by administrative action. All of the party platforms since 1944 of the Democrats and Republicans have included fairly good civil rights planks. Many people feel that the ballot is the most powerful weapon which minorities can use and that if enough Negroes are given the right to vote that many civil rights problems will be settled at the ballot box.

Southerners are more unified in their fight against civil right legislation than on any other proposal. The question of states' rights is invariably raised against any legislation dealing with civil rights by contending that such legislation interferes with rights reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment.

When the 1957 Civil Right Act was being considered, it originally included the now famous Title III which would have provided power for the Attorney General to bring injunction actions against the deprivation of any civil right. Congress not only rejected Title III, but also restricted the courts in punishing those who violated the voting rights laws, by requiring jury trials under certain conditions. Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) established a record filibuster against the 1957 act when he carried on a marathon speech lasting more than 24 hours.

The only real legislative problem, as this writer sees it, is the one involving the attitude of all southern congressmen regarding any civil rights legislation. The voting procedure in the House is such that favorable action can be taken on proposals before that body in a relatively short time. It is in the Senate where liberal legislation runs into all sorts of delaying tactics, the powerful filibuster.

HOUSE VOTING PROCEDURE

The House generally resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole when it is considering any major legislation and frequently does so on other bills upon acceptance of a motion by a Member. The Speaker appoints a Chairman and the Rules of the House permit the Committee of the Whole to meet with any 100 Members on the floor and to act on legislation or amendments with the quorum of 100 Members present. An agreement is reached regarding the time to be spent in general debate on the bill and this time is equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill. When the time for general debate has expired the bill is then read section by section for amendments. Although debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes normally, it is fairly common for this to be extended by unanimous consent or by resort to the use of some dilatory motion in order for a Member to get in extra debate.

Votes in the Committee on the whole are not on record but are by voice vote or by teller vote. The teller vote is obtained by having Members march down the aisle past counters who have been appointed. The total number of yea and nay votes are recorded concerning the actions of the Committee and no record is kept of the ~~vote~~ way each Member votes. It is only on the voting for or against final passage of a bill that a roll call vote is taken. After action by the Committee of the Whole, the Chairman reports the action taken to the House and gives the committee's recommendations. The House then votes on the bill as amended and cannot reconsider any proposals or amendments rejected by the Committee on the Whole, however, it may vote to recommit a bill to the Committee on the Whole ~~to~~ with instructions that a rejected proposal be added to the bill.

SENATE ~~VOTING PROCEDURE~~ DELAYING TACTICS

At least 51 Senators must be present to form a quorum to do business, although, in many instances the Senate assumes the presence of a quorum when there is no objection. In an effort to delay action on any civil rights bill which is pending, it is a common practice for Southerners to constantly suggest the absence of a quorum. This requires the Senate Clerk to call the name of each Senator and this can take any where from 15 minutes to an hour or more. These quorum calls give opponents of civil rights legislation a chance to ~~sing~~ strategy or rest from long filibusters. If a quorum is not present then the Senate must either adjourn or direct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent members. If the Senate adjourns, then the Senate begins a new legislative day which requires the reading of the Journal of the preceding day's business, unless dispensed with by unanimous vote. Obviously, opponents to civil rights bills would argue for adjournment whenever possible.

Motions to table are frequently used as delaying tactics or to cut off debate. Rules of the Senate require an immediate vote without further debate once a motion to lay an amendment on the table has been made. All sorts of counter motions or motions of reconsideration are frequently tied in with motions to table.

On each new legislative day the Senate usually allows ~~a suspension of~~ approximately an hour or longer for the introduction of bills, ~~insertion~~ insertions in the Congressional Record, corrections in the Journal & Record and other matters.

CURRENT LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

ANTI-POLL TAX BILL. ~~The~~ Congress ~~enacted~~ proposed a Constitutional Amendment in ~~which~~ in ~~the~~ the closing days in the summer of 1962 which would prohibit the requirement of the payment of a poll tax to vote in any election, including primaries, where federal officials are to be voted upon. Only five states yet retain the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. They are, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia. It is generally felt that the necessary three-fourths of the state legislatures will soon ratify the proposed amendment. Although the proposed amendment would only apply to federal elections, it is generally felt that the 5 states now requiring poll taxes would not adopt two standards of voting requirement, one for state elections and another for federal elections. An effort to make the proposed amendment applicable to state elections was rejected by Congress.

LITERACY TEST — The Civil Rights Commission proposed that Congress declare all persons with at least six grades of schooling literate for voting purposes. A bill designed to set these Congress in literacy standards was introduced in early 1962 but died under a prolonged Southern filibuster. It created loud opposition from the South and even from some quarters in the North. Many opponents to such a bill argue strongly that it is unconstitutional as being in violation of the rights of states guaranteed in Article 1, Section 2 and the 17th Amendment of the Constitution. Even a liberal such as Representative Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, expressed serious doubts regarding the constitutionality of a literacy bill and favored the proposal of an amendment to the Constitution as a solution when the legislation was being considered last year.

According to an article in THE WASHINGTON POST dated January 14, 1963, Representative Celler announced that he will introduce and support the same measure or a simple bill ~~in this session of Congress~~ needing only a majority vote in this session of Congress, a radical departure from his position in the last Congress.

The ~~Atl~~ ATLANTA JOURNAL of February 4, 1963, carried a story regarding a proposal introduced in the Senate on that date by Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) and Sen. Thomas Dodd (D-Conn.). Their bill would require all states using literacy tests to meet certain standards or do away with the tests. All tests would have to be given and rated in a uniform manner. In case of oral examination, a verbatim transcript would have to be made. The measure would also rule out insignificant errors in grammar and other minor mistakes as disqualifying voter applicants.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY
COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

(Note to Jean) copy begin p. 139 – to 142)

The 1961 United States Commission on Civil Rights Report contains the following recommendations:

Recommendations by AUTHOR

This writer ~~[illegible]~~ concurs in each of the recommendations proposed by the Commission on Civil Rights and the proposals now pending in Congress which are designed to ~~[illegible]~~ help remove the barriers to Negro registration, and proposes the following additional measures.

Author's Recommendation No. 1.

CREATION OF A COURT OF CIVIL RIGHTS

It is a well known fact that many federal judges in the South have contributed to the delay in the enforcement of civil rights legislation ~~by~~ in many different ways. There are several cases involving civil rights ~~which~~ which have been filed for more than a year and attorneys for the plaintiffs have been unable to get a hearing date set. When the cases are set for trial they are frequently passed at the last minute upon the flimsiest of excuses, all to the frustration of the plaintiffs. (?) District judges have been known to hand down decisions which they surely must have known would be reversed on appeal, but they nevertheless ruled for the southern defendants and delay. Another tactic resorted to by ~~[illegible]~~ judges cooperative to the South is to hear all of the testimony and evidence and then "take the matter under advisement". Many cases have been "under advisement" for several months, and in some ~~cases~~ instances for over a year, before an opinion was handed down. Although judges should ~~[illegible]~~ not allow their personal feeling or ~~fear~~ fear of social ostracism (sp.?) from their neighbors and friends to interfere with their decisions in civil rights litigation, nevertheless, we must recognize the fact that such interferences do occur, and often.

To offset such delaying tactics and speed up the administration of justice in civil rights cases, this author would recommend the creation of a Court of Civil Rights. We have previously recognized the need for special courts to handle ~~special~~ litigation requiring special skills or which raise unusual problems. This is why we have our Customs Court, the Tax Court of the United States, United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, Court of Claims and the Court of Military Appeals.

A Court of Civil Rights should be created to hear all matters involving primarily the question of discrimination or a denial of some guarantee of Constitutional right or federally protected right on account of race, creed or color. A sufficient number of Civil Rights judges should be appointed in each Circuit to preside over Civil Rights Courts within the judicial circuit, regardless of district court boundary lines. Appeals should be taken from the Civil Rights Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the case arose, or a special Court of Civil Rights Appeals could be created to hear such matters. This would relieve the federal district courts of all civil rights legislation and would serve also to help relieve the crowded district court dockets. A Court of Civil Rights might be created to take jurisdiction of civil rights litigation for a period of from ten to twenty years or such period of time as would be necessary to reduce the necessity for ~~much~~ much civil rights litigation.

Abstract of Present Federal Laws ~~Relating~~ Protecting the Right to Vote

~~Stat 000 Provisions Relating to Voting~~

Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the U.S.

Sec. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Sec. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Civil Rights Act of 1957

Title I. Created Commission on Civil Rights ~~of~~ composed of six members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be from the same political party.

Empowered the Commission to investigate allegations that certain citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and have that vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion or national origin.

Title II. – Authorized the appointment of one additional Assistant Attorney General in the Department of Justice.

Title III. Extended the jurisdiction of the federal district courts to include any civil action begun to recover damages or secure equitable relief under any Act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights, including the right to vote.

Title IV. Prohibits attempts to intimidate, threaten or coerce any person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote in general or primary elections for federal officials.

Empowered the Attorney General to seek an injunction when any ~~individual~~ person is about to engage to protect the right to register and vote. Even ~~though there has been a~~ several suits have been brought by the Department of Justice to protect the right of Negroes to vote under the Civil Rights Acts and there has been a continued increase in Negro registration, nevertheless, Negro registration figures are much too low and additional measures must be taken to remove the barriers from Negro registration.

in any act or practice which would deprive another of ~~his~~ his right to vote.

Gave district courts jurisdiction of above proceedings and provided that administrative remedies need not be first exhausted.

Provided for right of counsel and production of witnesses for any person cited for contempt.

Title V.—

Provided punishment by fine or imprisonment upon conviction in criminal contempt cases arising from provisions of Civil Rights Act of 1957

Set maximum fine for an individual under these provisions at $1,000 or six months in jail, or both.

Allowed the judge to decide whether defendant in a criminal case involving voting rights would be tried before the court or with a jury.

Provided for trial de novo before a jury for any defendant found guilty in trial before the Court and given a sentence in excess of forty-five days or fined in excess of $300.

Civil Rights Act of 1960

Title I – Provided that anyone who attempts to prevent, obstruct, impede or interfere with the due exercise of rights or the performance of duties under any order of a Court of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Such acts could be enjoined by private suits seeking Court injunctions even though acts may be criminal in nature.

Title II –

Required every election official to preserve for a period of twenty-two months all records and papers pertaining to all federal elections, including primaries, all papers relating to registration or voting for that election. Provides fine up to $1,000 or imprisonment up to one year, or both, for any person convicted for violation of requirement, or for anyone convicted for willfully stealing, destroying, concealing, mutilating or altering the registration records.

Required that such records be turned over to Attorney General or his representative upon demand in writing for inspection, reproduction and copying at the office of records custodian.

Prohibits disclosure of information regarding records by Justice Department except to Congress, governmental agencies or before a Court or grand jury.

Vests district court in district where demand for records is made with jurisdiction to compel the production of such record or papers.

Title IV. Empowered the members of the Civil Rights Commission to administer oaths and take sworn statements.

Title VI. —

Provided that where court finds that any person has been deprived of right to register or vote in violation of Civil Rights Act of 1957, Attorney General may then ask court to make a finding whether such deprivation was or is pursuant to a pattern or practice.

If court found such a "pattern or practice" of racial discrimination, then any person of such race (Negroes) living in the affected area could apply to the court for an order declaring him qualified to vote if he proved (1) he was qualified to vote under state law; (2) he had tried to register after the "pattern or practice" finding; and (3) he had not been allowed to register or had been found unqualified by the registrar.

The application for such an order shall be heard within ten days and any order for actual registration shall be effective for as long as applicant ~~could~~ would have been ~~registered~~ qualified if registered under state law. Election officials would be furnished copies of order and disobedience of same would constitute contempt of court.

To carry out the provisions of the order, the Court may appoint one or more voting referees, who must be qualified voters in the judicial district. Referees would ~~hear the applicant's testimony & report~~ receive the application for registration and hear the applicant's testimony & proofs, including answers to any literacy questions required by state law, and make a report to the Court. A copy of the report of the referee shall be served upon the State Attorney General and on such party, any of whom ~~[illegible]~~ must show cause within ten days, or shorter time as the Court may fix, why an order of the court should not be entered in accordance with such report. If exceptions to the report are filed on issues of fact then it must be supported by a verified copy of a public record or by affidavits of persons having personal knowledge of such facts or matter contained in the report; those relating to matters of law shall be supported by a memorandum of law. Issues of fact and law shall be determined by the Court (or by referee if Court directs) and a hearing shall be held only if it appears that there is a genuine issue of material fact. If the exceptions are dismissed, then the Court or referee could issue a certificate declaring the applicant qualified to vote.

If an applicant applies for such a certificate twenty or more days prior to an election which is undetermined by the ~~time~~ time of such election, the court shall issue an order authorizing the applicant to vote provisionally, provided applicant shall be qualified to vote under state law. Such an order is discretionary with the court where application is filed within twenty days prior to an election.

Voting referees would have the powers conferred upon a master by Rule 53(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (right to subpoena records, administer oaths, hear testimony etc.). Court may take any action necessary or appropriate to enforce its decrees and is not limited solely to the order allowing an applicant to vote.

~~The acts or practices of the registrar or other officials~~

In any action instituted under these provisions, the discriminatory acts or practices of state officials shall be deemed that of the state and the state may be joined as a party defendant. If official resigns or is relieved of office ~~prior to institution of suit then~~ and no successor has ~~been~~ assumed such office, the state itself could be sued.

REGISTRATION AND VOTING IN THE SOUTH
Proposals for Congressional Action

Introduction

Shortly after the White Primary was outlawed in 1944,[1] voter registration by Negroes in the South rose rapidly from a few hundred thousand so that by 1947, there were 595,000 registered Negro voters in the eleven southern states.[2] By 1952, there were slightly over a million registered Negroes in the South, and by 1956, the number stood at 1,238,038. Legislative Problems

Minority groups have depended principally on judicial decisions for implementing the basic guarantees of civil rights. These judicial decisions prior to the Civil Rights Act of 1957 resulted largely from slowly expanding liberal interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Congress passed a number of civil rights acts during the first ten years following the Civil War, but, unfortunately, most of these civil rights laws were nullified by other laws or narrowly constructed or struck down by the courts. It was only by a more liberal construction of the Fourteenth Amendment and its application to the point in question that many of the decisions favorable to civil rights came into being. Although Congress was empowered to enforce the provisions of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments "by appropriate legislation," it was not able to get a single civil rights act passed until 1957. Anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, FEPC and other proposals had been introduced repeatedly, but all had failed to get the necessary votes to even kill the filibusters of southern Congressmen.

President Roosevelt set up a civil rights section in the Justice Department in 1939 by adminstrative action. All of the party platforms since 1944, of the Democrats and Republicans, have included fairly good civil rights planks. Many people feel that the ballot is the most powerful weapon which minorities can use and that if enough Negroes are given the right to vote that many civil rights problems will be settled at the ballot box.

Southerners are more unified in their fight against civil rights legislation than on any other proposal. The question of states' rights is invariably raised against any legislation dealing with civil rights by contending that such legislation interferes with rights reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment.

When the 1957 Civil Rights Act was being considered, it originally included the now famous Title III which would have provided power for the Attorney General to bring injunctive actions against the deprivation of any civil right. Congress not only rejected Title III, but also restricted the courts in punishing those who violated the voting rights laws, by requiring jury trials under certain conditions. Senator Strom Thurmond (D., S.C.) established a record filibuster when he carried on a marathon speech against the 1957 act which lasted more than 24 hours.

The only real legislative problem, as this writer sees it, is the one involving the attitudes of all southern Congressmen regarding any civil rights legislation. The voting procedure in the House is such that favorable action can be taken on proposals before that body in a relatively short time. It is in the Senate where liberal legislation runs into all sorts of delaying tactics and the powerful filibuster.

HOUSE VOTING PROCEDURE

The House generally resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole when it is considering any major legislation and frequently does so on other bills upon acceptance of a motion by a member. The Speaker appoints a chairman and the rules of the House permit the Committee of the Whole to meet with any 100 members on the floor and to act on legislation or amendments with the quorum of 100 members present. An agreement is reached regarding the time to be spent in general debate on the bill and this time is equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill. When the time for general debate has expired the bill is then read section by section for amendments. Although debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes normally, it is fairly common for time to be extended by unanimous consent or by resort to the use of some dilatory motion in order for a member to get in extra debate.

Votes in the Committee of the Whole are not on record but are by voice vote or by teller vote. The teller vote is obtained by having members walk down the aisle past counters who have been appointed. The total number of yea and nay votes are recorded concerning the actions of the Committee and no record is kept of the way each member votes. It is only on the voting for or against final passage of a bill that a roll call vote is taken. After action by the Committee of the Whole, the chairman reports the action taken to the House and gives the Committee's recommendations. The House then votes on the bill as amended and cannot reconsider any proposals or amendments rejected by the Committee of the Whole; however, it may vote to recommit a bill to the Committee of the Whole with instructions that a rejected proposal be added to the bill.

SENATE DELAYING TACTICS

At least 51 senators must be present to form a quorum to do business, although in many instances the Senate assumes the presence of a quorum when there is no objection. In an effort to delay action on any civil rights bill which is pending it is a common practice for southerners constantly to suggest the absence of a quorum. This requires the Senate Clerk to call the name of each senator and this can take anywhere from 15 minutes to an hour or more. These quorum calls give opponents of civil rights legislation a chance to map strategy or rest from long filibusters. If a quorum is not present then the Senate must either adjourn or direct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent members. If the Senate adjourns, then the Senate begins a new legislative day which requires the reading of the Journal of the preceding day's business, unless dispensed with by unanimous vote. Obviously, opponents to civil rights bills would argue for adjournment whenever possible.

On each new legislative day the Senate usually allows approximately an hour or longer for the introduction of bills, insertions in the Congressional Record, corrections in the Journal of Record and other matters.

Motions to table are frequently used as delaying tactics or to cut off debate. Rules of the Senate require an immediate vote without further debate once a motion to lay an amendment on the table has been made. All sorts of counter motions or motions of reconsideration are frequently tied in with motions to table.

CURRENT LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

Anti-Poll Tax Bill. Congress proposed a Constitutional amendment in its closing daysin the summer of 1962, which would prohibit the requirement of the payment of a poll tax to vote in any elections, including primaries, where federal officials are to be voted upon. Only five states yet retain the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. They are, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia. It is generally felt that the necessary three-fourths of the state legislatures will soon ratify the proposed amendment. Although the proposed amendment would only apply to federal elections, it is generally felt that the five states now requring poll taxes would not adopt two standards of voting requirements, one for state elections and another for federal elections. An effort to make the proposed amendment applicable to state elections was rejected by Congress.

LITERACY TEST

The Civil Rights Commission proposed that Congress declare all persons with at least six grades of schooling literate for voting purposes. A bill designed to set these literacy standards was introduced in Congress early in 1962 but died under a prolonged southern filibuster. It created loud opposition from the South and even from some quarters in the North. Many opponents to such a bill argue strongly that it is unconstitutional, as being in violation of the rights of states guaranteed in Article 1, Section 2, and the 17th Amendment, of the Constitution. Even a liberal such as Representative Emanuel Celler (D., N.Y.) Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, expressed serious doubts regarding the constitutionality of a literacy bill and favored the proposal of an amendment to the Constitution as a solution when the legislation was being considered last year.

According to an article in the Washington Post, January 14, 1963, Representative Celler announced that he will introduce and support the same measure as a simple bill needing only a majority vote in this session of Congress, a radical departure from his position in the last Congress.

The Atlanta Journal of February 4, 1963, carried a story regarding a proposal introduced in the Senate on that date by Senator John Sherman Cooper (R.,Ky.) and Senator Thomas J. Dodd (D.,Conn.).

Their bill would require all states using literacy tests to meet certain standards or do away with the tests. All tests would have to be given and rated in a uniform manner. In case of oral examination, a verbatim transcript would have to be made. The measure would also rule out insignificant errors in grammar and other minor mistakes as disqualifying voter applicants.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The 1961 United States Commission on Civil Rights Report contained the following recommendations:

Qualification of voters

Recommendation 1. - That Congress, acting under section 2 of the 15th amendment and sections 2 and 5 of the 14th amendment, (a) declare that voter qualifications other than age, residence, confinement, and conviction of a crime are susceptible of use, and have been used, to deny the right to vote on grounds of race and color; and (b)enact legislation providing that all citizens of the United States shall have a right to vote in Federal or State elections which shall not be denied or in any way abridged or interfered with by the United States or by any State for any cause except for inability to meet reasonable age or length-of-residence requirements uniformly applied to all persons within a State, legal confinement at the time of registration or election, or conviction of a felony; such right to vote to include the right to register or otherwise qualify to vote, and to have one's vote counted.

Dissent to recommendation 1 by Vice Chairman Storey

As pointed out in the 1959 report of this Commission, I strongly believe in the right of every qualified citizen of the United States, irrespective of his color, race, religion, or national origin, to register, vote, and have his vote counted. Full protection of these rights of suffrage by both State and Federal Governments is necessary and proper. However, I cannot join in so sweeping a recommendation as this.

Proposals to alter longstanding Federal-State relationships such as that incorporated in the Federal Constitution, declaring that the qualifications of electors shall be left to the several States, should not be made unless there is no alternative method to correct an existing evil. Such is not the case today.

The Federal Government has sufficient authority under the Constitution and the existing framework of laws to enable it effectively to deal with denials of the right to vote by reason of race, color, religion, and national origin.

The Civil Rights Act of 1957 authorized the Attorney General to institute civil suit in the Federal courts to prevent the denial of voting rights. The Civil Rights Act of 1960 provides that if in any such suit the court makes a finding that the denial of voting rights is "pursuant to a pattern or practice," the court may appoint voting referees to register qualified persons denied this right by local election officials. The further denial of the right to vote to these persons so registered by the court-appointed voting referees constitutes contempt of court and is punishable accordingly. The vigor with which these Civil Rights Acts are applied will significantly affect the extent to which voting denial practices will be discontinued.

Many States have voting requirements more extensive than age or length of residence, incarceration, or felony convictions. These qualifications, having nothing to do with race, religion, or national origin, are an important element in preserving the sanctity of the ballot. They are specific disqualifications which are felt justifiable for the good of the State. Disqualifications of persons whose mental condition makes it impossible for them competently to exercise the discrimination necessary in voting has long been accepted. Many States disqualify paupers supported by municipal or county officials on the theory that these people are too easily exploitable by such officials for their own purposes. The security and purity of the ballot can be destroyed by permitting illiterates to vote. And as the English language is still the official language of the United States, there is good justification for States requiring that voters have at least a rudimentary knowledge of this language.

Dissent to Recommendation 1 by Commissioner Rankin

I join in the dissenting statement of Vice Chairman Storey but would add the following personal comment.

The 15th amendment has been a part of our Constitution for almost a century, and Congress has never interpreted it as a mandate to usurp the power of each State to determine the qualifications of electors.

In 1957 and again in 1960, Congress did enact legislation to provide protection of the right to register and vote without discrimination on grounds of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It may be that further legislation will be required to reinforce the guarantees of the 15th amendment and of the 1957 and 1960 laws. But such measures should be kept within the well-recognized bounds of our Constitution and laws.

Our object must be compliance with the Constitution, not punishment, and for that reason I do not deem it wise to upset the balance of our Federal system to reach a result which can be achieved through less drastic means.

Recommendation 2. - That Congress enact legislation providing that in all elections in which, under State law, a "literacy" test, an "understanding" or "interpretation" test, or an "educational" test is administered to determine the qualifications of electors, it shall be sufficient for qualification that the elector have completed at least six grades of formal education.

Interference with the right to vote

Recommendation 3. - That Congress amend subsection (b) of 42 U.S.C. 1971 to prohibit any arbitrary action or (where there is a duty to act) arbitrary inaction, which deprives or threatens to deprive any person of the right to register, vote, and have that vote counted in any Federal election.

Dilution of the right to vote

Recommendation 4. - That Congress consider the advisability of enacting legislation (a) requiring that where voting districts are established within a State, for either Federal elections or State elections to any house of a State legislature which is elected on the basis of population, they shall be substantially equal in population; and (b) specifically granting the Federal courts jurisdiction of suits to enforce the requirements of the Constitution and of Federal law with regard to such electoral districts; but explicitly providing that such jurisdiction should not be deemed to preclude the jurisdiction of State courts to enforce rights provided under State law regarding such districts.

Statistical information

Recommendation 5.- That Congress direct the Bureau of the Census promptly to initiate a nationwide compilation of registration and voting statistics, to include a count of persons of voting age in every State and territory by race, color, and national origin, who are registered to vote, and a determination of the extent to which such persons have voted since January 1, 1960; and requiring that the Bureau of the Census compile such information in each next succeeding decennial census, and at such other time or times as the Congress may direct.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY AUTHOR

This writer concurs in each of the recommendations proposed by the Commission on Civil Rights and the proposals now pending in Congress which are designed to help remove the barriers to Negro registration, and proposes the following additional measures:

Author's Recommendation No. 1.
CREATION OF A COURT OF CIVIL RIGHTS

It is a well known fact that many federal judges in the South have contributed to the delay in the enforcement of civil rights legislation in many different ways. There are several cases involving civil rights which have been filed for more than a year and attorneys for the plaintiffs have been unable to get a hearing date set. When the cases are set for trial they are frequently passed at the last minute upon the flimsiest of excuses, all to the frustration of the plaintiffs. District judges have been known to hand down decisions which they surely must have known would be reversed on appeal, but they nevertheless ruled for the southern defendants and delay. Another tactic resorted to by judges cooperative to the South is to hear all of the testimony and evidence and then "take the matter under advisement." Many cases have been "under advisement" for several months, and in some instances for over a year, before an opinion was handed down. Although judges should not allow their personal feelings or fear of social ostracism from their neighbors and friends to interfere with their decisions in civil rights litigation, nevertheless, we must recognize the fact that such interferences do occur, and often.

To off-set such delaying tactics and speed up the administration of justice in civil rights cases, this author would recommend the creation of a Court of Civil Rights. We have previously recognized the need for special courts to handle litigation requiring special skills or which raise unusual problems. This is why we have our Customs Court, the Tax Court of the United States, United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, Court of Claims and the Court of Military Appeals.

A Court of Civil Rights should be created to hear all matters involving primarily the question of discrimination or a denial of some guarantee of Constitutional rights or federally protected right on account of race, creed or color. A sufficient number of Civil Rights Judges should be appointed in each Circuit to preside over Civil Rights Courts within the judicial circuit, regardless of district court boundary lines. Appeals could be taken from the Civil Rights Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the case arose, or, a special Court of Civil Rights Appeals could be created to hear such matters. This would relieve the federal district courts of all civil rights legislation and would serve also to help relieve the crowded district court dockets. A Court of Civil Rights might be created to take jurisdiction of civil rights litigation for a period of from ten to twenty years or such period of time as would be necessary to reduce the necessity for much civil rights litigation.

Author's Recommendation No.2

This writer recommends that necessary legislation be enacted to require that civil rights litigation take precedence over all other types of cases, in much the same manner as habeas corpus and mandamus actions. Such precedence should not take place as a matter of course but should be discretionary at the request of the plaintiff because there are situations where a delay in a hearing might work to the best interest of all parties concerned, including the plaintiff's.

Such a provision might also be incorporated into the rules of procedure for the Court of Civil Rights proposed in Author's Recommendation No. 1 above.

In the absence of a Court of Civil Rights, Recommendation No. 2 could be enacted so as to require federal district courts to both hear and decide civil rights litigation without unnecessary delay.

Conclusion:

I have not undertaken to burden the participants of this conference with stories and accounts of the harassment, intimidation and physical violence directed against persons active in voter registration in the South, as the news media carry many accounts every week regarding such difficulties. It is assumed that the parties are fully aware of the many problems and obstacles confronting the voter registration efforts in the South and this paper is intended to serve solely as background information to stimulate thinking and discussion on proposed legislation which might be offered to correct the problems which now exist.

Sit-In Demonstrators Infringe All AM&N Students' Rights

MEMORANDUM FROM PRESIDENT LAWRENCE A. DAVIS OF AM&N COLLEGE

To: Students of AM&N College

From: Lawrence A. Davis, President

Re: Sit-In Demonstrations

Date: 11 February 1963

Time: 10:00 a.m.

It has been my constant wish and prayer throughout the twenty-six years of my official association with the College that the "AM&N College Family" would never find itself "a house divided." Much effort and sacrifice have been given to retain this posture and uphold this guiding spirit.

Moreover, as your President, I have religiously kept a covenant with myself that I would never knowingly violate the individual personal, legal, nor civil rights of students and staff, unless compelled by the necessity to protect the rights, security and safety of the larger College Family, and then only with extreme reluctance.

HOWEVER, apparently the time has come when I must risk this charge in order to act in the immediate best interests of all. The wishes, desires, safety, and rights of more than 2200 students must be protected.

On at least three distinct occasions in an assembly of students and on several other occasions in smaller groups and individual student conferences I have emphasized that "this would be the worst time possible for students of AM&N College to participate in Sit-in Demonstrations in the Pine Bluff Community." Further, my position has been stated in part through the medium of the local newspaper. Therefore, I can in good conscience assume that my position as President of the College is clearly and widely known and was known before any student of AM&N College participated in the Sit-in at the Woolworth Store.

HOWEVER, a small segment of our students chose not to follow the advice, counsel, and request of the President and chose to follow what they construe to be their personal and constitutional rights. With this decision as their personal right, I hold no particular brief. But by the same token, I cannot uphold their right to infringe upon the rights of 2200 students by involving them even indirectly in an action without their permission, through the process of common identification and the osmosis of sympathy.

Therefore, obviously a conflict of interests and conceptions of what is in the best interests of the College has precipitated to the point where the Administration must exercise its prerogative of prevailing judgment to protect the College Community. This is felt justified for the following reasons:

(1) The President of the College made his position clear on the matter in ample time for all students to make their decision and choice; the vast majority of students chose to follow his advice and request with respect to the Sit-in demonstration.

(2) The President's efforts along with those of other interested students and parties concerned, both white and Negro, to have a conference with the College student leader of the group for the purpose of establishing ground rules for negotiating a solution to the problem in the interest of the College and the Pine Bluff Community at large was thwarted by the inability of the group to hold such a conference without the presence and participation of the Field Secretary of the Student Non-Violent Coordination Committee of Atlanta, Georgia.

(3) An article in the Pine Bluff Commercial, Sunday, February 10, 1963 in reporting an incident following a Sit-in on Saturday, February 9, described a student of the College as Leader of the student demonstrators, and further cited the Field Secretary of the Student Non-Violent Committee as saying he was invited in by students. Thus, it is easily inferred that his presence here and subsequent developments were brought about through the efforts of a few College students.

(4) A spreading of the Sit-in activities can lead to violence and community turmoil that can endanger the safety and well-being of all College students and faculty, the overwhelming majority of whom have had no part in the demonstrations.

(5) The 1962-63 edition of the AM&N College Bulletin, our contract with students, page No. 54, states in part: "Those students who show that ... they are not in harmony with the ideals of the College ... may be asked to withdraw without specific charge.

Therefore, any and all students who plan to participate in sit-in demonstrations after Monday, February 11, 1963 at 10:00 a.m. are requested to withdraw, voluntarily from the college. Those who participate in the sit-ins after said time and who do not withdraw voluntarily are automatically and immediately suspended from the college indefinitely, forfeiting all rights and privileges as students of AM&N College.

Wilkins Says Negro May Bolt Democrats

By ROBERT MULLER

(United Press International)

NEW YORK—(UPI)—A Negro leader issued a veiled threat Monday that Negroes may bolt the Democratic party in this year's general election unless the yget faster action on civil rights legislation.

The threat came from Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, (NAACP), in his report to the aunual meeting of the organization.

"Although President Lyndon B. Johnson has given the civil rights bill top priority, there is every indication that the House Rules Committee, under Chairman Howard Smith of Virginia, may not finish action on this bill seven full months after the President submitted it," Wilkins said.

"The latest report is the Rep. Smith may insist that since, technically, no hearings have been held on the amended bill, his committee will have to hold lengthy hearings.

"There has been already very great delay in this urgent matter.

"If Rep. Smith holds the bill unduly long, it mya be that Negro citizens of the country will be forced to re-examine their reasons for supporting the party of which Rep. Smith is an ornament.

"Since Negro voters are not able to reach and reason with Mr. Smith at ballot box time, they may decide to put the matter on a party basis. If this were done on any scale, some governorships and some congressional seats might change party labels."

Wilkins said that no matter what, the coming year will be one of "intensive voter registration." He reported that during 1963 the NAACP played a role in the registration of 82,733 new voters in Southern states, plus 108,000 in Virginia alone who were "persuaded to pay their poll tax as a preliminary to registration."

"Congress is playing politics with the civil rights bill now," he said. "Our turn to play politics will come next November."

Wilkins said that he believes President Johnson is sympathetic to the Negro cause.

"He deserves our help in this difficult time for him and for the nation, even as we press upon him our predicament and our demand for redress."

However, Wilkins urged that the Negro not forget that "our cause has friends in both political parties and that Republican stalwarts have worked for civil rights as sincerely and as consistently as have our friends among the Democrats."

Joseph A. Clarke To Help GOP In Vote Mobilization

WASHINGTON — Joseph A. Clarke, former Special Assistant to Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield during the Eisenhower Administration, has been named Special Assistant to the Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee where he will work on the mobilization of the Negro vote in Congressional races.

The announcement of Clark's appointment was made by Rep. Bob Wilson, chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee. He said Clarke will be working with the Committee in Washington and in selected Congressional districts throughout the country.

A native of Columbus, Georgia, Clarke has been a resident of Washington, D. C., since 1954. Prior to coming to Washington, he served for seven years as Assistant Director of the New Jersey State Commission on Urban Colored Population, later renamed the Division Against Discrimination.

A former newspaperman, Clarke was educated at Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga., and the School of Journalism at the University of Illinois. During his years with the State of New Jersey, he directed research and authored several studies on the subject of race relations, including, "The Negro Citizen and New Jersey Democracy," "A Guide to Better Race Relations," and several others.

Since leaving the government in 1961, Clarke has maintained his own public relations office at 1025 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Survey Shows Negroes Not Represented In Congress

A41 W 2-23-64 Wd

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Not only are America's 20,000,000 Negroes grossly under represented in Congress, but the strongest and most consistent opposition to legislation that would benefit Negroes comes from 64 of the most heavily Negro populated congressional districts.

By way of contrast, the "whitest" district in the nation, the Wisconsin 7th with only .01 percent Negroes, is represented in Congress by Melvin R. Laird, a staunch advocate of civil rights.

However, four of the five congressional districts with the highest percentage of Negro voters have Negro representation in Congress. Of these, the top one is Rep. William L. Dawson's 1st Congressional district of Illinois, where 87.1 percent of the voters are Negro.

Rep. Adam Powell's New York (18th) District, comprising most of Harlem ranks second.

Third is Rep. Augustus Hawkins' 21st district in California and fifth is the Pennsylvania 2nd, represented by Atty. Robert N. C. Nix of Philadelphia.

The nation's fourth most populated district (59.1) is Mississippi's 2nd, which has been sending staunch Dixiecrat Jamie L. Whitten to Congress since 1941 to oppose every measure introduced to advance civil rights.

Altogether, Negroes — including Michigan's Charles Diggs — hold only one percent of the 435 House seats.

With Negroes comprising about 11 percent of the population, they are grossly under and mis-represented in Congress — chiefly because they are denied the right to vote in so many areas of the South.

Southern Democrats (Dixiecrats), traditionally opposed to civil rights for Negroes, represent 64 of the 90 most Negro districts. What this obviously means is that many Negroes are not permitted to vote in many Southern districts.

The non-partisan survey by the Congressional Quarterly shows that Democrats represent 88 of the 90 congressional districts most heavily populated by Negroes.

These 90 districts are those in which the percentage of Negroes, in the 1960 census, was higher than 20 percent.

A third of the Democrats' 259 members in Congress are from districts more than 20 percent Negroes; all but two of the GOP's 176 members are from districts less than 20 per cent Negro.

The Congressional Quarterly analysis concludes that both in the South and the North, a high ratio of Negro population coincides with a "safe Democratic district."

Interracial Delegations Will Heat Up Convention

By Jay G. Hayden

WASHINGTON — Danger to President Johnson's reelection due to the Senate civil rights fight is pinpointed and intensified by a move to seek the seating of an "interracial" rump delegation from Mississippi in the Democratic National Convention next August.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) declared purpose—to move for displacement of the entire all-white delegation which he expects the Democratic organization in Mississippi to field.

Effect of the move, obviously, will be to confront the credentials committee of the national convention and ultimately the whole convention with a showdown vote as to which of the Mississippi delegations shall be seated. And it is safe to assume that the move will not be confined to Mississippi. Almost surely it will extend to other Far-South States — Alabama, South Carolina, Louisiana, Arkansas and Georgia—perhaps even to Virginia and North Carolina—no one of which has sent a Negro to a Democratic National Convention for at least 70 years.

White-Vs.-Black showdowns in presidential conventions are not unusual but heretofore they have occurred mostly on the Republican side.

Following the after-war reconstruction period, Republican conventions were pinqued with the problem of how to dispose of the 10 states of the Democratic Solid South. The first determination was to make this an excuse for proclaiming Negro equality, which in the North ever many years engendered a near-solid Negro vote on the Republican side.

Southern state delegates at Republican presidential nominating conventions during that period were overwhelmingly Negroes, most of whom had never been permitted to vote or expected to be so honored.

One remembers an incident at the convention in 1924, at which Calvin Coolidge was nominated for President and Charles G. Dawes, nowise a Coolidge choice, for Vice President.

Coolidge first wanted Sen. William E. Borah of Idaho for running mate but the latter firmly refused. Then Coolidge asked for former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, who just as irrevocably declined. At last Coolidge turned to Herbert Hoover, his own Secretary of Commerce but distinctly no political buddy.

Entered as opponent was Charles G. Dawes, who Coolidge liked even less.

It happened in this convention that delegates from Michigan and Georgia were quartered side by side, with only a weak wicker fence dividing them.

As the final vice presidential roll call began a Georgian delegate asked over this barrier of George Welsh, Mayor of Grand Rapids and right hand man of the then Gov. Alex Roesbeck:

"What's the word?"

Said Welsh "the word is Dawes."

Whereupon, another Georgia delegate intervened: "You say the word is Dawes. The word is Hoover, don't you see in that Michigan delegation, Charles Beecher Warren, Ambassador to Japan? Don't you think Mr. Warren knows what is the word?"

Georgia, coming first, voted solidly for Hoover. Michigan's delegation, all but one, voted for Dawes. Its one off-ox, voting for Hoover, was Charles Beecher Warren.

President Hoover, in his time, tried to change things in the South, leading to the claim that he favored a "lily white" group. But Hoover didn't last to prove his point, beginning with the era of federal economic largesse, under Franklin D. Roosevelt, Negroes South as well as North turned overwhelmingly Democratic.

President Johnson's situation is different in that he is essentially a Southerner trying to hold on to the Northern big city vote, approximately half non-white.

Chances are that some vote in the Democratic convention, very likely on the issue of seating Southern Negroes, finally will determine the choice of the nation's next President.

Southern Vote Chicanery Eyed

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Again, this time at the gubernatorial election in Louisiana, the Republicans turned out to be the bridesmaid, not the bride—but they may have caught a bouquet, which, although somewhat wilted and tawdry, is supposed to be a hopeful sign.

The bouquet in this instance, where the GOP candidate, Charlton Lyons, got 296,000 or 38 per cent of the total votes, consists of alleged examples of voting fraud by the Democratic state political machine.

Election chicanery is old hat in Louisiana, where the House of Huey Long has hung onto power for more than 30 years. George Despot, Lyons' campaign manager, feels that the March 3rd election wasn't close enough to warrant going into court. But the GOP National Committee here in Washington takes a longer view.

Corruption charges against Democrats will play a big part in the coming presidential campaign. In the Southern States, these charges may be the GOP's best chance to get inside the Democratic defenses, which might otherwise be impregnable with a Texas Democrat heading the ticket.

In 1960, Mr. Kennedy won by a mere 118,550 votes out of the 68 million cast. Republicans have freely raised the cry of "We wuz robbed" in several of the narrow-margin states. Earlier in the present campaign Barry Goldwater electrified his audiences by charging a vicious coalition between the cynical big city machines and the pious liberals, who talk morality but who benefit by venality.

Goldwater talked mostly of the Northern cities, adding a few choice remarks about Texas, but up till now there has been little focus on the Southern States. Lee Potter, who heads the GOP drive throughout Dixie, tells me that this neglect will be remedied. His office at the Republican National Committee is drawing a lengthy bill of particulars, somewhat as follows:

In Nashville, last October, City Councilman Gene ("Little Evil") Jacobs and five others were convicted of obtaining absentee ballots and marking them for favored candidates.

In Atlanta, both the newspapers last year carried out extensive investigations of voting frauds, and satisfied themselves that these were widespread. An Atlanta Journal story on a State Senate race found "citizens dead and imprisoned and long departed listed as having votes."

In Madison and Yancey counties of North Carolina, according to well-documented stories in the Charlotte Observer, "hundreds of absentee ballots were improperly issued in 1962."

CAN CHEAT MACHINES

In Baton Rouge, La., last month, an ex-policeman and a mechanic showed a legislative committee in secret session how the supposedly cheat-proof voting machines could be made to do almost anything, including "play the Star-Spangled Banner."

One of the most supicious findings by Republican sleuths has been the over - registration of white voters in Southern counties where the Democrats control nearly all the courthouses. It is not primafacie evidence of fraud to find that there are more voters on the books than there are voting-age residents—but such a situation does allow crooked machines to produce a "tombstone vote." which has been known to decide close elections. And when the overage is very pronounced, there is a presumption of connivance.

Alabama has 12 counties wher white registrations run over 100 per cent of the voting-age population. Florida has 10 such counties; Georgia has 6; Louisiana has 8; North Carolina has 55; Tennessee has 23.

Republicans will try to convince Southern voters that the only eradication of this "pay dirt" lies in a two-party system.

Temptation Rejected

It pays to count the votes.

The American taxpayers were saved about $600 million last week because a congressman requested that his colleagues stand up and be counted on the bill that would have increased their annual pay by $10,000.

Earlier, on non-record votes, in which only "yeas" and "nays" were required, the House approved the pay increase. But when names had to be attached to the "yeas" or "nays", the "nays" picked up strength, and the entire federal pay increase bill went down to a 222-184 defeat.

The measure would have given representatives and senators a whopping 40 per cent hike, up to $33,000, and also provided hefty increases for federal judges and administrative officers.

In addition, about 1.7 million civil service employes would have received increases.

Many congressmen argued that their own pay should be considered separately from the pay of other federal workers. But the decisive vote came on an omnibus bill that included nearly every federal worker's pay — and staring down the trail to the November elections, the representatives exercised discretion.

We believe they also exercised wisdom. The proposed 40 per cent hike was excessive. The federal government is running a deficit, and Congress only recently voted to reduce the income.

A raise for executives of a business that can't make ends meet would be fiscal folly.

Rep. E. L. Forrester of Georgia's Third District argued eloquently against the bill. He and five other Georgia congressmen voted against it. They were Reps. John Flynt, Elliot Hagan, Phil Landrum, J. L. Pilcher and Charles Weltner.

Reps. John Davis, Robert Stephens, Russell Tuten and Carl Vinson voted in favor.

Rep. Forrester, speaking against the bill, said: "We are passing laws to prevent the flow of gold to foreign countries, and even passing laws discouraging travel in foreign countries, in order that the money spent by Americans in foreign countries will not have to be redeemed from our short gold supply. Our President has the lights cut out in the White House at night. I think everyone will agree that if lights burn at night, they ought to burn at the White House. We are closing installations, even weather stations; orders are going out to military post to cut out jobs, release civilian personnel, because we say we must economize . . . This bill would give congressmen, Supreme Court justices and certain employes of Congress an increase in salary larger than the entire earnings of at least 75 per cent of the people in the district I represent . . ."

Rep. Forrester went on to say that he hadn't noted any improvement in the caliber of congressmen due to the last big salary increase, nor in the Supreme Court justices.

The final vote, which defeated the increases, was contrived by the old coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats. Voting against were 136 Republicans and 86 Democrats. In favor were 149 Democrats and 35 Republicans.

This defeat should lay the question of congressional pay increases to rest for this session. Undoubtedly, it will be revived next year, but it is to be hoped that a more realistic increase will be proposed, rather than the 40 per cent suggested this year and in 1963.

A better way for the congressmen to improve their "earnings" would be to strive toward a stronger, more productive dollar, so that the $22,500 they now draw, plus the numerous fringe benefits of being a congressman, will buy more for them.

People Also Vote on 'Rights'

Congress is not the only group of Americans that will be voting on "civil rights" proposals this year. In fact, the vote in Congress may ultimately be less important than the vote registered in cities and states throughout the nation.

Seattle, Wash. voters delivered a verdict last week. The issue was an "open housing" ordinance, which would have made it a misdemeanor to refuse sale of a house to a person because of his race.

The proposal was defeated 112,448 to 53,453, despite support from the city's mayor and other officials, virtually every church in the Seattle area, and 75 organized groups. Only two organized groups opposed the measure.

"Because of fear and mistrust and a number of other reasons, the voters felt they could not accept this ordinance," Mayor Gordon Clinton remarked.

The more than 2-1 margin does not promise to resolve the matter, however. Beaten at the polls, backers of the measure are threatening to pursue the matter in the streets.

"This vote shows that Seattle has chosen to be a bigoted community," the Rev. Samuel McKinney proclaimed.

The Rev. John Adams said: "The civil rights battleground is moving north and west, and Seattle may become a major battlefield in the near future."

A canvass was made of the New York City Council. Eighteen of the 24 councilmen expressed opposition to enforced transferral of children from their normal schools to promote racial integration.

In California, the state Assembly approved an "open occupancy" law last year. But private citizens petitioned for a referendum. The housing law will be the hottest issue in the November election, no matter who's running for President.

Detroit's City Council rejected an "open occupancy" ordinance several months ago in the face of strong pressure from both sides.

Sen. Kenneth Keating of New York, a staunch backer of the "civil rights" bill, complains that his mail is running against most of the provisions in the current bill. He blames this on "organized" attempts to influence the Senate, but the truth seems to be that most of the organization is on the other side of the question.

A Chicago congressman polled 16,000 of his constituents and discovered that a majority opposed the key sections of the "civil rights" bill now in the Senate. Broad support was available only for the voting section.

So, the people are voting, as well as the senators.

Two-Party South Emerges As New Laws Proposed

(EDITOR'S NOTE: For more than a decade, the Republican Party has been growing gradually stronger in the South. One effect is seen in Democratic lawmaking. This is a report on that aspect of the GOP push.)

By DON McKEE
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Emergence of a two-party South is reflected today in new laws or proposed changes of election procedures linked to the rising Republican vote.

Southern Democrats, secure in their one-party system, once merely scoffed at the Republican practice of nominating by convention; this, they said, produced only hand-picked candidates.

Now they've quit scoffing and begun enacting laws aimed at forcing the Republicans to hold primary elections and to quit voting in the Democratic primaries.

Most Republicans still gain nomination without fighting through primary campaigns, but signs are appearing that the day of the two-party primary is nearing.

A law aimed at the GOP was approved this year by the South Carolina Legislature. Three other Southern state legislatures will consider new election laws. The other states already have tightened primary rules.

Drastic measures have been proposed in Mississippi — on the heels of a startling Republican vote of 38 per cent in last year's race for governor.

One proposal would require a primary election even if a candidate is unopposed. This would hit Republicans who avoid primaries in Mississippi by runnng only one canddate per office.

Another of the 22 bills in the Mississippi package would prohibit a voter from taking part in both Republican and Democratic primaries.

That would virtually disfranchise Republicans in local elections since their party does not enter these races in Mississippi — or much of the balance of the South.

In Louisiana, state Rep. Lantz Womack, a Democrat, said he would ask the legislature in its May session to abolish all primaries and require two general elections instead.

Republicans nominate by convention in Louisiana.

Womack's plan is to pit candidates of all parties in an open general election to cut down the field and then hold a second election for the two top candidates for each office.

Similar legislation was suggested by Gov.-elect John J. McKeithen who defeated a Republican in a hard-fought campaign.

Georgia lawmakers will consider revision of election laws in a May special session. Proposed changes include a requirement that all parties hold primaries the same date.

"This would prevent anyone from voting in more than one primary," said Secretary of State Ben Fortson, a Democrat.

Under Georgia law, the GOP nominates by convention. But an added hurdle for nominees for state offices is a petition with signatures of 5 per cent of the voters to qualify in the general election.

South Carolina's legislature enacted this year a law requiring candidates named by convention votes to be chosen before the qualifying deadline for the primary election.

The Democrats said it was unfair for their candidates to conduct costly primary races and then, only two months before the general election, learn who their Republican opponents were.

Similar laws are on the books in Tennessee and Virginia. And Alabama's Democratic chairman Roy Mayhall said he avors such legislation in his state.

Mayhall said voters should have to register by party

In Alabama, Virginia and Tennessee, the convention is the Republican method of nomination.

Arkansas, under a 1957 law, requires primaries unless a candidate is unopposed. Republicans have held one statewide primary since enactment of the law.

Texas requires primaries for any party receiving more than 200,000 votes in the governor's race in the preceding general election. The GOP has held primaries the past three elections after a gap between 1934 and 1954.

Florida candidates must be nominated by primary, although this is not required formally for unopposed nominees. Every candidate must go through qualifying procedures and pay his fees.

Wallace Believes Big Vote Could Alter Platforms

CROSSVILLE, Ala. (AP)—Gov. George Wallace says a substantial vote for him in the Wisconsin Democratic Presidential Primary will force both major parties into adopting a conservative platform.

Wallace, who is running for the presidency in the primary, said his efforts and those of other southerners "have got 'em shook up all over the country and in Washington."

Wallace is campaigning as a champion of states rights and a foe of the civil rights bill. He made his comments during a speech here Friday night.

He told the rally that if Alabama and three or four other southern states withhold their votes from both parties, "We can have the balance of power and we can have something to say about the attitude of the next president — and it will give us more voice than the NAACP in running the federal government."

Four of the unpledged candidates attended the rally with Wallace. They were former Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion of Montgomery, Frank Mizell of Montgomery, Jack Giles of Huntsville and Former Mayor Arthur Hanes of Birmingham.

Harry B. Ayers, assistant publisher of the Anniston Star, and State Rep. John Casey of Cleburne County, both candidates on the rival pro-Johnson slate, also spoke at the rally.

Ayers said the Wallace slate has not been willing to say which candidate it would support but instead has done nothing but promise opposition for this candidate and that candidate.

"What I want to hear," he said, "is a little you. An elector is a man who takes orders from you, the people. We will do what you tell us."

He also said that the only way a voter can be sure who he's voting for is to cast his ballot for electors committed in advance.

"We are pledged to the idea that only the people can give the orders with their ballots and that electors are morally bound to carry out these orders exactly as diected." Ayers said.

Casey challenged the Wallace candidates to say who they will vote for and who they won't support.

Democrats Seek To Hold South

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON (AP)—Administration Democrats are piling up party unity evidence fortifying their belief that President Johnson can hold on to a substantial segment of the South in the November election.

These Democrats were cheered by a fresh exhibition of loyalty by Gov. Donald Russll of South Carolina. Russell told his state party's convention Wednesday he thinks no GOP presidentia nominee could match Johnson "in experience, personal qualification and understanding of national and international problems."

What was to the poit, also, was Russell's notation that South Carolina had supported Johnson in the 1960 convention and the governor's prediction that it would be behind him this year.

Johnson's friends recently patched up a truce between quarreling Democrats in Texas that seemed likely to improve the chances of the national ticket there.

When the President spoke at a Florida party rally, Democrats of every description turned out. Some of them probably wouldn't have shown up for a speech by the late President John F Kennedy because of their opposition to his civil rights position.

Gov. Carl Sanders of Georgia is on record with a prediction the South will rally behind Johnson.

Kennedy had a great deal of trouble with Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett and Barnett had launched an independent electors' movement designed to keep his and other Southern states' votes away from the national Democratic nominee.

But since Paul B. Johnson succeeded Barnett as governor there has been less talk about any such bolt. The President's friends are hopeful that the governor can see his way clear to avoid an open break.

Negro Solon Sees 'White Backlash'

By YVONNE FRANKLIN
North American Newspaper Alliance

WASHINGTON, April 1—The only Negro congressman from the West, Rep. Augustus Hawkins of Los Angeles, thinks the civil rights demonstrations are losing their impact and frightening white people. He suggested in an interview that perhaps the techniques of civil rights groups should be changed in the interests of progress.

"I believe there is white backlash," he said, "I think many (whites) honestly feel the Negro has gone too far in some of his techniques (of protest).

"Especially in the poorer districts, whites, as a result of the civil rights bill and (California's) State Fair Housing Act, believe the Negroes are going to invade their neighborhoods, take their jobs, marry their daughters, overrun their restaurants and clubs."

HE SUGGESTED that the real need was for all to "work to upgrade the schools and the neighborhoods" and not to use "exhibitionist" demonstrations to protest, or to agitate for carrying children away from their neighborhoods by bus as is being done in New York.

The demonstrations in New York and elsewhere have set up a counter-reaction of white parents who are also demonstrating in the streets against moving children to distant schools.

"Areas have gone down because both Negroes and whites have left the neighborhood," he maintained. "And always, the persons who supplant them are less able to take care of the property and are less assimilated to the ways of urban life.

"Agitators," he continued, "make a mistake when they divorce the school problem from the neighborhood problem. Whenever a slum can be replaced by decent housing, there is an advance.

"I cannot see that preserving slums merely because to replace them with public housing is going to 'lead more Negroes to being fixed to the land' is necessarily true. I don't think public housing fixes anyone to an area. At least, it gets rid of a slum."

HAWKINS THINKS that a basic problem to real integration is housing, and that all concerned should work for integrated neighborhoods. He suggested as a possibility the cooperative approach tried in San Francisco. The International Longshoremen's Union built cooperative housing, which was to be integrated, on the waterfront. It upgraded the neighborhood, provided good housing for workers near their employment and is now more than half white, 15 per cent Negro, the rest Oriental.

Hawkins feels that the frustration and demand for moving Negro children from slum schools springs from the feeling that these schools are manned by "too many temporary teachers; the strongest teachers are in wealthier neighborhoods, and the agitation in busing is attached to the question of size of classrooms, the under-utilization of some schools and so on."

He felt that even if some children transferred, the great majority of Negro children in the slum schools would still remain and the problems of poor schools would still not have been met.

BAKER-CARR

Reapportionment Still Bristling In Court

By BRUCE BIOSSAT
Washington Correspondent
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

WASHINGTON (NEA) — The second anniversary of the Supreme Court's celebrated state legislative reapportionment case —Baker v. Carr—slipped by in late March virtually without notice.

Yet, although there were no birthday candles, the U.S. hinterland today is still bristling with both court and legislative activity as result of that historic decision.

A 50-state check by Washington lawyer Charles S. Rhyne, who argued the Baker v. Carr issues against the State of Tennessee before the Supreme Court, shows this:

In 42 of the 50, judicial legislative or constitutional action is either pending or has been completed—for the most part under the spur of the high court's ruling.

Federal or state court action calling for reapportionment has been begun or decided in 38 states. The box score on state action: Decisions handed down in 17 states, cases pending in four. On the federal front: Decisions in 16 states matters pending in 15.

Despite all this continuing bustle, the focus on the state reapportionment question has shifted back to Washington. Before the Supreme Court for decision this spring are additional apportionment cases affecting 13 states.

The key issues are those left unsettled by the 1962 Tennessee decision: What constitutes fair apportionment, and whether or not the population factor must be used as a basis for districting in Senate as well as House at the state level.

Many states obviously hope to get by either with a Senate districting formula combining area, population and possibly other factors, or applying the so-called little federal plan—giving fixed, uniform representation to all counties or other units without regard to population.

It is here that direct challenge has been posed to the Supreme Court Many lawyers and politicians await the court's answers with even greater interest than they showed two years ago. Some lower federal courts have demanded a population basis for districting in both houses, some have not.

Perhaps a dozen states—the exact number is fuzzy because of constantly shifting action—use a strict population factor for both houses now. They include Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, South Dakota and Oregon.

In a few, including Kentucky, Wisconsin and Wyoming, the state constitution requires this. The tendency among these, however, has been not to follow strict population dictates.

Nothing the Supreme Court has said to date gives anyone a firm clue whether it may have another earth-shaking decision up its voluminous black robe sleeve.

Rhyne, a "strict population" man, argues also against the little federal plan. He sees no proper parallel with the U.S. Senate in the federal structure. Says he:

"A state is not truly a federation of counties and political subdivision in the sense that the latter preceded the former To the contrary, the state is the creator and the local governmental units are the created."

Rhyne's view has many supporters. But there are also numerous lawyers, judges and scholars who contend that some blend of population, area and other factors is both reasonable and fair in at least one house. The high court's approach to this controversy is bound to be far-reaching.

'Crossover' Vote To Be Important In Presidential Ballot Outcome

Selma Times-Journal, 4-15-64

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It looks as if the "crossover" vote will decide the next presidential election. There are many Republicans who would like Lyndon Johnson to remain as President rather than vote for any other candidate mentioned thus far. Also, there are Democrats who would vote for anyone nominated for president at the Republican Convention if Robert Kennedy is the vice-presidention nominee on the Democratic ticket. Conversely, many Republicans who wouldn't vote for a Democrat for President under most circumstances would cross over and do so if Atty. Gen. Kennedy is the vice-presidential nominee.

The pollsters can readily find out the trend by phrasing a particular set of questions to bring out the true proportions of the "crossover" vote. Separate queries might be directed only to those citizens who consider themselves Republicans. Here are some of the pertinent questions:

1. As between Scranton and Johnson, how would you vote?
2. As between Lodge and Johnson, how would you vote?
3. As between Rockefeller and Johnson, how would you vote?
4. As between Nixon and Johnson, how would you vote?
5. As between Goldwater and Johnson, how would you vote?

The same Republicans might be asked:

"If Robert Kennedy is the vice-presidential nominee, would you vote for the Johnson ticket?"

But the pollsters wouldn't be through at that point, because there would surely be a 'crossover" vote from the Democratic ticket. Another question, addressed only to Democrats, would be the following:

"If Robert Kennedy were the vice-presidential nominee, would you vote for any Republican nominee or stay at home or vote for the Democratic ticket just the same?'

On the Republican side, there is obviously at the present time no majority favoring any prospective Republican nominee. The polls as well as the state primary voting thus far indicate that the party is split several ways. The voters for Lodge, for example, have been construed by many observers as not necessarily mainifesting any outburst of enthusiasm for the present American ambassador to South Viet Nam but rather a dissatisfaction with all the other prominently mentioned for the nomination.

There is, moreover, plenty of evidence that there is an anti-Goldwater sentiment and an anti Rockefeller attitude. Groups holding these viewpoints seem to prefer Scranton or Nixon or Lodge. Some of the feelings are so deep-rooted that, if the particular individual to whom they object were nominated, it is a safe assumption that a Johnson-Humphrey ticket, for example, would get a very substantial number of such Republicans.

As a matter of fact, many Republicans say frankly that, if the nomination doesn't go to Goldwater—who, they think, articulates a real opposition to the policies of the Kennedy-Johnson administration—they would rather vote for a Johnson-Humphrey ticket or stay at home on election day.

Between now and the Republican National Convention in San Francisco in July, the aspirants for the Republican nomination may become more challenging in their speeches of criticism and win votes by the specific points they make. But to date there has been little dent made by the speeches of the Republican candidates, with the exception of Goldwater. He, however, has managed to alienate that segment of the Republican Party which has often been termed as "me-too Republicanism."

Whether it is in the domain of foreign or domestic policies, the Republicans in general have waged a weak campaign. Certainly the potential candidates have not as yet produced that mood among the voters which would indicate a readiness to change administrations no matter which Republican is nominated.

A "dark horse" or a so-called 'compromise" candidate who hasn't been active in seeking the nomination normally has little chance to win if the country is relatively satisfied with the incumbent administration. Candidates who have centered their attention on a specific issue which involves national discontent usually have the best chance of winning a nomination and a subsequent election. But to date none of the Republican candidates has made a persuasive case for a change of administration, and each appears to be merely reflecting a personal ambition for high office whether he happens to be an active candidate or is slyly acquiescing in the "draft" idea.

Nobody at this time can be sure of the extent of the "crossover" vote or the depth of any national discontent, and the election campaign this year could conceivably be one in which the opposition to "civil rights," for instance, in the North and South could defeat a Johnson-Kennedy ticket. The reaction of the country will not be known until after this legislation is passed, which may not be until just before the national conventions are held.

Negro Says Democrats 'Dupe' Race

Republicans in the South should center their campaign pitch to Negro voters around the theme that Democrats have never done anything for them, a top Negro Republican advised Saurday.

At a strategy workshop at the Southern Young Republican Conference at the Hilton Inn, Clay Claiborn said that Negroes and whites alike had been "duped" by "Democrat propaganda" that says that the Negro voter is not wanted by Republicans and at the same time that Republicans can never attract the Negro voter.

This is false, said Mr. Claiborn, of the Republican National Committee. While many Southern Republicans are confronted by the problem that if they actively seek the Negro vote, they may lose some of the white vote, Mr. Claiborn said they won't if they go about it right.

THE RIGHT WAY, he suggested, is to say that the "Democrats have never done anything for the Negro. . . . Approach the (Negro) voter by telling him, 'I don't care whether you vote for (the Republican candidate), but if you want to still buy the product of the Democrats, you don't deserve any better than what you've got. He's got you on his sucker list.'

"Chase the Negroes away from the Democrats," Mr. Claiborn said, "and there's only one other party on the ballot he can vote for."

THE REPUBLICANS are not going to win by "staying away from any person who is registered," Mr. Claiborn emphasized. "Stop giving the Negro vote to the Democrats, though as the coming party in the South, we've got to be careful that we don't lose what we have. But we don't have to be too careful of saying to the Negro: 'You're not getting anything from the Democrats.' "

The President is a Texan who "wants to be liberal in the North and conservative in the South," Mr. Claiborn said. "If Republicans in the South can't tell the conservative vote in the South that this man is a liberal, you ought to go home.

"He's given you an awful lot of material to use."

AT THE SAME TIME, Mr. Claiborn said, Republicans need to tell Northern big city voters that the President is "two-faced," that "you can't have any confidence in him."

"We can do it," he said, "the Democrats have been doing it; we can do it too."

Any Sizable Vote Will Be Victory for Gov. Wallace

Col. Eng. 4-21-64

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI)—Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace said Monday he'll be the winner of the Indiana Democratic presidential primary even if he doesn't outpoll favorite son Gov. Matthew Welsh.

"I'll win this race in Indiana by getting any sizable vote at all," Wallace told a news conference at the start of his second campaign visit to Indiana.

The Alabama governor apparently was following the same tack in Indiana as he did in Wisconsin, where he claimed "we won without winning" by polling 33.7 of the Democratic vote and 24.4 per cent of the total primary vote last April 7.

Wallace got into Indiana a few hours ahead of Sen. Barry Goldwater, who planned to put in his only stumping of his campaign on the Republican side of the May 5 Hoosier primary. The Arizonan's visit was scheduled to wind up with a full scale GOP rally at night.

Wallace, an avowed segregationist, denied that he is campaigning on the segregation issue in Indiana.

"My campaign is based on an attack on the fact the federal government in Washington is reaching into every facet of society and encroaching on the rightful powers of the states," he said.

"Through the so-called civil rights bill, Washington is planning an additional invasion of the prerogatives of the states. It is reaching into the homes, schools, business, farms and labor," he said.

Wallace said his Hoosier campaign is not blessed with "an overabundance of money, but we are geting many dollar contributions."

Wallace Relaxes, Welsh Says Ala. "Police State"

Selma Times-Journal 4-22-64

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Presidential candidate George Wallace relaxed his pace in the Indiana presidential primary campaign today after a day of fighting hostile weather and some cool receptions.

The Alabama governor covered south Indiana by automobile Tuesday—his plane was weathered in—and he ran into his stiffest opposition so far in the battle for the Hoosier delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

As Wallace's car left a Terre Haute hotel Tuesday, a white woman tried, but failed, to shove her picket sign into the auto. Wallace was struck lightly by a picket sign at Kenosha, Wis., last month.

Meanwhile, Indiana Gov. Matthew Welsh, a stand-in for President Johnson, told a Gary, Ind., audience that Alabama is "a police state ruled by the iron fist of would-be dictators."

Welsh, Wallace's major opponent in the May 5 primary, said:

"Thousands of Negro and white families are moving north to escape this modern tyranny."

Wallace was not allowed to speak from the auditorium stage at Vincennes University. Officials required him to address the student body from the same level as the audience. A university spokesman gave no reason for the action. The stage was open.

School officials barred all persons other than the faculty and student body from hearing Wallace.

Gov. Welsh is a Vincennes trustee. There was no picketing.

At is Terre Haute news conference, Wallace was asked if he supported states rights primarily because it promoted segregation in Alabama.

The governor replied that he was for segregation, and it was one of the rights of the states to have separation of the races if they so desire.

Welsh criticized Wallace for using the states rights arguments to protest "his dynasty in Alabama." He said:

"In Alabama thousands of colored voters are denied their most precious right — the right to vote.

"The truth is simply this: There are no states rights, there are no property rights, where the basic rights of human beings are denied."

Wallace planned to spend today making tapes for radio and television speeches.

He has scheduled two appearances at the University of Indianapolis in Bloomington Thursday. Wallace has not announced his schedule for Friday, but is due to return to Alabama Saturday for a fund-raising rally at Montgomery.

G.O.P. CANDIDATES AWAIT BRIEFINGS

They Say It's Up to Johnson to Act on Data Offer

WASHINGTON, April 21 (AP)—Top Republican Presi-intelligence officers to come to him.

Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona said that he had received no formal invitation from the White House and that he did not plan to give Mr. Johnson's suggestion any more consideration unless he received such an invitation.

The President made the offer in an address yesterday at the annual meeting of The Associated Press in New York.

"I have instructed the Departments of State and Defense, and the Central Intelligence Agency to be ready to provide major candidates for the office of President with all possible information helpful to their discussion of American policy," Mr. Johnson said.

Governor Rockefeller, in New Orleans for a speech, pointed out that the President "didn't say when the briefings would be held—before or after the conventions."

Mr. Rockefeller said he would not comment without knowing more about the suggestion.

In Washington, the office of Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine issued this statement:

"She looks forward to receiving a formal and official invitation."

Gov. George Romney of Michigan declined comment, and the office of Gov. William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania said it had received no word from the White House on the offer.

There was no immediate reaction from former Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon and the two Governors are not declared candidates for the nomination.

Summerfield to Introduce Goldwater at May 12 Rally

The Goldwater for President organization here announced yesterday that Arthur E. Summerfield, a former chairman of the Republican National Committee and a former Postmaster General, would introduce Senator Barry Goldwater at a rally in Madison Square Garden on May 12.

The Goldwater group said that Senator John G. Tower, Texas Repulican, would also speak. Prices of tickets to the rally run from $2 to $1,000 for boxes.

Former Senator William F. Knowland of California, national chairman of the rally, said that more than 18,000 persons were expected to attend and that Senator Goldwater would make a major policy speech.

Anti-Rights Bill Drive Is Urged

BOSTON (AP) — The John Birch Society has called on its members to conduct an advertising campaign against passage of the civil rights bill, and urged those opposed to the bill to write their senators and "as many other senators as you can."

"A spokesman said Tuesday a recent issue of the John Birch Society bulletin, which goes only to members, contained a reprinting of a suggested advertisement which appeared in newspapers throughout the country.

The bulletin urged its members to go ahead "into the most massive protest—by mail, by telegram, by advertising, by the distribution of literature, by personal conversations and in every other practical way—that we have ever undertaken with regard to any legislation."

The advertisement said every vote for the act "is a nail for the coffin of the American republic."

The advertisement, quoted by the spokesman, said further:

"A recent president of the American Bar Association has solemnly declared: 'The proposed extension of federal executive and administration control over business, industry, individual citizens and the state by the package of legislation called the Civil Rights Act of 1963 exceeds the sum total of all such extensions by all decisions of the Supreme Court and all acts of Congress from 1787 to June 19, 1963.'

"The results of this legislation would be enormous suffering by, and oppression of, both our white citizens and our Negro citizens alike; and such turmoil, rioting, bitterness and chaos as benefits only the Communists—or a federal government drunk with its drive for power."

The Choice

THE NEGRO has reached a time of vital decision. Two recent events in the East illustrate the courses for the future that figure in his decision:

In New Jersey, Republicans chose William L. Stubbs, Newark's GOP central ward leader and a Negro, as their candidate for Congress. Stubbs won the primary election by a wide margin over a white lawyer and a Negro doctor.

In neighboring New York, civil-rights demonstrators attempted to disrupt the opening of the New York World's Fair, chanted slogans during a speech by the President of the United States, drowned out speeches by New York Mayor Robert F. Wagner and other officials and blocked stairways at the New York State pavilion. Others attempted to block subway lines leading to the fairgrounds.

The contrast between the two cases is significant. In the first instance, a Negro has won the right to represent a major party in a race for the lawmaking branch of the federal government. His victory was achieved through legal means, through the votes of his fellow citizens.

In the second, lawlessness and civil disobedience were used in a general protest against the world and as an attempt to punish society. Such senseless tactics have not only failed to reduce opposition to the demonstrators' cause, they have multiplied it. In a nation of law-abiding people, this reaction to deliberate contempt for law and order was predictable.

The first course can lead to advancement for Negro and white alike. Working within the framework of democratic government, the nation can develop and use the skills and talents of all its people. And such advancement can be gained without paying the price of racial hatred.

The second course can lead only to anarchy and increasing bitterness. The choice is the Negro citizen's. Let us hope his choice is the right one.

In all of this racial friction, the stability of America, the common sense and decency of the individual and the proper concern for constitutional processes seem to be considerations at the bottom of the pile.

This is a time when good judgment, a sense of proportion and fair play must reign. Anybody can be even-tempered and follow the righteous course of justice when everything goes to suit him. It is when others are going to extremes that sensible self-control is of greatest value.

Past injustices against the Negro are admitted and deplored, but proper remedy does not lie in community disruption, bloody heads and open defiance of established rules of law and decency.

THE NEGRO VOTE

What Will It Really Mean in November?

Voter reaction to Negro pressures for civil rights is beginning to worry the politicians. Reason: It could be a political time bomb ticking away, set to explode next November against those courting the Negro vote.

An axiom of modern-day politics suddenly is coming into question.

The axiom is that winning the Negro vote is the key to political success.

It has come to be accepted that the party that can win the Negro vote in the big-city States of the North will win the electoral votes of those States for the Presidency, the most seats in Congress and control of key State and local governments.

The idea has been that Negroes tend to vote as a bloc, while the white population splits its votes. Many promises and favors have been offered in appeals for Negro votes. Success, for the most part, has gone to the Democrats.

White "backlash." Today, that whole political formula is beginning to be re-examined. This re-examination, politicians explain, is forced by growing evidence that whites are starting to react in opposition to Negro demands and to politicians who bow to those demands.

A whole series of State and local elections has shown signs of an incipient revolt by whites tending to vote as a bloc.

There appears to be a spreading reaction against demands that neighborhood schools be broken up, against the busing of children from one part of town to another to bring about more racial mixing in school enrollments, against laws to break down neighborhood residential patterns and against federal policing of hiring and firing by private employers.

This reaction has shown itself in areas as far apart as Boston, Seattle, Kansas City, Kentucky, and Wisconsin. There is a revolt brewing against an "open housing" law in California.

Politicians, as a result, admit that they see building now an issue that can have major importance by election time next November.

NEGROES AT THE POLLS. If they vote as a bloc, will white voters do likewise?

Climate in Congress. Already the entire climate surrounding the civil-rights bill in Congress has changed. Scores of amendments are to be offered in the Senate. All thought that the proposed law will be enacted in the form endorsed by the White House and approved by the House has been given up. Drastic changes are in the air.

Key members of Congress are saying privately that if unruly demonstrations by Negroes continue, it will be difficult to pass any civil-rights law.

Why politicians are worried can be seen from the chart on page 35. Look at that chart, and you see this: Negro voters, almost everywhere, are greatly outnumbered by white voters.

Politicians sense that if white voters become irritated enough, they tend to vote as a bloc, and then the candidates who appeal for the Negro vote could be swamped.

Issues now in the process of developing are described as emotional issues as well as pocketbook issues: breakup of neighborhood schools, use of children to carry out social experiments, job rights, property values, broader use of federal policemen in local communities.

REDS AND NEGROES— "AN UNHAPPY SECRET"

Latest report of Communist influence in Negro organizations comes from Joseph Alsop, a news columnist who is recognized in Washington as being close to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy. In his syndicated column published April 15, Mr. Alsop said:

"An unhappy secret is worrying official Washington. The secret is that despite the American Communist Party's feebleness and disarray, its agents are beginning to infiltrate certain sectors of the Negro civil-rights movement.

"The infiltration is spotty, as yet. But it is a very serious matter, none the less, that the charges of Communist influence, which have been hurled for so long by anti-civil-rights racists, should now be acquiring some color of truth.

"The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King; the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, more usually called 'Snick'; and the Congress of Racial Equality, more usually called 'CORE,' are all affected in greater or less degree.

"These, it should be noted, are all relatively new-fledged outfits. The older, more experienced organizations of Negro civil-rights fighters, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Urban League, are quite untouched."

that involve voter emotions can be as explosive as issues that touch the pocketbook—if not more so.

Strategy questioned. For more than 30 years, strategy of Democratic politicians has been to put together a winning combination for the Presidency by appealing to labor and minority—including Negro—votes in the big cities. Those big cities, in turn, usually dominated the votes for their State as a whole. When big-city States were added to the States of the Democratic South, a winning combination resulted.

In local and congressional elections, too, Democratic candidates have stressed an appeal to the bloc vote of Negroes.

That whole strategy, politicians say, will come into serious question if the issue of race becomes dominant.

Even now, the Democratic Party is finding that the South can no longer be taken for granted. If doubt now is to come also to the North, then something of a political revolution could occur.

What figures show. How this could happen can be seen in the proportion of Negroes of voting age compared with whites of voting age. Glance down the accompanying chart on big-city States of the North and you see the situation faced by Negroes—and by the politicians who count on their votes.

Those 14 States together cast 281 electoral votes for President. That is more than the 270 needed to elect a President. In the past, with Negroes in those States voting largely as a bloc while the white vote was split, the Negro vote has been able to swing an election.

Yet, as the chart shows, the Negroes in those 14 States are badly outnumbered. The voting odds against them range from 5 to 1 in Maryland to as high as 90 to 1 in Minnesota.

Over all, in the North, there are 13 whites for every Negro of voting age.

If those whites should ever pull together, even slightly, to vote against the Negro, you can see what little chance the Negro would have at the polls. Entire States could be lost to a party or to candidates that invite such opposition among whites.

Situation in big cities. In local elections in big Northern cities, Negroes are in a somewhat better position because Negroes tend to congregate in big cities.

Yet, as the chart shows, white voters far outnumber Negro voters even in the largest cities—7 to 1 in New York and 4 to 1 in Chicago, for example.

Recent elections have alerted politicians to the potential of bloc voting by whites.

Last November, there were examples in Kentucky, Philadelphia and Boston.

In Kentucky, a Republican nominee

IF WHITES WERE TO VOTE AS A BLOC—

IN THE SOUTH, on the average, there is 1 Negro of voting age to every 4 whites. And only a small proportion of these Negroes actually vote.

IN THE NORTH, on the average, there is 1 Negro of voting age to every 13 whites. And in no State is the proportion of Negroes of voting age larger than 1 to 5.

SO: If race is made the issue, Negroes will have little chance at the ballot box.

THE LINEUP IN "BIG-CITY STATES"

	Proportion of Negroes And Other Nonwhites To Whites in Voting-Age Population
California	1 Negro – 12 Whites
Connecticut	1 Negro – 25 Whites
Illinois	1 Negro – 9 Whites
Indiana	1 Negro – 18 Whites
Maryland	1 Negro – 5 Whites
Massachusetts	1 Negro – 43 Whites
Michigan	1 Negro – 10 Whites
Minnesota	1 Negro – 90 Whites
Missouri	1 Negro – 11 Whites
New Jersey	1 Negro – 12 Whites
New York	1 Negro – 11 Whites
Ohio	1 Negro – 12 Whites
Pennsylvania	1 Negro – 13 Whites
Wisconsin	1 Negro – 50 Whites

THUS: In Statewide elections, as for President, the white vote outnumbers the Negro vote in every State outside the Deep South States by at least 5 to 1. If there is a bloc vote on the basis of race, the candidate backed by the Negro vote can be hurt rather than helped.

THE LINEUP IN BIGGEST CITIES

	Proportion of Negroes And Other Nonwhites To Whites in Voting-Age Population
New York	1 Negro – 7 Whites
Chicago	1 Negro – 4 Whites
Los Angeles	1 Negro – 5 Whites
Philadelphia	1 Negro – 3 Whites
Detroit	1 Negro – 3 Whites
Baltimore	1 Negro – 2 Whites
Houston	1 Negro – 4 Whites
Cleveland	1 Negro – 3 Whites
Washington	1 Negro – 1 White
St. Louis	1 Negro – 3 Whites
Milwaukee	1 Negro – 13 Whites
San Francisco	1 Negro – 6 Whites
Boston	1 Negro – 11 Whites
Dallas	1 Negro – 5 Whites
New Orleans	1 Negro – 2 Whites

RESULT: Even in the largest cities, white voters far outnumber Negroes and in a bloc-voting contest would run away with the election. The one exception: Washington, D. C., where Negroes almost exactly equal whites, in voting-age population.

THE NEGRO VOTE IN NOVEMBER

for Governor made an issue of an executive order banning discrimination in places under State license. This order had been issued by the retiring Democratic Governor. The Republican came within about 15,000 votes of beating the Democratic nominee, who had been expected to win by an overwhelming vote.

In Philadelphia, where Democrats usually win by heavy majorities, the Democratic mayor narrowly won re-election after a series of racial incidents.

In Boston, the biggest vote for any candidate went to a school-committee chairman who opposed Negro demands for transferring pupils out of their neighborhood schools to achieve a racial "balance" in enrollment.

This election year has brought additional indications of a reaction by white voters against Negro demands.

Alabama's segregationist Governor George Wallace polled 264,100 votes in Wisconsin's presidential primary on April 7.

Kansas City voters, that same day, barely approved a broadening of the city's antidiscrimination ordinance. In parts of Kansas City, the white vote was almost as solidly against the proposition as the Negro vote was for it.

Seattle, Wash., defeated an "open housing" measure in a public vote earlier this year. A similar ordinance had been repealed earlier in Tacoma.

On January 11, white voters combined to defeat the candidate favored by Negroes in Louisiana's run-off primary for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Sounding alarms. Politicians are beginning to speak out against Negro demonstrations that lead to violence or to disruption of a city's life.

In Cleveland, as Negro groups began a boycott of two downtown stores and a newspaper on April 14, Mayor Ralph Locher said people "are getting fed up" with civil-rights "extremists."

In Congress, on April 14, New York's two Republican Senators denounced Negro plans to stall traffic by letting their cars run out of gas on roads leading to the New York World's Fair. Both of the Senators—Jacob K. Javits and Kenneth B. Keating—are strong supporters of the civil-rights bill in Congress.

What all this points to is a growing awareness among politicians that some of the old axioms of politics may no longer hold true. Doubt is growing that control of the Negro vote is the key to political success today.

NEGROES ON THE MOVE—WHERE THEY SETTLE

Broad changes are developing in the pattern of Negro migrations in the U. S.

As population experts see it, these are the latest trends:

- Negroes who leave the South are no longer flocking exclusively into the overcrowded big cities of the Eastern seaboard and the Midwest.
- Instead, Negroes now are moving to the West—particularly to California.
- Also, it is now the medium-sized cities, rather than the big cities, that are getting the biggest percentage gains in Negro population.

In the last two decades, more than 3 million Negroes have left the South. The biggest outflow has been from Mississippi, Arkansas, North Carolina, Alabama and South Carolina.

This exodus of Negroes from the South has slowed a bit—largely because many of the younger Negroes already have left. But latest available census checks show that the exodus is still continuing.

Where do the Negroes go now?

California, in recent years, has picked up more than any other State. New York runs second.

California now is estimated to have more than 1 million Negroes out of a total population of almost 18 million.

The big Negro concentrations in California are in the Los Angeles area, San Diego, Sacramento, San Francisco and Oakland.

In Oregon and Washington, increases in Negro population are found in Portland, Seattle and some smaller cities.

Elsewhere in the West, such places as Denver, Phoenix and Tucson are getting more Negroes.

Back of the changes. Why is the pattern of Negro migration changing?

Labor experts in Washington say that changing economic and employment conditions are strong factors. Negroes are reported to be slowing down their migration to cities where they hear that factories are laying off help and job opportunities are generally scarce.

Many other authorities believe that a tougher policy on administration of public-relief payments has slowed up Negro migration to certain areas.

In Washington, D.C., for instance, the relief budget and the number of public-assistance cases—85 per cent of which involve nonwhites—have dropped considerably in recent years. There also has been a tightening up on enforcement of eligibility rules for relief.

During this same period of relief tightening, Negro migration into the capital also has dropped off.

In southern California, even the Negro community is beginning to grumble about Negro migrants who come in to establish residence and get on the relief rolls. A recent study showed that 1 in 10.6 Negroes is on relief in California, compared with 1 in 182.6 whites.

A Negro view. Said one Negro leader in Los Angeles: "Negroes here are beginning to look at the Southern Negro migrants as a tax burden, just as the whites do."

Further radical changes in Negro migration are seen ahead. Prof. C. Horace Hamilton of the University of North Carolina, a former president of the Population Association of America, has made these predictions:

- By 1980, the total Negro population in the U. S. will rise to 29.5 million—from the present 20 million.
- Only 40 per cent of the Negroes will live in an area—16 Southern and Southeastern States and the District of Columbia—which now has 60 per cent of U. S. Negro population.
- By the year 2000, the Negro population in this Southern and Southeastern area will shrink further to no more than 28 per cent, possibly only 15 per cent, of the nation's total.
- At least 26 per cent of U. S. Negroes will then be living in the West, compared with 6 per cent at present.

Demonstrators March, Interrupt Wallace

Selma Times-Journ., 4-30-64

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP)—Alabama Gov. George Wallace was interrupted for 10 minutes by marching, singing demonstrators at his University of Notre Dame appearance Wednesday night, but seemed undaunted. "I accept the nomination," Wallace said with a smile as part of a crowd of 5,000 students in the university field house marched around the hall and before the platform.

Many carried anti - Wallace signs. A few supported him. There was another demonstration of about 400 pickets outside the fieldhouse.

The demonstration ceased, after a majority of students started to shout, "Let him speak, let him speak."

Amidst the heckling there was frequent loud applause as the Alabama governor launched another attack on the civil rights bill and repeated his contention that such matters should be left to state and local government.

Wallace is campaigning for the May 5 Indiana Democratic presidential preference primary. He opposes Indiana Gov. Matthew E. Welsh, a stand-in for President Johnson.

Wednesday night's speech was the governor's second major appearance as he resumed his campaign in the Hoosier State. He faced newsmen at a conference earlier in South Bend. That appearance also was picketed.

About 100 picketers, shouting "Go home, go home," paraded in front of a downtown hotel where Wallace held the session.

Reporters asked Wallace to comment on charges leveled against him by Welsh and other groups, but he only replied:

"I've been called all kinds of names. I'm used to that. I have not one unkind word to say about your governor. He's a fine high-type man."

The hotel demonstrators, both white and Negro, carried signs which read "Remember JFK, not KKK," "Wallace is a Bigot," "Down With Wallace," and "We Don't Want Segregation."

Asked about Welsh's charge that Wallace has formed a network of political spies to keep files on those who oppose him, Wallace said in a sarcastic tone:

"Oh, we're swarming with spies in Alabama."

Asked for comment about former Birmingham attorney Charles Morgan Jr., who has long opposed him and has made television tapes for the Indiana Democratic state committee to use in this campaign, Wallace said:

"Morgan is not an Alabamian at this time; he has left the state. If you want to know about Charles Morgan, contact the Birmingham Bar Association."

Wallace will hold a press conference Friday in Fort Wayne, and that evening address students at Ball State Teachers College in Muncie. It was reported that Wallace then would visit informally Friday night with editors registering for a May 2-3 meeting in Muncie of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association.

Wallace Refuses Reply To Critics

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) —Criticisms leveled at Alabama Gov. George Wallace Wednesday came from numerous and varied quarters, but the governor said he would not reply to any of them.

"We don't care to reply to these nefarious attacks which have no basis in truth," Wallace said through his press secretary, Bill Jones.

Attacks on Wallace ranged from the Methodist bishop of Indianapolis to the Indiana Urban League.

Directors of the National Urban League in Indiana criticized the Alabama governor in a statement by Chairman William J. Brown of South Bend, representing the Urban League directors in Anderson, Elkhart, Marion, Fort Wayne, Gary, and South Bend.

H. Dale Brown, Marion County (Indianapolis) Republican chairman, and his Democratic counterpart, Judson F. Haggerty — without naming Wallace — announced in an unprecedented joint statement that "we want no copperheads in our midst."

"Copperhead" was the name applied to Southern sympathizers in the North during the Civil War.

Bishop Richard C. Raines, head of the 1,300 Indiana Methodist churches, issued an attack on Wallace from Pittsburgh, Pa. where Raines is attending the Methodist General Conference. He accused Wallace of misrepresenting facts about the civil rights bill.

Wallace has repeatedly attacked the bill during his campaign here for the May 5 Democratic presidential primary.

Republicans On Civil Rights

Republican policy on civil rights shapes up as a tougher one than the Democrats' in some respects, if an influential GOP committee prevails. A new paper issued by the Republican citizens group, called the Critical Issues Council, even proposes to cut back the number of congressmen of any state that persists in denying voting rights to Negroes.

The punitive proposal, made with dead seriousness, can hardly be called the work of liberals. Former President Eisenhower's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, is chairman of the council. Its membership includes Adm. Arleigh Burke, Arthur F. Burns, Raymond Saulnier, Thomas S. Gates, Gen. Lauris Norstad, Lewis L. Strauss and Walter H. Judd.

It is a measure of the country's commitment to civil rights that such a Republican group should be found endorsing most objectives of the Democratic administration's bill and proposing to toughen some of it.

Preoccupation with the current Senate filibuster can delude persons who lose perspective. It is probably true that the nation is reacting adversely to the wrecking-crew tactics of some heedless Negro demonstrators, and that Alabama's George Wallace is tearing up the patch in Indiana. But the undistracted realist who wants to see where he is going will note that both parties are going forward, not turning back, on civil rights.

The Republican committee endorses FEPC and public accommodations legislation; it suggests a toughening in the education section of the present rights bill to speed up school desegregation; it concludes, "The civil rights bill now in Congress may not be enough to assure the Negro's right to vote."

If "painfully slow" judicial enforcement "continues to be inadequate," the GOP committee writes, then "under the 14th Amendment state representation in Congress can be reduced in proportion to the numbers of voters systematically denied the franchise."

How can this be justified? "If Negroes are counted when representation (in Congress) is determined," the Republicans state, "then they should be allowed to vote.

"If they cannot vote, they ought not to be counted for purposes of (a state's) representation. Republicans have recognized that it may be necessary to implement this alternative."

Democratic policymakers have not yet gone this far. But they may. To deny the vote to a qualified Negro citizen is not thought to be right by most of the nation (or by most of the South's people, I believe). It is those who do think it is all right who should note the facts most soberly, for their wishes are the ones in conflict.

Goldwater Can Survive Loss Of Negro Votes, Tribble Says

Ga. Const. 5-4-64

Georgia's new Republican chairman, Joe Tribble, predicted Sunday there will be enough of an increase in white votes to offset Negro losses if Sen. Barry Goldwater is the GOP presidential nominee.

He also said Negroes were not on the slate of state Republican officers or convention delegates—for the first time in perhaps a half century—because they have not worked for Goldwater.

"To me, the only significance that this has is that the people in the leadership of the group that won yesterday are people who believe in the philosophy expressed by Sen. Goldwater, and there have not been many—or any—Negroes who have been in the forefront of this effort," Tribble said.

He continued, "There is certainly no thought on my part to exclude or include anyone except on the basis of their allegiance to the principles that we endorse and on the basis of the effort they are willing to put forth."

Tribble agreed, however, that Negroes "don't agree with Sen. Goldwater's philosophy to a great extent."

"But I think on the other hand there are more local offices and more local issues which will attract them (Negroes) so they can conscientiously continue to support the Republican Party," he added.

He said the convention did vote to put one Negro on each of its state convention committees and that it was "recognition of the fact that in the Atlanta area Negroes have worked hard and have been influential in Republican party affairs."

The new chairman was asked if he agreed with observers who concluded the convention was anti-Atlanta because everything it offered (candidates and stands) was rejected.

"Not at all," he said. "I

Democratic Gov. Carl Sanders, asked for comment on the tumultous Republican convention, said, "It seems now that the Democratic party actions in electing party officers is not nearly as bad as it used to appear when the other party acted like it didn't have these problems.

"I'm just glad we are not having the problems they are having. These are the facts of life when you are trying to operate a party involving people with differences of opinion," Sanders added.

Tribble, a 43-year-old engineer, made the comments after winning the chairmanship by a more than 2-to-1 vote in a bitter convention session Saturday.

A prominent Republican said while the convention was in progress, "What has been done here is to read the Negroes out of the Republican Party in Georgia."

The exclusion of Negroes from state office and the convention delegation came in a city where the vote traditionally has gone Republican.

more than 50 per cent of the nationwide total thus far in his drive for the presidency. An Associated Press tally said he now has 206 delegates throughout the country. A total of 655 are needed to win the nomination.

Simultaneously with the Georgia convention, Tennessee Republicans adopted a resolution endorsing Goldwater's candidacy.

Although they were not pledged, it appeared that 22 of the 26 Tennessee delegates leaned toward Goldwater.

Like Georgia, Tennessee selected the first all-white national convention delegation in more than 50 years.

In both states, the stronger Republican areas opposed the pledging of delegates to Goldwater. First District Republicans in mountainous East Tennessee fought the resolution endorsing Goldwater. Ninth District Georgians, in the same mountain chain, have two uncommitted delegates.

However, the leaders of the Draft Goldwater movement appear to be in firm control of most of the Southern organizations for 1964.

Goldwater thus far has netted 75.4 per cent of the delegate votes in the South. He is expected to continue winning that many of the remaining delegate positions.

North Carolina—Twenty-four pledged or leaning to Goldwater; two to former Vice President Richard Nixon.

South Carolina—All 16 pledged to Goldwater.

Kentucky — Twenty-four unpledged, all leaning to Sen. Thruston B. Morton.

Louisiana—Twenty pledged to Goldwater.

Georgia—Twenty-two pledged or leaning to Goldwater; two unpledged.

Tennessee — Twenty-two pledged or leaning to Goldwater; one leaning to Nixon, three unpledged.

Texas — Saturday preference primary indicated 3-to-1 preference for Goldwater. (Convention will be held June 16 to pick delegates.)

Johnson Faces Choice Of 'Folksy' Vs 'Dignity' As Political Image

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Johnson will soon have to decide whether he had better reach out for more of the "folksy" vote or try to regain some of the "dignity" vote he may recently have lost. Both Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and Sen. Barry Goldwater tried "folksy" tactics in the New Hampshire primary, but the dignified and silent Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge far away in Viet Nam won over both of them. Promptly the Arizona senator announced that he wasn't going to pursue such tactics thereafter and would endeavor to present a different image appearing to the thoughtful citizens.

Many a politican has made the mistake of assuming that the best way to win votes is to do a lot of handshaking and baby kissing. But this hardly swings the majority. What mainly influences the votes of the people are policies, national or international, that touch them in vital spots, including the pocketbook.

News items on political personalities affect the sensitivity of individual voters differently. to many people the other day that there was such an outcry from dog lovers when the President pulled the ears of his two beagles. The inclination of some was to regard this as a joke, while other said it was the act of a cruel man.

It was very wise of Johnson, on the other hand, to make his tour in the Appalachian region and to manifest publicly his sympathy with the poverty-stricken. This was not only good politics but the act of a man who is humane and sympathetic.

So it all depends on what "gimmicks" are tried and what maneuvers are likely to be emphasized by the press, despite the casual manner in which they are originally carried out.

Basically, however, a vast number of voters, especially women, like to see their president act always in a dignified manner. The late President Kennedy was almost without exception, dignified in his public appearances, but he, too, perhaps unwittingly, made at least one slip. He was photographed by the press as he appeared in bathing trunks on the sands of a California beach while a lot of young women crowded around him to shake hands. This led to a good deal of critical comment, not because it was in any sense an improper scene but because many people do not like to see the President of the United States in such informal garb and surroundings.

President Johnson can be dignified when he wishes to be. In almost all of his speeches, he has been shown delivering his remarks in a mood of sedate and quiet dignity. But when people also see in the newspapers photographs of a president pulling the ears of a dog or strolling around among tourists on the White House grounds, an impression is created among some voters that the President isn't as dignified as he ought to be or that he is sacrificing time he should be spending on the all-important tasks of the presidency.

Indeed, there are persons who used to disapprove when President Eisenhower played golf. They didn't object to the exercise itself, but they wondered if he shouldn't have been more at his desk, pondering matters of state. There was a tendency at the time, even in the press, to imply that Eisenhower wasn't working as seriously at his job as he should have been doing. The impression was largely built up because of frequent references in the press, together with pictures of Eisenhower on golf courses. Reiteration of an unfavorable point sometimes produces a lasting prejudice.

In some respects it seems unfair that presidents can't "do what comes naturally," but somehow not all of the voters are as fully informed as they ought to be. They didn't know, for example, that Eisenhower sometimes worked late and regularly got to his office around 7:30 in the morning to study his papers and documents and messages from abroad. Nor do the voters who may be critical realize that President Johnson also works late and gets up early in the morning to spend a lot of time at his desk or on the telephone. He is really a hard-working President.

But much of this concept of a president's fidelity to his job can suddenly be erased if an image is created that he is perhaps lacking in dignity. Americans are instinctively monarchial — perhaps it is a throwback to ancestral days. They like to see their president functioning almost with a kind of royal demeanor. They are delighted, of course, to see every now and then evidences of his compassion and humaneness, but it's the repeated adventures in what appear to be "folksy" stunts—practiced just a few months before an election—that do not go over so well. A smart politician is one who knows when to turn off the levity and turn on the dignity.

Some Would Vote for Mickey Mouse

Gov. George Wallace, the Alabama gamecock, has emerged from another Northern hit, feathers disarrayed, but crowing victoriously over getting in some good pecks.

The governor is not the only one impressed with his vote in Wisconsin and Indiana. Civil rights supporters are showing signs of alarm and confusion. It's time, then, to look at the Wallace phenomenon, to see what it is and what it isn't.

First, we should dispose of the fiction that Wallace's Yankee vote is essentially Republican in origin, given either out of conviction or in an effort to embarrass Democrats.

In Wisconsin, where cross-over voting is easy and there was no GOP presidential contest, it is true that the Alabamian scored heavily in traditional Republican areas. But his sizeable vote in Indiana was mostly from registered Democrats.

The Indiana Republican Right was voting for Barry Goldwater.

In fact, Wallace might well be viewed as the Democrats' Goldwater, since the bases of their appeals are similar.

That is not to say either is grounding his campaign on racism. Wallace indeed has been careful to shun the label and paint himself a friend of Negroes in his Northern forays. Instead, he has centered his campaign on attacking big government, invasion of personal property, centralization of authority and other such domestic bugaboos.

Most of us, to one degree or another, are concerned about such problems, which have grown so large that the individual often seems impotent to handle them. The more uncritical voters are inclined to wave the banner and pull the lever of the candidate who s loudest in denouncing troublesome problems, even when he offers no realistic solution. In the short haul, some will vote for Huey Long, Gerald L. K. Smith, Charlie McCarthy or Mickey Mouse.

This quicksilver kind of voter also reacts to his most recent set of irritations. Thus he will vote for a Wallace to protest recent Negro demonstrations, and forget the Alabama bombings and clubbings and door-standing of last summer.

Fortunately, ours is a long presidential campaign. Even the mercurial voter has a chance to look beneath the thin veneer of the glib-tongued hucksters. In the end, Gov. Wallace will have to content himself with a home-state stage.

Indiana to Deny Wallace Three Delegates He Won

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI)—Indiana Democratic leaders conferred Wednesday on ways to give Gov. Matthew E. Welsh all 51 Hoosier delegates to the national convention as a result of his victory over Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace in Tuesday's presidential primary.

Wallace, who scored about 30 per cent of the party's statewide vote total, carried the populous 1st Congressional District and ordinarily would be entitled to the votes of the district's three delegates on the first presidential nominating ballot.

Final unofficial returns gave Welsh 369,419 votes, Wallace 170,867, and three far outdistanced rivals a total of about 31,000.

State Democratic Chairman J. Manfred Core said the state party convention probably would be asked to elect national convention delegates at large, but added that the decision might not be made formally until the state party reorganization meeting on May 16.

Such a move would give Welsh all the Indiana votes, to be turned over intact to President Johnson.

Core minimized the possibility of court action by Wallace to save his three delegates from Lake and Porter Counties in northwestern Indiana's populous Gary - Hammond steel belt.

The exuberant Wallace, boasting that his 30 per cent showing against Welsh would give his fellow right-wingers and states' righters enough power to decide who wins the presidency, prepared to plunge into the Maryland primary campaign.

Wallace planned to fly home to Montgomery, Ala., late Wednesday, go to New Orleans today for a speech before a national group of cartoonists, and then swing into the Maryland campaign Friday with an open house in Baltimore.

Republicans Are Dismayed

5-16-64

A series of Republican statements, South, East, and West, catch the eye.

1. In Georgia, three elected Republicans, a state legislator, and two members of Atlanta's Board of Aldermen, have charged that the Goldwater faction, which seized control of the state organization in the convention of May 2, has begun a "ruthless and unprincipled attempt to destroy the first real accomplishments in building two parties in the state." Having run as Republicans and been elected, men say they will "not sit back and allow these gains in elected Republicans to be destroyed by a few calculating, power-hungry individuals who today presume to call themselves Republicans." (The individuals referred to by the Young Republicans had declared themselves not merely Republicans but to be "sound and true conservatives." This was after their action of reading Negroes out of the party and declaring they would make up for the loss with new white voters.)

In California

2. In California a volunteer organization calling itself "The Committee of Responsible Republicans" has urged Republicans to vote against the Goldwater slate of delegates. Senator Goldwater has won the endorsement of the archly conservative California Republican Assembly and the United Republicans of California, an ultra-right faction that broke away from the Assembly because it was regarded as too liberal.

Stating that one of its major aims was to prevent an ultra-conservative Goldwater delegation from having a hand in drafting the convention platform and the selection of California's next Republican chairman, the Committee of Responsible Republicans said:

"The Goldwater delegation is not representative of our Republican party inasmuch as there are no Negroes, Mexican-Americans, Orientals, or anyone from the Jewish faith on the delegation."

3. In Tennessee, the Goldwater "conservatives" also managed to gain control. The net result was that for the first time in half a century there will not be a Negro delegate to the national convention. There, too, Republicans outside the Goldwater group are shocked and dismayed at the loss of thousands of votes, white and Negro. In the Volunteer State, too, ruthlessness and a not-well-hidden racist attitude is splitting the party's strength.

New York Leaders

4. In New York State a number of Republican leaders, including U.S. Senator Javits, noting the ill-concealed anti-semitism, the anti-Negro attitude, and the antipathy for the Mexican and Oriental American on the part of most of the "conservative" organizations supporting Senator Goldwater, have announced they will not support the Arizona Redeemer if he is nominated.

News reporters of the press, radio and TV are learning that the famous Goldwater smile goes no deeper than the teeth. When "Mr. Conservative" arrived in Atlanta to speak to the Georgia convention, he brushed aside a mike held before him at the airport, brusquely telling the reporter to "get that damned thing out of the way."

In New Hampshire, Oregon, and California the senator has revealed a lack of patience and ease in the give and take of campaigning.

Conservatism is an honorable word.

But it has been seized by certain factions that go against the American principles that have enabled a plural society to make this nation strong and prosperous.

A question which honest conservatives must ask is what they are going to do about those "conservatives" who clamor most in behalf of Senator Goldwater.

And secondly, to examine the mind and philosophy of the senator, himself.

LBJ's Handshake Awesome Weapon

Atl. Const. 5-17-64

NORTH CAROLINA

By RAY JENKINS
Raleigh Bureau, The Charlotte Observer
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., May 16—President Lyndon B. Johnson captured Eastern North Carolina, with no weapon save his calloused, outstretched right hand.

The state was one of his stops on the six-state tour he made to dramatize his war on poverty.

Ten thousand people greeted him upon his arrival in Goldsboro, and 50,000 more lined the streets of Rocky Mount to hear him speak. His welcome was tumultuous.

Both of the state's U.S. senators and a clutch of congressmen basked in LBJ's glow. And a fixture in Johnson's shadow was Congressman Harold D. Cooley.

THE WILLIAM MARLOW family, tenant farmers visited by Johnson, live in Nash County in Cooley's district. Cooley, dean of the Tar Heel delegation, faces primary opposition on May 30 in the person of R. Mayne Albright, Raleigh attorney.

Albright's supporters were more than a little chagrined to see Cooley at the right hand of the President throughout the visit.

Johnson had the usual laudatory words for the state's congressional delegation, but he added a little frosting on the cake in Cooley's case, terming him "an untiring champion" of the anti-poverty program.

At the unpainted, clapboard Marlow home, Johnson and the farmer, put completely at ease by the President, chatted about Marlow's bum back and the difficulty of sharecropping.

"MY DADDY used to farm on halves," Johnson told Marlow. "It was rough, with five children. Do the best you can, and if we get it (the anti-poverty program) through, maybe we can help you."

The war on poverty apparently has become a holy crusade so far as Johnson is concerned. As he talked about it, he rattled the lectern with thumps of his fists, and stretched his long arms forth in beseeching gestures.

"I want economic opportunity spread all across this country," he said, "wherever people live, whatever their race and whatever their work."

Before he spoke in Rocky Mount, Johnson was briefed on North Carolina's campaign to reduce poverty, working principally through the privately financed North Carolina Fund.

THE SECRET SERVICE agents guarding the President were edgy, and after watching Johnson practice his brand of political magic, it was easy to understand why.

Upon landing at Goldsboro, he almost immediately walked to the rope barriers holding back the crowd and began shaking hands.

On the five-mile drive from the tenant farm home, twilight was deepening into night, but Johnson stopped the motorcade several times to greet the people.

When he spoke from the Rocky Mount platform, he stood under a spotlight of television lights while his listeners stood in the outer circle of darkness. At the end of the talk, he vaulted by the agents and once again began shaking hands.

Any Republicans who watched LBJ operate in North Carolina must have come away with sinking sensations in the pits of their stomachs.

The Meaning of Oregon

Pol. Nat.

A television commentator wondered Friday night if Nelson Rockefeller's victory in Oregon could in any way be ascribed to the fact that Oregon has the highest divorce rates in the nation.

In this day of super-analysis, such a question was relevant — but not very much. But it did point up that Oregon — like New Hampshire or Nebraska or Illinois or any other state — has peculiarities common to itself and that its presidential primary vote should be viewed in that light.

In contemplating the smorgasbord of candidates on Friday's ballot, the Oregonians actually showed a surprising amount of indecision.

Gov. Rockefeller led the field by a wide margin, but nevertheless, he was the choice of only 33 per cent of the voters, which is hardly a ringing endorsement. He campaigned the hardest, spent the most, and was the only one of the several candidates who actually expressed much interest in the Oregon vote.

But his victory, such as it was, served several purposes, and clarified the Republican situation to an extent.

First, it reestablished Rockefeller as the chief figure in the stop-Goldwater movement.

Secondly, it exposed the clay feet of the Henry Cabot Lodge candidacy, which was one of the oddest political phenomena of recent times. Lodge himself has no doubt been amazed by the popularity his name has enjoyed this spring. But there was always a phantasy-like quality about the Lodge movement and now he can relax and concentrate on his duties in Saigon.

Thirdly, the Oregon results probably laid to rest the hopes of Gov. William Scranton of Pennsylvania. His name was on the ballot, although against his wishes, and the voters avoided it studiously. He ran last in the six-candidate field, as Sen. Margaret Chase Smith almost doubled the small vote given to Scranton.

Fourthly, Oregon put another dent in Richard Nixon's image, perhaps a fatal one as far as a possible second nomination is concerned.

As in New Hampshire, Nixon ran fourth. In each state, his 1960 running mate, Lodge, finished far ahead of him. Lodge's liabilities, being what they are, Nixon should have been the superior vote getter, particularly in Oregon, which gave him a good margin over John F. Kennedy in the 1960 election.

Fifthly, Oregon certainly was not a feather in Barry Goldwater's cap. He ran a distant third, but since that was about where he expected to run, the damage was limited.

But on a negative basis, Oregon's result may help Goldwater by reducing the chance of an anti-Goldwater coalition in California.

Rockefeller received a boost, but it will be a mixed blessing. Many Republicans who have been on the fence, hoping that they could go with Lodge or Nixon or Scranton, will have to decide whether they are willing to support a stop-Goldwater movement that could well develop into a Rockefeller movement that couldn't be stopped.

In other words, the choice is restored to what it was before most of the shouting started — Goldwater or Rockefeller.

Or a deadlock, in which a candidate will be called from the wings who is unmarred by the primary battles.

Rockefeller's Upset Oregon Win Ups California Stock

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Louis Harris of The Los Angeles Times Syndicate is a veteran of 17 years in the field of national public opinion sampling. "The Harris Survey" is a feature in The Enquirer each Monday. In addition, as the news warrants, Harris provides Enquirer readers with "bonus" surveys.)

By LOUIS HARRIS
Distributed by Los Angeles Times Syndicate

PORTLAND, Ore. — Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's smashing upset victory in Oregon drives up his stock in the June 2 California primary.

Before Oregon, Rockefeller was running behind Sen. Barry Goldwater in California, 45 per cent to 55 per cent.

The question now is whether the last two weeks of California will see a Rockefeller surge comparable to the last two weeks here.

In Oregon, Rockefeller's victory was fashioned essentially from a revolt sparked among business and professional executives who wanted their party to have a moderate alternative to Goldwater.

The revolt spread from the suburbs to the cities, and the vote switched from an absent Henry Cabot Lodge to an active, on the scene Nelson Rockefeller. A breakdown of the Rockefeller vote clearly shows that he ran strongest in the suburbs of Oregon last Friday:

BREAKDOWN OF ROCKEFELLER VOTE

	Per Cent
State-wide	33
Suburbs	37
Cities	35
Towns	33
Rural	27

The movement toward Rockefeller was first spotted in polling a week before the election and was located primarily in the suburbs at that time.

It was made up first chiefly of business executives and professional people who felt the GOP needed an active, vigorous alternative to Sen. Barry Goldwater. Reports that Goldwater would win the GOP nomination were he to take the California primary were widely talked about.

Rockefeller also communicated with voters here that he cared and really wanted their vote. He ran as the underdog. By contrast, voters felt no urgency to vote for Henry Cabot Lodge. He was criticized for not coming home to campaign. The number who called Lodge a "lacy campaigner" tripled in the last three weeks. A majority of 68 per cent of these Republicans were critical of Viet Nam and attributed responsibility for it to Lodge. The ambassador proved to be more appealing as a residual candidate in New Hampshire — the man few objected to — than as the serious front runner in Oregon.

In California, Rockefeller starts out strongest in the cities, among professional people and small businessmen. Before Oregon, the New Yorker was the first choice of no more than one in ten Republicans in California. But he was the second choice of another one in four. The real battle in the June 2 primary will center on the suburbs, making up fully 43 per cent of the vote. Goldwater begins with a 57-43 per cent lead in the suburbs of California. In Oregon, just such suburban voters responded most to Rockefeller's campaign. In California, Rockefeller will need to repeat the pattern to win.

There is no doubt now that 1964 is the year of the most independent voter behavior in a long time. Primaries can be subject to the vagaries of widespread last minute shifts and both Oregon and New Hampshire dramatically illustrate this fact. There are no party lines in primaries to cut down rapid switching.

As a consequence, polling primaries is hazardous at best. The Harris survey caught some of the shift to Rockefeller at the end, but not nearly the magnitude nor scope that it finally took.

Few Regard Governor As Joke Anymore

Selma Times-Jour. 5-18-64

By JULES LOH

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP)—When the Maryland Democratic presidential primary campaign opened, Sen. Daniel Brewster, D-Md., said his opponent was nothing more than "a dangerous joke."

Whatever Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace may seem to his foes, few of them, including Brewster, actually regard him as a joke.

Indeed as Tuesday, day of reckoning approaches almost a dozen Senate colleagues have come to Maryland to help Brewster and the senator has completely reversed his campaign strategy.

Having referred to Wallace initially as "an outside agitator" who traffics in "half-truths and outright lies," Brewster suddenly switched and declared that Wallace, after all, was a visitor in the state and should be treated courteously.

"What has infuriated my opposition in Wisconsin, Indiana and now Maryland," Wallace said in an interview," "s that they have portrayed me as a bigot and racist and some sort of dope, and it has backfired on 'em.

"Folks just aren't fooled by

someone who calls another man a bigot in the name of tolerance. And if I'm a racist, so are the thousands who have voted for me. But you know that's not the case."

That point is one Wallace has been trying to establish for years.

In 1956, when he was a member of the platform committee at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, Wallace said:

"The South must let the world know that racial segregation is the only sane, sensible and nonhypocritical way in which our people can live in harmony together. The propaganda that has been purposely disseminated to the effect that those who believe in segregation are anti-Negro is a downright lie."

The words could have come from any one of his campaign speeches in Maryland, Wisconsin or Indiana. But now he adds a postscript:

"I've discovered in these trips North that there are many millions of segregationists in the United States. Of course they don't call themselves segregationists, but they segregate. The only real difference between them and the people of Alabama is that down there we preach and practice the same thing."

Some close friends of Wallace say he definitely has fleeting visions of the White House When asked, Wallace doesn't deny it outright. The most he will say is "I have no illusions about the difficulty of a Southern governor being elected president."

Maryland Democratic Chairman Harry Troth Gross predicts Wallace will get about 25 per cent of Tuesday's vote — Less than either of the other primaries he has entered. Other observers say it will be closer to 40 per cent.

Wallace Says Racist Label Cuts His Vote

Politics National

By GODFREY SPERLING, JR.
The Christian Science Monitor

BALTIMORE — It was in the first early hours of a new morning, and Alabama's Governor, George C. Wallace, stood at the threshhold of his motel room here. He was talking to two of his aides and expressing hesitancy about going into Cambridge.

"Could the police keep everything in control?" he asked. He was assured they could.

"But what if there should be a riot?" he asked. "The people here can still express their opinion at the polls whether I go into Cambridge or not."

Here an aide, charged with Governor Wallace's security, said, "If they stop you in Cambridge, they will keep you from going anywhere here."

Soon the Governor sat down to continue an interview that had begun at the airport an hour or so before — when he arrived from Montgomery just before midnight in his small plane. "As you say," he said, "I've been wondering about going into Cambridge."

THE GOVERNOR SAID there is an important element involved in his campaign that has not been noticed. He said that "any Southerner not handicapped by the controversy surrounding the Wallace name could probably be getting an even bigger vote in the Northern primaries."

Here the Governor, as he has on other occasions, said he is suffering from a false image, that he really is not a "racist." "What is a racist?" we asked.

"A racist is someone who hates the Negroes," he said. "I love the Negroes . . .When I was in the Legislature I sponsored a bill that has given the Negroes some of the best trade schools in the South. I happen to believe that the Negroes can move ahead without desegregation, that segregation is better in my state. But I say any state that wants to desegregate — it is up to the people of that state to say. . ."

"Who are racists in the South—a Faubus, a Barnett, just who?" we asked.

"No politician I know of," said Governor Wallace. "Don't know of any who hates the Negro."

"History," I said, "could look at it your way and say you contributed to awakening the society to the excesses of social protest. But it also may say you helped hold back social change, thus contributing to the intensity of the heat when it came."

Said Governor Wallace: "I haven't held anything back. I've only helped."

"How about when you appeared at the university last year?" we asked.

"Why, I kept things from happening there," he said. "I kept order. If I hadn't been there, things would have gotten out of hand."

This is, of course, the way Governor Wallace sees himself, as he campaigns in primaries. His opponents see him as one who is symbolic of white efforts to hold back the Negro.

What is the Alabama Governor hoping to accomplish in these primaries?

"I hope my effort will awaken the Negro leadership — so they at least change leadership to those who are responsible. I'm hopeful they will rid themselves of the Communists within their groups," said the Governor.

"I HOPE, TOO, that the votes I am getting in Wisconsin, Indiana, and now Maryland will help the President, and will help Republican leaders — to give them some idea of what a lot of white people in this country think about this problem and about civil-rights legislation."

Does Governor Wallace not feel that the Negroes had some grievances? He said he does but he is opposed to the forceful ways they are using to bring about change.

How then should the Negroes seek change? They do have the right of petition, do they not? Governor Wallace agreed to the latter. "Why not the peaceful protest march then?"

"Because," he said, "the marching leads to violence. It has a record of leading to violence. Things can too easily get out of hand."

What then should the Negroes do to move ahead? "The Negroes would be much better off to focus on getting better schools and on getting their people educated — to get them ready for opportunities when they come. They should concentrate their energies on reducing dropouts. I think they would have been better off in building a Negro school with that $5 million they used in getting one Negro into college at Oxford, Mississippi."

Does the Governor really think his campaign in the North will have any effect on current legislation in Congress?

"I really don't know. But I hope it will wake them up." continuing:

"But if this legislation passes, you will find that within two years people all over the country will be wanting it changed."

The Prospect Of Victory

President Johnson's popularity was believed to be high, but the burgeoning volume and strength of it as revealed during his dip into the states concerned with poverty in the Southern Appalachians was greater than even the most partisan had estimated.

Southern political leaders were impressed. There had been speculation that the President's firm support of civil rights legislation would hurt him. There was no sign of it. The President spoke plainly in the Deep South, in Atlanta and the smaller city of Gainesville. His approach was folksy, but logical. He was, he said, president of all the people. He was charged with responsibility for the constitutional rights of every American. Southerners, he said, would not expect him to be otherwise. There was applause. Those who do not agree with him joined in it. The President's candor was convincing.

There are no signs that Alabama's independent elector movement, led by Governor George Wallace, has any following save in Mississippi and, to a lesser extent, in Louisiana. Governor Wallace is not accepted as a Southern leader by other governors.

Southern Support

If the President's popularity and vigorous attention to duty and the politics of his party continue unabated, he will have the support of Southern senators and congressmen now opposing him on the rights bill. This may be true even in Mississippi if that state can manage to avoid racial disorders and violence during the long hot summer ahead. There is no mystery about this. The political power structure of the Southern Democratic state organizations do not believe the Republicans can win. These senators, congressmen, governors and local leaders have a large stake in a party victory that will keep a Democrat in the White House. They will not wish to jeopardize it.

Senator Goldwater, who may be the Republican nominee, has said the Republicans will win only if they receive heavy support from the South. They will not get it from the Deep South. At present there is a question mark over Florida and Virginia, but even there, the outlook for President Johnson is favorable. The Negro vote, which now is considerable in all Southern states except Alabama and Mississippi, will not go to the Republicans.

Southern Republicans who subscribe to the party principles as set forth by former President Eisenhower are now dismayed by the prospects of a decline in the progress being made in building a two-party system. The growing Negro vote was of major importance in the gains scored in two Eisenhower victories. They were able to carry this impetus over into the Nixon campaign. (In Georgia, the Negro vote declined in the 1960 campaign following appearances and speeches in the state by Senator Goldwater.)

Opinion Polls

Recent opinion polls report that the number of Americans who consider themselves Republicans is declining. The current figure is 27 per cent against 49 per cent who declare themselves Democrats and 24 per cent "independent." This latter category has been of increasing importance. Most of it went to Mr. Kennedy in 1960. It is not anticipated much, if any of it, will be moved to support Senator Goldwater. This, too, disturbs Southern "modern Republicans," especially those who have seen their state organizations taken over by Goldwater supporters who have, in Tennessee and Georgia, for example, literally read the Negro out of the party.

"We cannot build a two-party system in the South by operating the Southern Republican state organizations in a semi-Ku Klux Klan manner," commented one Southern Republican who had had much to do with the build-up of party strength.

This GOP dilemma aids the Democrats. The prospect of victory makes for unity.

Wallace Polls 42.66 Per Cent Of Maryland Vote

By LOUIS G. PANOS

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP)—Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, running as a stand-in for President Johnson, defeated Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace in a Maryland presidential primary clouded by a close vote and a murky legal question.

In a Democratic race pinned on his opposition to the civil rights bill pending in the Senate, Wallace drew 212,068 votes Tuesday, 42.66 per cent of the party total.

It was better than his showing in Indiana—29.8 per cent—or Wisconsin—33.7—and he claimed vindication in the Maryland vote of his stand against the rights bill originated by John F. Kennedy and pushed by Johnson.

Brewster, 41, a former Marine elected to the Senate only two years ago, was elated by his effort to preserve Maryland's 48 national nominating convention votes [illegible]hnson.

He had been tapped by the party organization—with Johnson's blessing—to take on Wallace in a border state with a recent history of racial strife marked by repeated outbreaks of violence in Cambridge.

Brewster wound up with 264,613 votes, 53.23 per cent of the total. The remaining 4 per cent were cast by voters preferring Andrew J. Easter, a Baltimore draftsman, or an uninstructed delegation to the national convention.

"We made the fight and we won and I'm glad," said Brewster.

He aimed this parting shot at Wallace: "In baseball, anyway, it's three strikes and you're out."

Wallace didn't see it that way. "This Maryland vote," he said, "should let them know in Washington and in both national parties that they can't get rid of us by calling us bad names."

The governor hinted of a possible technical challenge of the results because of Maryland's old unit vote system. Similar to the Electoral College vote in presidential elections, it makes it possible for a candidate to win a primary even though he trails in the popular vote.

A U.S. District Court in Baltimore has nullified the unit vote system in Maryland primaries for statewide office. It has set a hearing for Monday on a suit to apply the ban to the presidential primary also.

Brewster led in enough counties and Baltimore city districts to get a 92-79 margin in unit votes. But his popular vote edge in Baltimore County, which has 14 unit votes was only 106 out of 93,000 cast.

A reversal of the unofficial vote in that county when the official count is taken in about a week could change the unit vote picture, but Atty. Gen. Thomas B. Finan has said this would be meaningless.

They can't change the rules in the middle of the game," Wallace insisted. An aide said the Baltimore County canvass would be closely observed.

The Brewster-Wallace race pulled a record 54 per cent of eligible Democrats to the polls.

In other balloting:

—Republicans voted overwhelmingly to send an uninstructed delegation to their national convention, rebuffing two individual candidates, one of them a backer of Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater.

—Sen. J. Glenn Beall won Republican nomination to a third term, setting up a November race between him and Democrat Joseph D. Tydings. A personal friend of the late president, Tydings resigned as U.S. attorney to run against State Comptroller Louis L. Goldstein, who was backed by the party organization dominated by Gov. J. Millard Tawes.

—All congressional incumbents seeking renomination won.

In the Democratic presidential primary, Wallace carried 16 of 23 counties and two of six Baltimore city districts.

He swept all nine counties on the Eastern Shore of Chesapeake Bay, where Cambridge lies and which clings to the traditions of the Deep South.

Brewster's greatest vote came from Negro and Jewish neighborhoods in north and northwest Baltimore and the Montgomery County suburbs skirting Washington, D.C.

It was the last stop for Wallace on the primary trail. He isn't entered in the June 2 California race.

Wallace Lost 202-0 In Cambridge Area

5-21-64

CAMBRIDGE, Md. (AP) — Democratic voters voted 202-0 against Gov. George Wallace of Alabama in the Cambridge precinct which covers most of the town's Negro district.

National Guard troops used tear gas to quell a Negro demonstration in this racial trouble spot the same night Wallace addressed a white rally in town. The Alabama Democrat spoke a week before Tuesday's presidential primary, in which he lost to Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, but got almost 43 per cent of the state's vote.

There are 1,345 registered Negro voters in the Pine Street Precinct which covers most of Cambridge's 2nd Ward. Of the 576 Democrats, 202 voted—all for Brewster. Some 280 cambridge Negroes are registered in other precincts.

Negro Militancy Irked Maryland

AH. Const 5-21-64

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

(Copyright 1964 by the New York Times Co.)

BALTIMORE, Md.—Many white voters who supported Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama in Maryland apparently were voting more against Negro militancy than against the civil rights bill, an analysis of the returns indicated Wednesday.

This was the view of most political observers here following a detailed study of Tuesday's presidential preference and other primary voting.

The conclusion was based on results in a number of secondary primary contests that gave liberals and moderates clear majorities while Wallace was accumulating his most impressive showing in his three-state presidential primary campaign.

The governor's 42.8 per cent share of the Democratic primary vote here was one-third larger than his showing in Wisconsin and Indiana, where he polled about 30 per cent. But Maryland is a border state with a recent history of racial violence triggered by Negro militancy, and some increase in the percentage for the governor has been expected.

Before returning to Alabama Wednesday, Wallace called the results "a moral victory." Stressing the agreement among analysts that he had won a bare majority of the white vote, the governor said, "That is far more than I ever expected. If I had known I would get this kind of support I would have entered more primaries. I wish I had entered California. I'd have run good there."

Tuesday night the governor exclaimed, "If it hadn't been for the Nigger bloc vote, we'd have won it all." It was the first time since coming to Maryland he had used the term "Nigger" within earshot of newsmen. He had denied repeatedly that he was "a bigot or a racist."

A major factor in Wallace's bigger yield in Maryland was the popular rebuke given the administration of Gov. J. Millard Tawes and candidates associated with it, including Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, who made the favorite-son race against Wallace.

Brewster polled 53.6 per cent of the vote Tuesday, far less than he had counted on. In his 1962 election to the Senate, he received 62 per cent of the vote and led the Democratic ticket.

But the big upset of the day was the crushing victory in the Democratic senatorial race of Joseph D. Tydings over state controller Louis L. Goldstein, a veteran figure in Tawes' administration who is widely considered a popular and able official.

By JAMES D. WILLIAMS

WASHINGTON

If the Republican Party does nominate Barry Goldwater as its candidate for the Presidency, it should be prepared for the wholesale desertion from its already depleted ranks of colored party members.

For years the national Republican Party has literally forced colored voters into the arms of the Democrats by giving the appearance of not being really concerned about its members of the other side of the racial fence, and by its stubborn refusal to recognize the fact that Mr. Lincoln has been dead some time and the mere mention of his name no longer had the power to command the unswerving loyalty of the colored voter.

Instead of trying to halt the drift toward the Democrats that began under Roosevelt, the national party stumbled along the racial path with all the dexterity of a blind man in a strange dark alley making one stupid blunder after another.

The Republicans didn't so much lose the colored vote as it gave the colored vote away. And now with the possibility that it will select Goldwater as its man on horseback, it promises to compound all its past mistakes into one disastrous blunder.

THE NOMINATION of Goldwater will have the effect of making the Republicans the white man's party for there is nothing in the Arizona senator's past to indicate that he has any concept or concern for black America.

Goldwater stands four square for Americanism, but it is a type of Americanism in which the black man is an outsider.

It is a type of Americanism that says the strong shall grow stronger, the weak shall grow weaker, and the poor are poor because of their inherent weakness.

GOLDWATER IS the darling of the racists and the rightists with his cry of state's rights, with his simple if dangerous solutions to complex problems, with his insistence that the clock of progress be turned back to the 18th Century, with his willingness to leave the protection of an individual to the tender mercies of such enlightened states as Mississippi and Alabama.

There is no place in the Republican Party for any colored man, if Goldwater and his supporters are at the helm. . .and for this to happen would be a tragedy for the nation.

It would split America, more completely than anything else, into racial camps.

Where the national parties are able now to embrace all shades of opinion and races, a Goldwater led Republican Party would draw the lines so distinctly and so sharply that colored voters would be forced away from the GOP.

Attitudes would polarize and where once compromise within the ranks of the party was possible, there would now be only one way to do things—the Goldwater way. The Grand Old Party would become the White Man's Party.

There is a strong suspicion on the part of the colored community that Goldwater would like nothing better than to see the Armed Forces resegregated, the abolishment of non-discrimination clause in Goverment contracts and the firing of every colored person with the Government who holds a GS-5 job or better.

GOLDWATER as President would probably not go this far, but the fact that the fear is there should be warning enough to the Republican Party of the danger it faces if Goldwater wins the nomination.

This is the image of the man and there is nothing that he can say that will change it.

Despite the presence of such figures as Javits, Case, Kuchel in the party, the Republicans will alienate the colored voters.

ON THE local level, Republicans have proven that with the right type of program they can attract the colored vote, but obviously the lesson has been wasted on the national leaders.

With the right type of candidate—a man who does not have the narrow-mindness of Goldwater — the Republicans do have a chance to make inroads into the colored community.

But with Goldwater they can kiss their opportunity goodbye.

THE DAMAGE that would be done would haunt the Republicans for years. The Democrats have been able to survive such men as Thurmond and Eastland, and still command the allegiance of its colored voters.

But the Democrats have never nominated such men for the highest office in the nation, realizing the damage that would be done to the party.

Goldwater may have a noisy backing—as do most extremists—but they do more to represent the consensus of the country and Goldwater is not going to lead the Republicans to victory.

Instead, he might very well lead them to disaster.

Presidential Elections: I

Col. Eng. 5-23-64

Washington: The Unanimous Choice

(First in a series of columns on U.S. presidential elections from 1789 to 1960.) ..

The electoral college, which still offically names U. S. Presidents, played a much more important role in the selection during the early days of the nation.

Popular votes were not even counted until the 1824 election. There were also no official political parties or party conventions until 1832.

The first six Presidents were actually decided by the men designated as electors from the individual states. Today, most electors (except those in Alabama) are bound to vote for the party nominee who receives a plurality of the popular vote in the particular state.

GRIMES

But the Constitution did not provide for political parties or conventions. Both institutions evolved from necessity. Congressional caucuses selected the nominees for President and Vice President in the 40 years from 1788-1828. The final choice lay with the electors, who were either named by state legislators or by popular vote of the people. As a rule, the electors were uninstructed and could exercise their own judgment as to who they should support for President and Vice President.

Another difference from today's elective system concerned the method of naming the Vice President. Originally, the Constitution stipulated that each elector would submit a first and second choice for President. The men receiving the majority of votes was declared President and the man receiving the second most votes was Vice President. If the system had still existed in 1960, for example, Richard Nixon would have been the Vice President for John F. Kennedy.

But a constitutional amendment altered the procedure in 1804, and allowed for separate voting on the President and Vice President.

This background is necessary for a proper understanding of the early presidential elections.

The electoral college voted for the first time in February, 1789. There was no doubt about the man who would be elected President. Practically by acclamation it was to be George Washington.

Two of the 13 states did not even participate in the first presidential election. New York failed to select any electors, and Rhode Island had not ratified the Constitution, so was ineligible.

When Congress convened in March, the electoral votes were counted.

Washington received 69 votes, which equaled the number of electors present. The 69 second-place votes for President —which were actually for Vice President — were split between 11 men. John Adams of Massachusetts had 34 votes, and John Jay, who was to become the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was a distant second nine votes.

WASHINGTON
. . . The Unanimous Choice

The remainder of the candidates have been mostly forgotten by the historians, with one exception — John Hancock, the first man to sign the Declaration of Independence. He got four votes in the first electoral college.

During Washington's first term, the foundations were laid for the political party system. The two strong men of his cabinet were Alexander Hamilton, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Thomas Jefferson, the Secretary of State.

Hamilton, like Washington, was a strong Federalist, believing in a powerful central government, and limited popular rule. Jefferson wanted to grant the states a maximum of power and allow the mass of voters more voice in the affairs of government.

At that time, voters had little to say directly on the election of federal officers, including senators and representatives.

In 1792, Washington won a second unanimous victory in the electoral college, receiving all 132 first - place votes for President.

Adams, also a Federalist, was re-elected Vice President, with 77 votes. But the so-called Anti-Federalist Party (which was to evolve into the present-day Democratic Party) supported George Clinton of New York for Vice President, and he received 50 votes. Jefferson with four votes, and Aaron Burr with one, rounded out the candidate list.

Thus, in the first two presidential elections, George Washington was a unanimous choice of the electors, with the only competition centering on second place, or the vice-presidential spot.

Jefferson and Hamilton were laying the groundwork for the two-party system, and molding the basic issues that divide Americans until this very day.

By 1796, Jefferson was strong enough among the electors and congressmen to seriously challenge the dominant Federalists. Washington rejected pleas that he offer for a third term, thus leaving Vice President Adams to carry the Federalist banner.

(In next Saturday's Enquirer, the second column of this series will cover the elections of 1796 and 1800.)

Rockefeller Still Leader in California

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Louis Harris of The Los Angeles Times Syndicate is a veteran of 17 years in the field of national public opinion sampling. "The Harris Survey" is a feature in The Enquirer each Monday. In addition, as the news warrants, Harris provides Enquirer readers with "bonus" surveys such as this.)

By LOUIS HARRIS

Gov. Nelson Rockefeller continues to lead in the showdown June 2 California presidential primary in a head-to-head contest with Sen. Barry Goldwater.

As reported in a special survey last week, Rockefeller received the votes of 57 per cent of a carefully chosen sample of citizens, and Goldwater 43 per cent.

In a year of Republican primary surprises, however, the California campaign is complicated by the fact that nearly half the state's Republicans prefer a candidate other than the two whose names are listed on the ballot.

Here are the pivotal facts on which this California primary hinges:

— The real first choice for the GOP presidential nomination is spread among four men:

Rockefeller, Lodge, Nixon and Goldwater, with the preferences all bunched closely together. But the voters in the California primary can choose only Rockefeller or Goldwater, for no others are listed on the ballot and no write-ins are allowed.

— In terms of hard-core or real first choice votes, Rockefeller is not much ahead of Goldwater. However, the New York governor is now acceptable as a second choice alternative to three times as many voters as the Arizona senator.

— The outcome in many ways will depend on the residual choice of voters who prefer Lodge or Nixon. The Lodge voters for the most part had already come over to Rockefeller even before the ambassador's backers had thrown their support officially to the governor. Today, more Nixon supporters are for Rockefeller than Goldwater, but over a third of them are still undecided.

— In a straight - out contest over which man has the most appealing personality and character, Goldwater would win over Rockefeller 58 to 42 per cent. He is seen as a forthright and blunt Westerner, with whom many Californians feel at home. Rockefeller, the invader from the East, still suffers from criticism over his divorce and remarriage.

— However, if these voters were to decide between the two men on the basis of their stands on public issues, Rockefeller would win by 59-41 per cent. In fact, for every two California Republicans who are favorable to Goldwater on the issues, there are three who are critical of what they understand to be his stated positions.

— The mark of almost every GOP primary this year has been that the man tabbed as the underdog has done better than expected.

Goldwater is now the underdog in California. In addition, charges about a Lodge-Rockefeller "gang - up" could win the senator votes. The late President Kennedy capitalized on this issue during the 1960 West Virginia primary.

The line - up of first and second choices among California voters before and after the Oregon primary:

First Choice Among GOP

After Oregon; before Oregon and Per Cent;
and Per Cent;
Rockefeller, 26, 10.
Lodge, 24, 32.
Goldwater, 21, 28.
Nixon, 21, 23.
Scranton, 2, 5.
Mrs. Smith, 2, –.
Not sure, 4, 2.

Second Choice Among GOP

After Oregon; before Oregon and Per Cent:
Lodge, 28, 20.
Nixon, 26, 24.
Rockefeller, 21, 23.
Scranton, 8, 8.
Goldwater, 7, 14.
Mrs. Smith, 2, 4.
Not sure, 8, 7.

His Oregon victory has propelled Rockefeller to the top of the heap, much as New Hampshire for a time rallied GOP voters to Lodge. Goldwater has slipped some as either a first or second choice. Significantly, voters trend to be for Goldwater as a first choice or not at all.

A change has taken place as well in the numbers who say they couldn't vote for various candidates even if they were nominated by the Republicans at San Francisco:

Couldn't Vote For

After Oregon; before Oregon and Per Cent:
Goldwater, 35, 20.
Mrs. Smith, 28, 35.
Rockefeller, 15, 19.
Nixon, 10, 10.
Scranton, 5, 10.
Lodge, 4, 4.
None or not sure, 35, 35.
(Percentages add to more than 100 per cent because some voters named more than one candidate.)

The key is what happens to California GOP voters whose real choices are Lodge and Nixon. Here is how they divide today between the two candidates listed on the ballot:

How Nixon, Lodge Supporters Go

Real choice; Nixon; Lodge and Per Cent:
Voting for:
Rockefeller, 43, 61.
Goldwater, 23, 28.
Not sure, 34, 11.

The Lodge vote has swung heavily to Rockefeller. The Nixon vote, on the other hand, is less enthusiastic about choosing between the two men on the ballot, although the swing up to now has favored Rockefeller.

If Goldwater can find a way to reach the Nixon vote, if he can capitalize on his new position as an underdog, he could conceivably pull this election out in the closing days. But today the odds all seem to favor Nelson Rockefeller California.

Wallace Denied Maryland Vote At Convention

BALTIMORE (AP) —A ruling by a three-judge federal panel has dashed the last hopes of Alabama Gov. George Wallace to control any of Maryland's votes at the Democratic National Convention.

The panel ruled Monday that Maryland's presidential primary as well as primaries for state offices, must be decided by popular vote.

The action tossed out the last vestige of a unit vote system which had been in effect since 1910 to determine winners of primaries.

Last fall, the court held that the unit rule was void as it applied to nomination of governor, comptroller, attorney general and U. S. senator. The action did not take in presidential primaries.

A petition to modify that ruling was filed before the May 19 primary in which Wallace opposed Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, D-Md. It was not heard until Monday.

Wallace lost the popular vote by about 50,000. If he had taken one large county in which he ran close, he would have been able to win the primary on a unit vote count against Brewster — if the court had not outlawed the system.

Under the system, a candidate who carried a county by even one vote received all of its votes in convention. Each county and the Baltimore city legislative district was allotted the same number of votes as it had seats in the Maryland Legislature.

Brewster's home county of Baltimore was the key in what could have been a unit vote victory by Wallace. The senator's unofficial margin there on election night was only 106 out of the more than 95,000 votes cast.

A later count of absentee ballots increased the margin to 318, decreasing chances of winning for Wallace on a recount.

Maddox Seeking Wallace on Ballot

Perennial candidate Lester Maddox announced Friday he will begin a drive to get Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace and unpledged electors on the Georgia presidential ballot.

Maddox said the name for the party would be "Georgia Democrats for Unpledged Electors."

Under the new election code, lawyers indicated that name could not be used because the code prohibits any name "confusingly similar" to regular party organizations.

ANY SUPPORT?

Asked if he expected to get the support of any senator or congressman from Georgia, Maddox said, "Senators and governors and others react to pressure."

Maddox said no petitions are circulating now. Some 70,000 signatures would be required.

He also declared there is going to be a move for a third party separate from Republicans and Democrats. "Every issue is going to get down to a black and white question," he said.

Wallace is coming to the Southeastern Fairgrounds here July 4 for a rally, Maddox said. He added the governor will draw "a minimum of 100,000."

CRITICIZES SANDERS

Maddox also criticized Gov. Carl Sanders in caustic fashion for not welcoming Wallace.

Sanders' action "has brought shame to the people of Georgia, he has slapped the faces of all patriotic citizens of Alabama and Georgia, and has conducted himself generally in such a way that is unfitting to the high office he holds," Maddox said.

Sanders' comment, saying that nobody, including Wallace, should interrupt the Legislature while it was writing a new Constitution "are not representative of the feelings of the great majority of Georgians," Maddox said.

Maddox called on Sanders to Presidential Elections: II

An Election That Ended in a Tie

(Second in a series of articles covering U.S. presidential elections from George Washington to John F. Kennedy.)

The importance of one vote was vividly emphasized in the presidential election of 1800 when the two leading contenders finished in a tie with 73 electoral votes apiece.

Making the situation even stranger was the fact that the two candidates were members of the same political party.

GRIMES

The unique tie vote for President was a significant milestone in American history, and resulted in a change of the method for electing Presidents and Vice Presidents. But tragically, the tie also resulted in the slaying of one of the most brilliant of the Founding Fathers and the villifying of another, who thereafter became a wandering fugitive.

Last week, I explained that in the early presidential elections, the popular vote was not even counted. The electors named by each state cast two votes each in the electoral college and the candidate receiving the most votes was declared President, while the runner-up was declared Vice President.

In 1796, George Washington declined to seek a third term, thus setting a precedent followed until 1940. John Adams, the Vice President during Washington's terms carried the Federalist party banner against the growing strength of Thomas Jefferson's Democratic party. Aaron Burr of New York was another prominent Democrat, who vied with Jefferson for the party leadership.

Jefferson and Burr divided the Democratic electoral vote in 1796, allowing Adams, with 71 votes, to be elected President. Jefferson received 63, and as runner-up became Vice President. Thomas Pinckney, another Federalist, had 39, and Burr, 30.

No less than 13 men received one or more electoral votes in the 1796 election, a record that is likely to stand.

With the omnipotent Washington out of the picture, the political parties became more important as forces in the government.

By 1800, the Democrats were clearly in a dominant position, and a majority of the electors were of Democratic persuasion. But predictably, the Democratic electors were split among themselves. With no party convention to settle their differences, they were forced to try and settle them in the electoral college.

Burr had gained strength during Adams' term and moved up to strongly challenge Jefferson for the party leadership.

In the electoral count, Jefferson and Burr finished in a dead heat with 73 electoral votes each. Adams, seeking reelection, got 65, and C. C. Pinckney, his Federalist running mate, had 64.

Under the Constitution at that time, a tie vote went to the House of Representatives for a decision. The Federalists still controlled the House and therefore held the decisive vote.

Alexander Hamilton, Jefferson's great adversary, was the Federalist leader, and he faced a bitter choice. He hated Jefferson but considered Burr as little better than a renegade.

Reluctantly, Hamilton threw his support to his worst political enemy, and the House named Jefferson as President and Burr as Vice President.

The confused election of 1800 demonstrated to Congress the flaws in the manner set up for the election of President and Vice President, and soon after Jefferson took office, the 12th amendment to the Constitution was adopted.

It specifies that electors shall cast one vote for President — instead of two as was previously the case — and a separate vote for Vice President, with candidates specifying which of the two offices they are seeking.

This amendment set the stage for the parties to settle on one man for each office and to begin offering "tickets."

The 1800 election thus had a happy outcome for democratic procedure, but a sad one for two of the principal players.

Hamilton's role in the election aggravated the feud between him and Burr. For nearly four years, they exchanged insults, until on July 11, 1804, they engaged in a duel with pistols at Weehawken, N. J.

Hamilton fired his pistol into the air but Burr took careful aim and his shot struck true. Hamilton died of the wound.

Burr was universally condemned for the shooting of Hamilton and he was forced to flee the country. He lived to the ripe age of 80, but after the duel with Hamilton, he was a man without a country, and is still considered one of the arch-villains of U. S. history.

And yet he came within one vote of being the third President. — MILLARD GRIMES.

Maryland Shocker

The Washington Star

It is both astonishing and dismaying that an Alabama Governor with Mr. Wallace's background on the racial question could come into Maryland and make such a strong run. But this should not be allowed to obscure the meaning of his show of strength.

Actually, Mr. Wallace carried 16 of the 23 counties in Maryland. The tide was turned against him by the vote in Montgomery, which is especially gratifying to us, and in Baltimore city.

What all of this foreshadows is anyone's guess. But if the country is in for the "long, hot summer" which some Negro leaders anticipate, meaning renewed and more violent street demonstrations, there is precious little reason to look for improved race relations any time soon.

RIGHTS BACKERS SEEK 5TH CIRCUIT CT. LIBERAL

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — A vacant seat of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals is a prime target in the civil rights struggle.

Anti - discrimination leaders feel their legal efforts would be bolstered considerably with the appointment of a racial liberal or moderate to fill the vacancy.

The 5th Circuit embraces a crucial civil rights area — Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Georgia — and the nine - member appeals court is called upon to settle many racial disputes.

The court's vacancy resulted from the death of Judge Ben Cameron of Meridian, Miss., a conservative whose decisions often went against the civil rights forces.

A campaign to have a Negro attorney in Jackson, Miss., named to succeed Cameron was begun by a handful of integration strategists here but it apparently died a quick death after failing to pick up any heavyweight backing.

"We make no positive recommendations on judgeships," explained the NAACP's Clarence Mitchell. "However, we will do all we can to prevent the appointment from going to a racist or someone who will defy the Supreme Court."

Mitchell says the appointment "will have a big impact on the implementation of future civil rights legislation."

If President Johnson follows tradition, he will pick another Mississippian for the job. But finding a highly qualified attorney in the state who is not considered a "racist" by civil rights advocates will be no easy chore.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, a crack constitutional lawyer who is considered moderate by Mississippi standards, answered speculation that he would be the nominee with a statement that he is not interested in the job.

The Justice Department and the offices of Sens. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., and John C. Stennis, D-Miss., report that a nomination is not yet in sight.

A nominee is generally recommended to the President by the attorney general after conferences with senators from the state involved.

A critical consideration for Mr. Johnson is that the nomination will need Senate confirmation and this can come only after its approval by the Senate Judiciary Committee, headed by Eastland.

His influence in such matters was illustrated when scores of new district judgeships were created during the Kennedy administration. The first one filled was in Mississippi and the nominee was Harold Cox, a one time college roommate of Eastland whose rulings have been unpopular in the civil rights camp.

The nomination of a successor to Cameron is a potential roadblock in the Democrats' election - year effort to keep everybody happy. It could be delayed until after the election.

Voter Restored to Importance

The California primary made a vital contribution to politics by restoring the individual voter to a place of importance in the elective process.

The voter was fast becoming the forgotten man of politics.

Who needed him?

The pollsters tell you who's going to win, and television's calculating computers make the winner official as soon as one per cent of the real, live votes are counted.

But throughout this frustrating year, the voters have been disagreeing with the pollsters, and in California, they even commited the heresy of almost upsetting the computers.

GRIMES

At exactly 9:20 p.m. Tuesday night, Walter Cronkite of CBS-TV, in a choked voice, relayed the decision hastily evoked by Lou Harris and the "vote profile analysis."

"CBS declares Goldwater the winner," Cronkite said gloomily, while other resident geniuses looked plainly skeptical.

"I don't ever question the machines," explained Eric Sevareid, sounding as if he were questioning them very seriously.

Harris, a pollster who would like to forget this whole spring, was clearly in pain, but he stuck to his conclusion: Goldwater would win. He seemed as positive about it as his polls had been that Rockefeller would win. Which is to say, not very positive.

As the night wore on, the actual vote seemed to be contradicting the computer forecast. Harris looked worried. Cronkite looked hopeful.

Incredibly, it appeared that all the votes would have to be counted before the winner was known. Sen. Goldwater himself had mentioned that he was "old-fashioned' and wanted to see the votes counted before he claimed victory, but the new-fangled machines convinced him he was the winner.

Then, about 1 a.m., Columbus time, Rockefeller suddenly surged into the lead in actual votes counted. By then, it was too late for anyone to get overly excited. The networks had all declared Goldwater the winner. But nonetheless, Rockefeller's lead persisted through the night and into the morning.

But the final count provided a narrow margin for Goldwater — and for the "voter profile" analysis. Its prediction came true — but of more significance was the fact that most folks decided to wait until all the votes were counted before believing the "analysis" prediction — and that's what it was, just a prediction.

As for the polls, they're suffering their worst year since 1948 when Harry Truman upset Tom Dewey. The polls gave Goldwater a slight edge in New Hampshire, and figured Henry Cabot Lodge would barely show. Lodge, of course, trounced Goldwater and Rockefeller in that one.

In Oregon, the polls put Lodge in commanding position. Rockefeller won it.

In California, Rockefeller was the favorite. Goldwater won it.

We still need the voter. He's surprising and can think for himself.

Pollsters and machines only know what a few voters tell them. The ballot box remains the supreme machine in an election.—MILLARD GRIMES.

Gavin Says Barry Will Win On First

GREENSBORO — (UPI) — Robert Gavin, who hopes to become the first Republican governor of North Carolina since the turn of the century, expressed confidence Tuesday that Sen. Barry Goldwater would win the GOP presidential nomination on the first ballot.

Gavin, also an at-large delegate to the national Republican convention, told a news conference he would ask the Arizona conservative to visit North Carolina and assist in his campaign even if opponents were successful in their attempts to block the nomination.

"But I definitely think Goldwater will get the nomination on the first ballot," he said. "I'm going to stick with him all the way or at least until he endorses someone else.

"I expect to see (Goldwater) within the next 10 days and ask for his assistance," said Gavin, who polled a surprising 46 per cent of the votes cast in the 1960 general election for governor. "I think he will definitely come."

Regardless, said the Sanford, N.C., lawyer, "I think the situation in North Carolina is that whoever is nominated will have to come to North Carolina. I think the Democratic Party also realizes this.

"North Carolina is regarded by the national Republican committee as a key state — one which could go either way."

The Republican candidate was in Greensboro to officially open the party's Guilford County headquarters.

Additionally, Gavin said, the Republican Party in 1964 has its best opportunity since the turn of the century to elect a governor. He also predicted that Tar Heel voters would elect four Republican congressmen in the November general election.

He predicted the re - election of Reps. Charles R. Jonas and James E. Broyhill and predicted victory for W. A. (Nab) Armfield in the 5th Congressional District and for James C. Gardner in the 4th. Armfield faces incumbent Ralph Scott, and Gardner will meet veteran Harold Cooley.

Gavin again refused to speculate on the June 27th runoff election between Democrats Dan K. Moore and L. Richardson Preyer for their party's nomination for governor. He also said he would welcome any support given him by defeated Republican first primary candidates Charles Strong and Donald Badgley.

Gavin said he could see "advantages" in running against either Moore or Preyer, but declined further comment.

It was Strong who accussed Gavin and the state Republican headquarters of political coercion following the May 30 primary.

Elections and the Computer

How much influence would a statement that a certain candidate had won, based on a projection of early election results by computers, have on voters who still had not completed casting their ballots because of time differences?

That is the question raised by Rep. Oliver P. Bolton, Ohio Republican, who has appealed to the nation's radio and television networks to hold off announcing a winner in the November presidential election until polls have closed all over the country.

The Ohioan's appeal was based on a happening in the California primary when at least one television network flatly said the computer analysis of the vote from selected precincts showed Sen. Barry Goldwater the winner. The prediction was made about 22 minutes after the first polls closed, and while many northern Californians still were casting ballots.

Rep. Bolton stated it is "conceivable that we might witness victory and concession statements from rival camps two to three hours before the polls close in many parts of the country."

He added:

"Think of the implications of such positive and definite declarations broadcast in a national election where, because of the difference in time zones, polls close many hours later in the West than in the East."

The representative said that if the networks do not voluntarily decide to withhold the results of computer projections he will ask the Federal Communications Commission to step in to prevent the broadcasts.

What the attitude of the networks will be can be gained from a statement by President Leroy Collins of the National Association of Broadcasters. Collins said the broadcasters would "resist any such action." He added that such a restraint "would be completely incompatible with our philosophy of responsible reporting."

Collins' statement that withholding results of the computer projection would be incompatible with the philosophy of responsible reporting is true. News media attempt to get the news to the public as quickly as possible. However, networks may consider the matter and decide voluntary action to be warranted.

Additionally if the Federal Communications Commission stepped in to force the networks to withhold the announcement it would be dangerous interference with the freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution. Regulation of the handling of news, whether it is aimed at newspapers or electronic media, is entirely against the democratic principles of America.

Handwriting On The Wall

Why so much fuss over the Democratic primary votes cast for Alabama's Governor George Wallace in Wisconsin, Indiana Maryland?

The stark significance of the Wallace performance is curling the hair of Democratic political analysists who now realize that it may well foreshadow the defeat of their party in November!

The Wallace vote—34 per cent in Wisconsin, 30 per cent in Indiana, 43 per cent in Maryland—representss the violent reaction of America's ethnic groups, particularly Polish, Italian, Czech and Slovak, again the "Civil Rights" bill as a threat to their jobs and to the character of their typically close - knit, even clannish, neighborhoods. These people are not anti-Negro. Job desegregation, per se, means little to them. But they realize this legislation will create no new jobs—merely require some portion of them to step aside so that Negroes can move into their jobs. And this they definitely do not care for!

The evidence is clear for all to read. In Wisconsin's Fourth and Fifth Districts, which comprise the industrial city of Milwaukee with 300,000 ethnic group citizens, Democrats polled 68 per cent of the votes in 1962. But, in the recent primary, Governor Reynolds (as President Johnson's stand-in) was whittled down to 57 per cent.

In Indiana in 1960, it was the whopping Democratic majority rolled up in the predominantly Polish First District (including the Gary steel mills) that cinched the narrow state-wide victory for Governor Welsh. In the 1964 primary, standing against the man from Alabama and the civil rights issue, Governor Welch failed to carry a single white precinct in the very district that had made him governor.

And in Maryland also, ethnic group areas turned their backs on the Administration, leaving the task of face-saving to Baltimore's Negroes and Government payrollers living in the Capital suburb of Montgomery County.

These ethnic groups—these foreign-born citizens and their children who constitute 19 per cent of our total population, and with significant numbers in 26 states — have been solidly Democratic since 1932. Without their votes, the Democrats would have lost in 1960. Without them in 1964, the Democrats are courting defeat.

The Wallace vote can only be construed as a civil rights protest. As such, it is the handwriting on the Democratic wall. "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." It translates: "Numbered, numbered, weighed and divided." And the Democratic Senators, who can erase this threat at will, ignore it at their party's peril.

Decision Given In Dallas Co. Appeals Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that the federal Constitution requires "that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature must be apportioned on a population basis."

Chief Justice Earl Warren, announcing the ruling, said that:

"We mean that the equal protection clause (of the Constitution) requires that a state make an honest and good-faith effort to construct districts in both houses of its legislature, as nearly of equal population as is practicable."

The chief justice added that the high court realizes "that it is a practical impossibility to arrange legislative districts so that each one has an identical number of residents, or citizens, or voters. Mathematical exactness or precision is hardly a workable constitutional requirement."

Warren added that, "Simply stated, an individual's right to vote for state legislators is unconstitutionally impaired when its (the vote's) weight is in a substantial fashion diluted when compared with votes of citizens living in other parts of the state."

Warren's statements were made in deciding three cases from Alabama.

Three separate appeals were filed in the Supreme Court after a temporary plan for reapportionment of the Alabama Legislature was announced by a special three-judge federal court in Montgomery.

The special court rejected reapportionment legislation enacted by the Alabama Legislature. The temporary plan would give Jefferson County, the state's largest county, 17 House members instead of seven. Mobile would get eight members, an increase of five, and Montgomery would keep the four it had.

B. A. Reynolds and Frank Pearce, Probate Count judges of Dallas and Marion counties, respectively, filed the first Supreme Court appeal.

They questioned if the apportionment by judicial decree was equitable, if both House and Senate must be apportioned strictly according to population, and if the old apportionment was invidiously discriminatory in violation of the federal Constitution's guarantee of equal protection of law.

A second appeal was filed by David J. Vann and Robert S. Vance, chairman and vicechairman of the Jefferson County Democratic Campaign Committee. They contended that the new Senate apportionment "perpetuates invidious discrimination."

Vann and Vance said the Senate should be apportioned "so that Senate districts are as nearly equal to each other in the number of inhabitants as may be."

The third appeal by four Alabama voters contended the U.S. Constitution require "that each person of a state have equal representation, based on a reasonable or rational population basis, in both houses of a legislature."

This appeal said the contention made was not affected by whether an under - represented area is rural or urban. It also said representation need not be mathematically equal.

Voters filing this appeal were John W. McConnell Jr., Joseph N. Langan, William M. Williams Jr., and Garet Van Antwerp.

During argument of the appeals, U.S. Solicitor General Archilbald Cox and Richmond M. Flowers, Alabama attorney general, urged that the special court's order be affirmed.

Flowers called it "reasonable, rational and fair as to the guide lines (it) stated," He commented that it was "politically impossible" to bring about reapportionment without judical action.

But W. McLean Pitts, Selma, Ala., attorney for Reynolds and Pearce, asked the Supreme court to reconsider its 1962 decision that federal courts may pass on the fairness of state legislative districts. Pitts said if the 1962 decision stands, "then the State of Alabama and its sister states are not sovereign states."

Cox in supporting the lower court's order agreed that population must be a starting point for reapportionment. But he said that if a state divides the seats in one house by population, some divergence from per capita representation might be permissible in the other house. The solicitor general commented that the Supreme Court need not say at this time how much divergence would be too much.

In the Alabama cases, Warren said the special three-judge federal court in Montgomrey acted properly in ordering a reapportionment of both houses of the state legislature for purposes of the 1962 primary and general election. The chief justice then added:

"Since the special court evinced its realization that its ordered reapportionment could not be sustained as the basis for conducting the 1966 election of Alabama legislators, and avowedly intends to take some further action should the reapportioned Alabama legislature fail to enact a constitutionally valid, permanent apportionment scheme in the interim, we affirm the judgment below and remand the cases for further proceedings consistent with the views stated in this opinion."

Alabama's constitution, adopted in 1901, says apportionment in the Legislature "shall be based upon population." But until the threat of federal court intervention appeared, the representation remained unchanged for more than a half century.

After the three-judge panel handed down a do-it-now-or-we-will ultimatum, the Legislature met in special session in the summer of 1962 and enacted two alternate plans.

One provided for a fulltime senator for each county, with the House reapportioned by population. That would have required a constitutional amendment and, consequently, a vote of the people.

As a standby measure in case the constitutional amendment failed, another bill was passed leaving the Senate divided into 35 districts composing from one to three counties and making a less drastic change in the House.

The three-judge court took parts of both acts and put them together in a temporary reapportionment plan, but made it clear that the Legislature itself would have to do more.

A special Democratic primary was necessary to nominate new candidates in counties which gained or lost representation. The Legislature thus elected is now in office and functioned throughout the regular 1963 session as well as two special sessions earlier that year.

If the present 35 - member Senate is reapportioned by population, Jefferson County will have seven senators instead of the present one; Mobile will get three, and Montgomery County two. The remaining 23 districts will be divided among the 64 other counties.

LATE BULLETIN

UNCONSTITUTIONAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court declared today the legislative apportioment system of New York State is unconstitutional.

Maryland Houses To Properly Apportioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a legislative apportionment case from Maryland, Chief Justice Earl Warren declared today that neither house of the state's legislature, "even after the 1962 legislation reapportioning the House of Delegates, is apportioned sufficiently on a population basis to be constitutionally substainable."

"Consideration of history and tradition, Warren said, "do not, and could not, provide a sufficient justification for the substantial deviations from population-based representation in both houses of the Maryland legislature."

Erle Cocke for Congress

I

The opportunity to elect a new congressman does not come often. Even though congressmen must stand for office every two years, they are seldom challenged seriously after once being elected.

In Georgia's Third District, the last real contest for Congress was 14 years ago, when Rep. E. L. Forrester was first elected.

In choosing a replacement for the retiring Mr. Forrester, the voters should realize that they are probably naming a man who will be their representative in Congress for much longer than two years. For instance, in the old Sixth District, Rep. Carl Vinson is stepping down after serving for 50 years.

So, the choice should not be hasty, or based on quick conclusions or familiarity with a person's name. A congressional representative's function is to look after the interests of the people of his district, and to help govern the affairs of the nation.

Those two points should be kept uppermost in mind: Who can best represent the interests of the district, and who is best prepared to play a role in the governing of the entire nation?

II

Six candidates have qualified to seek the Democratic nomination for Congress.

Of the six Democrats, two are newcomers to the political scene: Charlie Adams of Fort Valley, and Robert Newby of Vienna. On the theory that Congress is not the place to start in public service, we feel these two gentlemen should gain experience in lesser offices before consideration for the office they seek.

Ed Wohlwender Jr. of Sumter County and Columbus has been out of the public eye for 15 years, and he would probably have had a better chance of election in 1950 than today.

Steve Pace Jr. of Americus now serves as solicitor of his judicial circuit, but seems motivated mainly by the fact that his father was congressman.

This brings us to the two canrector of the World Bank, a post to which he was appointed by President Kennedy in June, 1961.

A Republican president, Eisenhower, also called on his services, naming him as an alternate delegate to the United Nations in 1959.

Cocke has been a delegate to the last four Democratic national conventions, and worked in behalf of Lyndon Johnson's candidacy in 1960. He continues to enjoy a close relationship with the President.

Cocke is a businessman, farmer and banker. He was vice president of Delta Air Lines for 10 years, and earlier was connected with Central of Georgia Railroad and Cinderella Foods of Dawson.

III

Thus, the record shows that Byrd's experience has been largely on the state level, Cocke's on the state and national level. Our conclusion is that the people of the district will be best served if they send to Congress a man who already has a background of Washington activity, and will be able immediately to assume a role of some importance in the House.

Erle Cocke has such experience, plus a thorough working knowledge of congressional procedure.

His military background, his service as a civilian aide to the Secretary of Army, and as a consultant to the Secretary of Defense, make him an outstanding candidate for the vacancy which will be left on the House Armed Services Committee when Rep. Vinson retires.

His long and close friendship with President Johnson will give him entry to the White House, as well as the influence which a President brings to bear on committee appointments.

The Third District of Georgia has as great a stake in military installations as any district in the nation, with Fort Benning on its western flank, and Warner Robins Air Force Base on the eastern flank. These bases constitute the largest economic forces in their respective areas.

This brings us to the two candidates who have the broadest and longest records of public and political service: Garland Byrd Jr. of Reynolds, and Erle Cocke Jr., who recently moved to Columbus from Dawson.

Both of these gentlemen are worthy candidates for the office of congressman. By training and achievement, they have earned the right to ask the voters for support. But we believe that one of them is quite clearly better prepared and possesses the superior background for representing the interests of this district, and of helping to govern the nation.

As Al Smith used to say, "Let's look at the record."

State Sen. Byrd is a former lieutenant governor and state representative. He is a lawyer, businessman and farmer. He was a leading candidate for governor before suffering a heart attack in May, 1962, and until a few months ago, it was assumed that he would be a candidate for governor in 1966. He said as much on several occasions before he decided to seek the congressional seat.

Erle Cocke Jr. has pursued an equally eminent and busy public career, but his activity in recent years has been more on the national level than the state level.

The youngest man ever elected national American Legion commander (29 in 1950), Cocke recently resigned as U. S. director of Railroad and Cinderella Foods of Dawson.

III

Thus, the record shows that Byrd's experience has been largely on the state level, Cocke's on the state and national level. Our conclusion is that the people of the district will be best served if they send to Congress a man who already has a background of Washington activity, and will be able immediately to assume a role of some importance in the House.

A congressman on the House Armed Services Committee would be further assurance that the interests of these two vital bases will be protected.

Cocke's experience in the United Nations and with the World Bank have provided him a background that few freshman congressmen — or even veteran congressmen — can claim.

IV

These points about Erle Cocke deserve the careful consideration of all voters before they make a definite commitment in their minds or hearts.

Selection of a congressman should not be based on trivialities or even on friendship. It must be based on the interests of the district and of the nation.

It must be based on which candidate is best equipped and prepared to assume the vital role a congressman plays.

Erle Cocke would make a fine congressman for any district of Georgia. We are fortunate that he is a candidate in the Third District, which needs a strong and influential voice in the halls of the federal government.

We commend Erle Cocke to your consideration, recognizing the service Garland Byrd has performed on the state level, but believing that Cocke has the particular attributes and experience that will best serve this district in the U. S. Congress.

Unpledged Electors To Meet Soon

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — A Huntsville attorney says that Alabama's unpledged electors will huddle to plan strategy sometime before Gov. George Wallace goes to Atlanta for an appearance July 4.

Jack Giles, a member of the unpledged slate, said Monday the group will accompany the governor on his trip. Wallace is expected to attempt promotion of the unpledged elector movement while in Georgia.

Giles said that there have been several requests from other states, including some, outside the South, for Wallace to address rallies explaining the unpledged movement.

Aggressive Republicans Put South Well on Way To Two-Party System

Mississippi Campaign Shows Rising Strength; New Gain Likely If Goldwater Runs

Will Race Issue Slow Drift?

By ALAN L. OTTEN
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

JACKSON, Miss.—"Vote November 5 to stamp out Republicanism," declares a campaign leaflet distributed by the forces of Democratic gubernatorial candidate Paul Johnson. "A two-party system in Mississippi would end our way of life."

The leaflet adds that actively competing Democratic and Republican parties, replacing traditional Democratic domination, "would divide the conservative white men and women of Mississippi into two political camps and thereby place the balance of power in the hands of the Negro minority. Once this was accomplished, we would be in the same turmoil that exists in Illinois, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, California and other Northern and Eastern states."

It's expected that Democrat Johnson, who as lieutenant governor physically blocked one of Negro James Meredith's attempts to enter the University of Mississippi last fall, will beat 38-year-old Jackson attorney Rubel Phillips, first serious Republican gubernatorial candidate since Reconstruction days and a man who claims equal devotion to "Mississippi racial traditions." But Mr. Phillips and his enthusiastic young GOP cohorts are forcing the Democrats into unusual fall campaign activity. It's a sure sign that GOP strength is rising here in the Magnolia State as it is in the other 10 states of the Old Confederacy, even in this year of few major political wars.

Vigorous Politicking

Next Tuesday Mississippi Democrats will sponsor "conservative rallies" at every county courthouse, with Mr. Johnson addressing the meetings by TV from Jackson. Some 5,000 people are being asked to buy tickets the following week for a $25-a-plate Democratic fund-raising dinner, an unusual event in Dixie where Democrats customarily raise campaign funds privately. Gov. Ross Barnett and other Democratic office-holders are campaigning hard for Mr. Johnson.

Besides handsome, articulate Mr. Phillips, a one-time Democratic county clerk and state public service commission chairman, Republicans have an impressive candidate for lieutenant governor and a record seven aspirants for the state senate and 14 for the state house. Most onlookers here expect Mississippi's only GOP state legislator, L. L. McAllister, chosen in a special election last February, will be joined in January by several GOP colleagues.

Even if the Republicans lose next month as decisively as the Democrats hope, the Mississippi GOP could still keep on growing, particularly if patron saint Barry Goldwater should be the GOP Presidential nominee next year.

Politics National

The Arizona Senator is, in fact, an oft-used weapon in Mr. Phillips' campaign armory. Over and over, Mr. Phillips declares his election would be a major contribution to Mr. Goldwater's nomination, since it would convince convention delegates that the Senator could sweep the South. (The Mississippi race is one of only two U.S. gubernatorial elections this year; the other is in Kentucky.) Mr. Goldwater's picture adorns every wall at GOP headquarters here and draft-Goldwater petitions are on every desk; Republicans' cars bear bumper stickers proclaiming, "Rubel 63, Barry 64."

Who's Most Anti-Kennedy?

Republican Phillips vows he is just as segregation-minded as Democrat Johnson, and more anti-Kennedy. Though Mr. Johnson won two bitter Democratic primary fights this summer by proclaiming he was the most anti-Kennedy fellow around, Mr. Phillips insists the President would prefer a Democratic governor and "no matter what the politicians claim, the Mississippi Democratic party is an arm of the national Democratic party, which is completely controlled by the ruthless Kennedy machine."

"Rubel, Rubel, we've been thinking," commences a Phillips campaign song to the old "Reuben, Reuben" tune. "What a fine land this would be, if all the Kennedys were transported, far beyond the Arctic Sea." Mr. Phillips' billboards and campaign buttons contain only one line besides the candidate's name: "K.O. the Kennedys." He charges integration came to Ole Miss through a deal between Gov. Barnett, Mr. Johnson and Attorney General Robert Kennedy, in which the Mississippi officials agreed to admit Mr. Meredith if allowed to put up token resistance so they'd look good to the home folks.

Just as Mississippi Republican activity is reaching flood levels, so is GOP activity all across the South. Dixie is well on the way to a working two-party system.

In Virginia, a record 50 Republicans seek state senate and house posts this fall. The GOP captured 12 out of 40 state legislative seats up in special elections in Florida in March, tripling its delegation. In Alabama, Texas and North Carolina, the party has scored significant local victories this year.

High Hopes for '64

The GOP has high hopes for 1964, when it expects to run a record number of candidates in the South, especially if Mr. Goldwater is the Presidential nominee. Then, claims a party official in Washington, "we'll pick up at least a dozen more House seats, maybe a Senator or governor or two or three." Republicans have one Dixie Senator (Tower of Texas) and 11 Representatives; in the 1962 elections, their House contingent grew by four.

Three Southern states—Florida, Virginia and Tennessee—have gone Republican in the last three Presidential elections; Texas has voted twice and Louisiana once. Republican candidate Nixon polled [illegible] votes in the 11 Dixie states in 1960, only [illegible] less than Mr. Kennedy, and [illegible] more than President Eisenhower had received in 1956. His percentage of the vote exceeded Ike's in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi.

The causes of the GOP march through Dixie are clear. Chief is Southern conservative resentment against liberal New Deal, Fair Deal and New Frontier policies. GOP growth really began after World War II, when Southern anger at President Truman's liberal race stand reinforced concern over Roosevelt-Truman economic programs. The 1948 Dixiecrat movement began breaking Southerners away from their traditional Democratic loyalty, and Mr. Eisenhower's personal appeal continued the trend.

A growing middle-class and white-collar group, as the South becomes more urban and industrial, helps provide GOP workers and supporters. (Unlike the North, the chief GOP strength in the South lies in the cities: Jackson, Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham, St. Petersburg, Richmond, Dallas and so on.) In some cases, businessmen moving in from the North give leadership. The increasing respectability of being Republican makes it progressively easier for Democrats to switch over.

All across Dixie, the party is sparkplugged by young city business and professional men. Wirt Yerger, Jr., who's been the driving force in Mississippi since he took over as state chairman in 1956, is a 33-year-old Jackson insurance agent. The GOP candidate for lieutenant governor, Stanford Morse, a former Democratic state senator, is a 37-year-old Gulfport attorney. Republican state legislator McAllister, 30, is an accountant in Meridian.

Automatic Fund Raising

Throughout the South, Republican state organizations outclass Democratic ones. Mississippi Republicans have pioneered an automatic fund-raising plan, whereby a supporter gives the party the right to draw a certain sum automatically from his bank account each month. The organization's regular annual budget is about $75,000, and it may spend $300,000 or more on the current campaign.

Here in Jackson, the GOP has a suite of eight offices, a full-time staff of eight including a director of organization, a public relations man and two field workers. It publishes a hard-hitting four-page monthly paper with a circulation of about 10,000. A speakers' bureau keeps some 30 people busy around the state, each averaging four or five speeches a week on the need for a two-party system.

In the current campaign, Republicans plan to distribute some 8,000 precinct workers' kits, each with campaign buttons and leaflets and detailed instructions for door-to-door proselytizing. There'll be two GOP booths at next week's Mississippi state fair (compared to one for the Democrats, who took theirs only after hearing of the GOP plans.) Mr. Phillips has been campaigning almost full-time ever since February, sometimes making two or three speeches a day to party rallies, student assemblies and civic groups. He'll use TV heavily.

GOP Label Played Down

But the Dixie GOP has troubles, too, and nowhere are they more obvious than here. There is still a tremendous traditional pull to the Democratic party throughout the South, particularly in state and local elections. GOP candidates play down the party label; the word is omitted or buried in Mr. Phillips' campaign material.

Democratic leaders play on rural dislike for Republican "city slickers." Mississippi Republicans, sneers a Democratic campaign leaflet, "are a silk-stocking type that hold Coca-Cola and coffee drinking parties in the big houses on the hill." To lure rural voters, Republicans have hired Roy Acuff's Grand Ole Opry troupe to provide free entertainment at 96 rallies.

Above all, Democrats rely on the race issue to slow the white conservatives' drift to the Republican banner. "Stand tall with Paul" is almost the entire theme of the Democratic campaign, referring to Mr. Johnson's campus appearance at Oxford in 1962. Democrats charge the Mississippi Republican party is tied to the national Republican party and that the national GOP is just as wrong on race as the national Democratic party.

Two States Needed On Poll Tax Ban

By Congressional Quarterly

Washington.

Ratification of the proposed anti-poll tax amendment to the Constitution in time for the 1964 elections could come with favorable votes by the Arizona and South Dakota state legislatures next year.

To date, 36 states have approved the measure banning the poll tax in federal elections, and only two more states are needed to ratify. Of the remaining states which have not taken final action, none have regular legislative sessions scheduled for the remainder of 1963.

However, six of these state legislatures will meet in 1964. Of the six, four—Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina and Virginia—are not expected to approve.

Ratification, therefore, depends largely on the legislatures of the other two states, Arizona and South Dakota.

The Arizona legislature will convene Jan. 13 for 60 days, and the South Dakota legislature will meet for 30 days under a 1963 amendment to the state constitution calling for annual legislative sessions. The South Dakota legislature has met previously for regular sessions only in odd-numbered years.

Though there is no guarantee that either Arizona or South Dakota will take action on the anti-poll tax provision, neither is considered definitely opposed. In 1963, the Arizona House approved ratification, but the amendment did not come to a vote on the floor of the Senate. South Dakota took no floor action on the proposal during its 1963 legislative session.

President's Telegram

President Kennedy had hoped that 38 states—the number equivalent to three-fourths of the states needed to ratify Constitutional amendments—would approve the measure by 1963. In a personal telegram March 22 to 23 state governors, the president noted that: "Because very few state legislatures will meet in 1964, action by individual states now is essential if the proposed amendment is to be effective during the 1964 elections."

The amendment would become effective immediately following ratification by the 38th state. It would have practical effect, however, only in the five Southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia and Texas) that now levy a poll tax as a requirement for voting.

Anticipating possible 1964 ratification by the states, Virginia Governor Albertis S. Harrison Jr. (D) has indicated that a late 1963 special session of the Virginia legislature may be called to consider a substitute method of "keeping an up-to-date list of registered voters." The governor has said he favors keeping the poll tax on state and local elections.

The Texas legislature has taken no action on the proposal, but Texas residents, in a Nov. 9 referendum will vote on a proposal that would replace the poll tax there with an annual voter registration system.

The proposal would, if ratified, become the 24th amendment to the Constitution. It was successfully introduced in the 87th Congress by Senator Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), a Southerner who has long favored abolition of poll taxes and has introduced similar legislation in every session of Congress since 1949.

Committee Bypassed

Previous attempts got no farther than the Senate Judiciary Committee headed by Senator James O. Eastland (D Miss.). In 1962, however, the amendment was brought to the floor of the Senate by adding the anti-poll tax provisions to a resolution making Alexander Hamilton's home a national monument. This parliamentary move effectively bypassed the Judiciary Committee.

The Senate, after a mild Southern filibuster March 27, 1962 passed the provision by a 77-16 roll-call vote. Approval followed in the House Aug. 27, 1962, when the amendment passed by a 295-86 roll call.

The proposal, as approved by the Congress, provides that: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any other state by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax."

Illinois Nov. 4, 1962 became the first state to ratify. Though there has been no organized campaign for ratification, a favorable vote June 26, 1963 by the Kentucky state legislature brought the number of states approving the measure to 36.

A list of states which have already ratified the proposed amendment follows:

Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

Fact Sheet — On Poll Tax Amendment

TWO STATES HOLD KEY TO POLL TAX FOR '64 ELECTIONS

Whether the proposed anti-poll tax amendment to the Constitution will be ratified in time to be effective in the 1964 elections now appears in doubt.

Thirty-six states have approved the measure, and only two more are needed to ratify. However, of the 13 remaining states which have not taken final action (Mississippi has voted against ratification), none have regular legislative sessions scheduled for the remainder of 1963.

Six of these 13 state legislatures will meet in 1964, but four of them (Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina and Virginia) are not expected to approve. (Weekly Report 5-664). The other two states are Arizona and South Dakota. Though neither state is considered definitely opposed to the amendment, there is no guarantee either will take action in 1964.

In 1963, the Arizona House approved ratification but the proposal did not come to a vote on the floor of the Senate. South Dakota took no floor action on the amendment proposal during its 1963 legislative session.

There is also some possibility the Wyoming legislature will hold a special session next year, mainly to consider tax problems. This might give Wyoming a chance to ratify.

Background

President Kennedy March 22, in a personal telegram to 50 state governors, urged ratification in 1963. Because very few state legislatures will meet in 1964, the telegram said, "action by individual states now is essential if the proposed amendment is to be effective during the 1964 elections." Even if unhesitatingly approved in 1963, the amendment would affect only federal elections.

Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia and Texas are the only states still levying the poll tax. Anticipating possible 1964 ratification by the states, Virginia Gov. Albertis S. Harrison Jr. (D) has indicated that a late 1963 special session of the Virginia legislature may be called to formulate a substitute method of "keeping an up-to-date list of registered voters." The Governor has said he favors keeping the poll tax on state and local elections.

Texas has taken no action on the proposed Constitutional amendment. However, Texas will vote in a referendum Nov. 9 on a proposal that would replace the poll tax with an annual voter registration system.

The proposed amendment was introduced in the 87th Congress by Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D-Fla.), who has long favored the abolition of poll taxes. The Senate, after a mild Southern filibuster, March 27, 1962, passed the proposition by a 77-16 roll-call vote. The House approved the amendment by a 295-86 roll-call vote (1962 CQ Almanac, p. 494).

The proposal provides that: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any other State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax." It would become effective immediately following ratification by the 38th state, the number required under the Constitutional provision that three-fourths of the states ratify amendments.

Illinois, Nov. 4, 1962, became the first state to ratify the poll tax amendment. A complete list of states ratifying follows, together with the vote in each house of the state legislature:

STATES RATIFYING

	Senate	House	Date of Final Ratification
1. Illinois	29-12	150-12	11/14/62

4. Montana	51-4	56-37	1/28/63
5. West Virginia	32-0	94-0	2/ 1/63

Poll Tax Primer: The Behead Tax

CONGRESSMAN HENRY B. GONZALEZ
In the Texas Observer

Legally, a poll tax is a tax of a specific sum levied upon each person within the jurisdiction of the taxing power and within a certain class without reference to the person's property or lack of it.

Its origins go back to ancient Egypt, Greece, and Rome. Joseph and Mary went to Bethlehem to be enrolled for the poll tax because Caesar Augustus decreed "that all the world should be taxed" (Luke 2:1).

After 1377 England used the poll tax extensively.

It was abolished there in 1698, but not before the early American colonists had transplanted it to the New Wrold. It was never as popular in the Southern colonies as in the Northern colonies. The poor classes disliked it because of its regressiveity. Naturally, the Southern planters did not like paying such levies on their slaves. Still, it had not yet been made a qualification for voting so as to restrict the franchise.

There have been two poll tax eras in this country, divided in point of time by the Civil War. After the American Revolution, by which we became the first people in the history of Western civilization to throw off the shackles of imperialism, the poll tax was used to broaden suffrage.

Many states permitted only property owners to vote, and the poll tax was imposed as a substitute for property qualifications. After the Civil War, the former Confederate states enacted the poll tax laws as part of a program of disfranchisement. Anyone who doubts this should be referred to the remarks of Carter Glass as he told the 1901 Virginia constitutional convention that "Negro enfranchisement was a crime to begin with." Senator Glass died in 1946 after having been a member of Congress for more than 40 years.

Five states still retain the poll tax as a qualification to vote: Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia.

Together with the other six former poll tax states in the South this group has the worst voter stacle, incorporating the poll tax, early registration, and discrimination.

Texas dces not seem to be plagued by the type of racial discrimination practiced in other Southern states, whereby Negroes are not permitted to vote by force, coercion, and other forms of skulduggery. We are plagued by the poll tax and by early registration. Unfortunately, even if the poll tax is abolished in Texas, we will still be bothered by early registration. But, the abolition of the poll tax will be a giant stride toward the reform of our election laws.

The poll tax was not made a qualificaton for voting in Texas until our constitution was amended in 1902. Since that time there have been several attempts at abolition of the tax as a prerequisite for voting, most recently in 1949 when the voters rejected a constitutional amendment to accomplish this purpose by a margin of less than 40,000 votes in a referendum in which more than 200,000 participated. It will be recalled that in 1962, the people voted in favor of abolition in conjunction with the Democratic and Republican primary elections, setting the stage for the proposed constitutional amendment which was passed by the legislature last spring and which must now be approved by the people. If it is approved, it will take effect on December 1, 1963.

On August 29, 1962, Congress passed the proposed 23rd Amendment to the federal Constitution to abolish the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections. It states:

> "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative, in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax."

There have been two poll tax eras in this country, divided in point of time by the Civil War. After the American Revolution, by which we became the first people in the history of Western civilization to throw off the shackles of imperialism, the poll tax was used to broaden suffrage.

Many states permitted only property owners to vote, and the poll tax was imposed as a substitute for property qualifications. After the Civil War, the former Confederate states enacted the poll tax laws as part of a program of disfranchisement. Anyone who doubts this should be referred to the remarks of Carter Glass as he told the 1901 Virginia constitutional convention that "Negro enfranchisement was a crime to begin with." Senator Glass died in 1946 after having been a member of Congress for more than 40 years.

Five states still retain the poll tax as a qualification to vote: Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia.

Together with the other six former poll tax states in the South this group has the worst voter percentage record in the country.

The lowest percentage of persons who voted in 1960 in Alaska and Hawaii may be explained by the fact that the people there are not yet used to voting in presidential elections. Still, their percentage of voters was higher than all five of the poll tax states. Texas chauvinists may glory in the fact that of the five, Texas is right on top: another first for Texas.

But the poll tax is not the sole cause of poor voter participation in the South. Georgia, South Carolina, and the other Southern states that have repealed their poll taxes are right down there with the rest of us. Three factors have been suggested to explain voter apathy and a tradition of non-voting in this region: restrictive registration procedures, the one-party system, and the white primary.

Of these three factors, one, the white primary, has been invalidated by the courts, and another, the one-party system, is breaking down and may no longer be relevant. Restrictive registration procedures are the most important obstacle to voter participation. They are a three-pronged obstacle, incorporating the poll tax, early registration, and discrimination.

Texas does not seem to be plagued by the type of racial discrimination practiced in other Southern states, whereby Negroes are not permitted to vote by force, coercion, and other forms of skulduggery. We are plagued by the poll tax and by early registration. Unfortunately, even if the poll tax is abolished in Texas, we will still be bothered by early registration. But, the abolition of the poll tax will be a giant stride toward the reform of our election laws.

The poll tax was not made a qualificaton for voting in Texas until our constitution was amended in 1902. Since that time there have been several attempts at abolition of the tax as a prerequisite for voting, most recently in 1949 when the voters rejected a constitutional amendment to accomplish this purpose by a margin of less than 40,000 votes in a referendum in which more than 200,000 participated. If it is approved, it will take effect on December 1, 1963.

On August 29, 1962, Congress passed the proposed 23rd Amendment to the federal Constitution to abolish the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections. It states:

> "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative, in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax."

It can be easily demonstrated that the levy of a poll tax is an antiquated mode of raising revenue and that it is not an important source in Texas. It remains alone of all the early American economic barriers to a free franchise. It has been abandoned by seven states during the last 35 years: North Carolina in 1930, Pennsylvania in 1933, Louisiana in 1934, Florida in 1937, Georgia in 1945, and South Carolina and Tennessee in 1951.

The primary beneficiaries of the poll tax have been the state public schools. But according to the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Texas, the amount of revenue produced in fiscal 1962 was less than 0.5 per cent of the total school revenue and 0.2 per cent of the total state revenue. Also, the income produced by the tax varies greatly with the type of elections held each year.

Most importantly, the poll tax is an economic deterrent against voting to the poorer classes. It discriminates against those persons of low economic status. It has discouraged the poor white man's vote just as it has minimized the Negro vote and the Mexican vote. The law dictionaries define poll tax as a capitation tax, that is, a head tax. It would be more accurate to call it a decapitation tax, because it has served to behead large bodies of voters, to snuff out their political lives.

Maine Approves Piece Against Poll Tax Laws

see world 1/17/64

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — Maine became the 37th state Thursday to ratify the constitutional amendment outlawing the poll tax, giving either Arizona or South Dakota the chance of providing final ratification.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland, who has fought for the amendment since 1949, said he was informed Thursday that the Maine legislature completed action on its resolution.

He reported that Perrin Edmunds, majority leader of the Maine Senate, announced the amendment was unanimously approved. The Maine House passed the ratification resolution by a 108-34 vote Wednesday.

The Arizona and South Dakota legislatures are in session, according to Holland, and a resolution of ratification is pending in the South Dakota body.

Either could become the 38th state to ratify the amendment and thus provide the required approval of three-fourths of the states.

The constitutional amendment would eliminate the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in federal elections. It would have no effect on state and local elections.

Sen. Johnson Asks Ga. To Ratify Anti-Poll Tax

A resolution urging the State of Georgia to ratify a United States consitutional amendment outlawing the State Senate.

Only last week the State of Maine ratified the measure which brought to a toal of 37 states approving the action. Only two additional states are needed to bar the payment of poll tax which still exists in Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina.

Georgia ended the payment of poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in 1945.

Johnson said that his introduction of the resolution and hope for passage of a bill to ratify is to "show the State of Georgia's good faith" on the amendment.

Poll Tax

Poll Tax Changes

Within a few days, if not already, poll tax receipts won't be required in Mississippi for Presidential and Congressional elections.

The proposed 24th amendment to the U. S. Constitution has been ratified by 37 states and South Dakota is expected to give it the magic 38, or three-fourths of the states, vote of approval.

The poll tax amendment reads thus: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for president or vice president, for electors for president or vice president, or for senator or representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax."

The amendment won't change a great deal in Mississippi. Poll tax receipts are required only for party primaries. They have never been required for general elections or special elections, such as bond issues and the like. Mississippi has no presidential primary. So, apparently the amendment will add only the congressional elections — for the two state senators and district representatives to the non-tax list of elections. Senators and representatives in Mississippi have traditionally been elected in Democratic Primaries and voters have been required to show two poll tax receipts to participate in the elections. Under the amendment, apparently, this will no longer be the case.

Although the poll tax is anathema to many people, Mississippi is certainly not the only state to impose it. Northern and border states have had a poll tax until recent times. President Johnson's native state of Texas recently voted to retain it in a referendum issue.

Still, the poll tax isn't universally loved by all Mississippians, despite its history as a segregation measure. The practical effect of the tax in many instances has been to disenfranchise otherwise qualified voters. Many persons who feel they are more capable of choosing candidates on the basis of the common good than some others, have let poll tax time slip by only to realize that those individuals with a direct personal stake in the outcome of an election would sooner forget to eat breakfast 16 days in January than forget to take their $2 down to the sheriff's office during that month. In small subdivisions of government, the matter of remembering to pay the poll tax can be crucial.

Governor Ross Barnett, commenting on the amendment the other day, said that "voting is a privilege that must be earned." The governor undoubtedly made the statement to express as strongly as possible his opposition to the amendment, but nobody can seriously entertain the notion that voting in America is a "privilege that has to be earned."

If it ever was, the job would seem to have been accomplished during an ordeal called the Revolutionary War, and a later one known as the Woman's Suffrage Movement. (There were lesser landmarks which further spread the franchise to the propertyless at diferent periods of the growth and broadening of American democracy.)

However, that doesn't mean that the principle that a state is empowered by the U. S. Constitution to set up reasonable qualifications for voters hasn't been well established.

Still, there are many valid arguments on behalf of the poll tax.

The money goes to the schools. For many years Mississippi's schools were supported solely from the poll tax take.

The tax serves a psychological purpose in broadening the base of the electorate. The fact that a tax has been paid for the right might motivate more persons to take the trouble to cast ballots.

Proponents of the tax can say that a citizen who doesn't want to pay $2 per year for the vote cares little for his right as an American, although the opponents will probably disagree with that assumption.

At any rate, the 24th Amendment will change little in Mississippi, as politics is presently practiced in this state. Many important elections will still be decided by voters who are paid up at the sheriff's office, because the Mississippi legislature isn't about to repeal the tax.

There are seven more "shopping days" to pay yours. (T. W.)

Registering Voters

A constitutional amendment effectively nullifying the poll tax is likely to become a reality almost immediately. Only action by the South Dakota Senate is needed to complete ratification, and this is expected momentarily.

Predictable as the end to the poll tax has been, Arkansas nevertheless confronts its imminent demise without having taken action to provide a substitute elector qualification and voter registration system.

A special session of the legislature is now unavoidable. It is regrettable that an alternative to the poll tax was not provided by the legislature in 1963 but there is still time to set up a new system outside a crisis atmosphere.

There will be, in the special session, the advantage that public attention will be sharply focused on the voter registration legislation. A model registration system was offered in the legislature in 1963 but this was beaten down by members of the legislative old guard.

Few things in state government are more important than voter registration requirements. These can determine the quality of the electorate and are as important as the laws governing actual balloting in determining how easy it will be to keep elections honest and fair. It will be surprising if the battles of 1963 are not refought in the special session.

The most important of these concerned literacy requirements, absentee registration and party affiliation.

There is room for honest disagreement on whether people who cannot even read a ballot should be permitted to use one. The question is, however, rendered somewhat abstract by a near-universality of discrimination in the administration of literacy requirements. In an absence of impersonal techniques for testing literacy, any literacy requirement seems to us a temptation which should not be imposed on courthouse politicians.

Whether a voter should have to declare his party allegiance when registering seems to us an open question. The advantage of party declaration is that it more sharply defines party membership and cuts down on party line crossing. The disadvantage is that it tends to restrict the voter and to impede the growth of minority parties. If Arkansas had a strong two-party system, with close races between Democrats and Republicans at the local, state and national levels, a strong case could be made for party declaration, in our judgment. Arkansas doesn't have such a two-party system and party declaration therefore seems to us a move in the wrong direction. By discouraging party-line crossing, it would tend to freeze the great majority of Arkansans in the Democratic Party when the need is for a great many Democrats to move into the Republican Party. Without such movements there can never be a strong two-party system.

Entrenched politicians, including legislators, are naturally reluctant to encourage Republican growth, but what advantages entrenched politicians does not necessarily advantage the state or its people.

In the dispute over registration the conflict is between ease of registration and effective control of fraudulent voting.

It is obviously an inconvenience for each individual to have to appear before a county official and register in person. But such a requirement, it is also clear, should constitute a potent deterrent to tombstone voting.

There has so far been less hostility then might have been expected to the idea of permanent registration. Unless something unforeseen happens it should be possible for a registered voter to remain qualified simply by going to the polls with moderate frequency.

Governor Faubus is now on record as favoring a cutoff date on registration as near the election date as is technically practical. We hope reform will be possible here too.

Faubus Considering Action on Poll Tax

LITTLE ROCK (AP)—Governor Faubus took steps yesterday to determine a course of action if the poll tax is outlawed.

The South Dakota legislature was expected to pass today the proposed 24th Amendment to the United States Constitution, banning the poll tax in federal elections. Arkansas is one of five remaining states using the poll tax.

Faubus talked with William J. Smith, his legal adviser, and Representatives Paul Van Dalsem of Perry County, L. H. Autry of Mississippi County, Doris McCastlain of Monroe County and John E. Miller of Izard County.

The governor must decide whether to call a special legislative session to enact a voter registration bill or to let Arkansas hold its Democratic primary under a legal cloud this summer.

Faubus said he favored a liberal registration bill that would make it easy for anyone to register and vote.

He said party loyalty, a requirement that the registrant state whether he is a Democrat, Republican or indpendent, was sure to stir debate.

Faubus said he was not convinced that the poll tax system of voter registration would be illegal in this summer's primary elections even if the South Dakota legislature approves the amendment.

"The law strictly applies only to federal elections and it may be that we can separate them," Faubus said.

Wiley Branton, a Negro lawyer, had said that if the poll tax were used in the summer primaries, court suits would be filed.

Faubus said, "That's all right. I just don't think they will get anywhere with it."

South Dakota Ratifies The 24th Amendment

The long battle to abolish the poll tax ended Thursday in the legislature of South Dakota, but important skirmishes by its defenders may continue for years, delaying the impact of repeal where its effects would be felt the most.

The South Dakota Senate had the honor of making final the ratification of the 24th Amendment to the United States Constitution. South Dakota's Republican-controlled legislature was was the 38th to ratify the Amendment, a process that requires approval of three-fourths of the 50 states.

The General Services Administration, which serves as the custodian of federal documents, said the amendment abolishing the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections became law the instant the South Dakota legislators completed action on it.

Only the Formalities

There remained only the formalities here of official certification by the GSA administrator, Bernard L. Boutin, and publication of the certification in the Federal Register. GSA officials said this would take just a few days.

But the official victory over the poll tax—a resilient fixture of Southern politics that had survived nearly two decades of reformers' assaults—there were elements of paradox.

One was that repeal came very late in the history of the poll tax as a "legal" method of disfranchising Negro voters. Its usefulness as an instrument of white supremacy has declined [redacted] pi, Texas and Virginia—elaborate schemes to perpetuate a voting tax or to substitute other obstacles to registration and voting in state elections already are in motion or are being planned.

The language of the 24th Amendment applies only to elections for federal offices—president, vice president, senator and representative. It leaves it up to the states to determine the qualifications for voting for governors, members of state legislatures and other state and local officers.

In Virginia and Texas, the two poll tax states which have displayed the most forehanded determination to preserve visible obstacles to general suffrage, this distinction between federal and state elections has been siezed upon in drafting alternative impediments to the franchise.

The poll tax as a revenue measure is an ancient device, but through history it proved difficult to collect. As a source of government income in this country it has been insignificant.

A Democratic Aid

During its first wave of popularity in America—during post-Revolutionary times—it was actually an inducement to expanded suffrage, replacing former requirements that voters must be land owners or members of certain guilds or professions. The equal payment of a poll tax was clearly a democratic advance.

But after Reconstruction, in the period from 1890 to 1908 when Democrats resumed control of the legislatures of the South, the poll tax was openly and popularly a device to "purify the electorate" of Negroes, carpetbaggers and scallawags.

President: A Triumph Of Liberty

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson has hailed as a triumph of liberty a new amendment to the Constitution outlawing the poll tax as a requirement for voting in elections for federal office.

Johnson said in a statement that it was a "verification of the people's rights which are rooted so deeply in the mainstream of this nation's history."

"This triumph, now, of liberty over restriction is a grateful and proud moment for me," Johnson said. He added:

"The tide of a strong national desire to bring about the broadest possible use of the voting process runs too strong to hold back.

"In a free land where men move freely and act freely, the right to vote freely must never be obstructed."

While certification ceremonies probably will be held here later, they are only a formality. Once South Dakota's legislature completed its ratification, no further legal action was required.

The amendment provides that the right to vote in any primary or general election for president or vice president, or for senator or representative in the Congress, shall not be denied because of the failure to pay a poll tax or any other tax.

The poll tax, the payment of a fee as a requirement for voting, has long been caught up in controversy with civil rights defenders charging that it was used to keep Negroes from casting ballots.

Only five states—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia—still have the poll tax.

The new amendment will not bar these states from continuing to require voters in state elections to pay a poll tax, since it applies ony to elections for federal office.

Already Virginia has taken action to offset the impact of the amendment. It has passed a law that in addition to retaining the state's $1.50 poll tax for state elections, provides that anyone wishing to vote only in federal elections must file a certificate of residence six months in advance.

Faubus Is Undecided On Election Action

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — A federal prohibition against using the poll tax for registration in federal elections has created many complicated problems in Arkansas, Governor Faubus said yesterday.

He indicated at a news conference that it might be some time before he decides what course Arkansas should follow.

And if he determines that a special legislative session is needed to iron out the difficulties, he must decide whether to call it soon or to wait until the matter can be studied further.

Faubus said one thing that must be determined was whether Arkansas should try at this time to set up a permanent voter registration system or simply provide stop-gap measures to get the state through this year's elections, and then let the 1965 legislature take its time about setting up a permanent system.

Faubus said it might be possible to separate federal and state offices in the Democratic primary so that the poll tax could be used for state offices and some other system for federal offices.

One problem is that few legislators want a special session so near to the summer's primary campaigns.

Payment of the current $1 a person poll tax closed last October 1. The deadline for paying this year's tax would have been next October 1.

Arkansas collected poll tax from 633,658 persons last year, with the revenue going to the public school fund.

The legislature may be asked to enact some kind of per-capita tax to replace the revenue that will be lost because of the anti-poll tax amendment. The amount has run more than $500,000 a year for a decade.

Vote Brings Uncertainty In the Poll-Tax States

By the Associated Press

There were some bewildered voters and puzzled election officials in parts of the South today after the ratification of a constitutional amendment banning payment of a poll tax as a condition for voting in federal elections.

Texans began preparing a dual poll tax system. There was talk of possible election confusion in Alabama and a special legislative session in Arkansas.

The Mississippi legislature expected to consider the matter during the present session. Virginia had a new law on the books designed to offset the effect of the amendment to some extent.

County tax collectors were readying a dual poll tax system and answering a barrage of questions from puzzled citizens.

Complications included two types of poll tax receipts and separate lists of the two classes of voters.

Judge Roy Mayhall, chairman of the State Democratic Central Committee, said, "This amendment will cause considerable confusion in Alabama if we are forced to hold separate elections."

"If the Alabama members of Congress are to be elected without Alabama voters paying a poll tax," Mayhall said. "It is my judgment that all voters ought to be able to participate in all elections alike."

Vote Puts Proposal Into Effect

PIERRE, South Dakota (AP)—The South Dakota Senate ratified the 24th Amendment to the federal Constitution yesterday, putting into effect the ban against the use of poll taxes in voting for federal offices. The vote was 34-0.

South Dakota became the 38th and key state to ratify the amendment, which does not affect poll tax requirements in state or local elections. Ratification of three-fourths of the 50 states was required to put the amendment into effect.

The measure had been at the bottom of the Senate calendar, following House approval last week, but minority Democrats won approval of a move to boost the resolution to the head of the calendar.

75 States Affected

Five states—Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama and Virginia—now employ poll tax requirements.

Republicans had bridled at what they considered undue pressure to get the measure approved. President Johnson had put in a telephone call on the amendment's behalf to the state Democratic chairman, John Engel.

The anti-poll tax amendment written into the Constitution represents the culmination of a long fight spearheaded, ironically, by a Southern senator— Spessard L. Holland, a Florida Democrat.

While formal certification ceremonies probably will be held here later, they are only a formality arranged by the General Services Administration. No further legal action was necessary to make the amendment effective after South Dakota completed its ratification.

Neither the President nor Congress were required to take any further action in the ratification process.

The Amendment

The amendment provides that the right to vote in any primary or general election for president or vice president, or for senator or representative in Congress, shall not be denied because of the failure to pay a poll tax or any other tax.

Adoption of the amendment will not bar these states from continuing to require voters in state elections to pay a poll tax, since it applies only to federal elections. But whether this will be administratively feasible remains to be seen.

Efforts by civil rights forces in Congress to outlaw the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections date back more than 20 years.

a triumph of liberty a new amendment to the Constitution outlawing the poll tax as a requirement for voting in elections for federal office.

Johnson said in a statement that it was a "verification of the people's rights which are rooted so deeply in the mainstream of this nation's history."

"This triumph, now, of liberty over restriction is a grateful and proud moment for me," Johnson said. He added:

"The tide of a strong national desire to bring about the broadest possible use of the voting process runs too strong to hold back.

"In a free land where men move freely and act freely, the right to vote freely must never be obstructed."

While certification ceremonies probably will be held here later, they are only a formality. Once South Dakota's legislature completed its ratification, no further legal action was required.

The amendment provides that the right to vote in any primary or general election for president or vice president, or for senator or representative in the Congress, shall not be denied because of the failure to pay a poll tax or any other tax.

The poll tax, the payment of a fee as a requirement for voting, has long been caught up in controversy with civil rights defenders charging that it was used to keep Negroes from casting ballots.

Only five states—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia—still have the poll tax.

The new amendment will not bar these states from continuing to require voters in state elections to pay a poll tax, since it applies ony to elections for federal office.

Already Virginia has taken action to offset the impact of the amendment. It has passed a law that in addition to retaining the state's $1.50 poll tax for state elections, provides that anyone wishing to vote only in federal elections must file a certificate of residence six months in advance.

many complicated problems in Arkansas, Governor Faubus said yesterday.

He indicated at a news conference that it might be some time before he decides what course Arkansas should follow.

And if he determines that a special legislative session is needed to iron out the difficulties, he must decide whether to call it soon or to wait until the matter can be studied further.

Faubus said one thing that must be determined was whether Arkansas should try at this time to set up a permanent voter registration system or simply provide stop-gap measures to get the state through this year's elections, and then let the 1965 legislature take its time about setting up a perma-primary so that the poll tax could be used for state offices and some other system for federal offices.

One problem is that few legislators want a special session so near to the summer's primary campaigns.

Payment of the current $1 a person poll tax closed last October 1. The deadline for paying this year's tax would have been next October 1.

Arkansas collected poll tax from 633,658 persons last year, with the revenue going to the public school fund.

The legislature may be asked to enact some kind of per-capita tax to replace the revenue that will be lost because of the anti-poll tax amendment. The amount has run more than $500,000 a year for a decade.

Vote Brings Uncertainty In the Poll-Tax States

By the Associated Press

There were some bewildered voters and puzzled election officials in parts of the South today after the ratification of a constitutional amendment banning payment of a poll tax as a condition for voting in federal elections.

Texans began preparing a dual poll tax system. There was talk of possible election confusion in Alabama and a special legislative session in Arkansas.

The governor said it might be possible to hold this summer's primaries under the poll tax system if state and federal offices are separated.

Virginia

Governor Albertis S. Harrison Jr. said Virginia's new law was enacted "in order to provide an orderly means by which citizens of Virginia who so desire might register and vote in federal elections without payment of poll taxes."

Mississippi

Attorney General Joe Patterson of Mississippi said he expected the Legislature now in session would "reckon with the matter and set up machinery to cope with it." He did not reveal details.

But Patterson said "it won't pose as big a problem for Mississippi as some other states, since Mississippi does not elect any state officials at the time it elects senators, congressmen and presidential electors."

State Solons Defend Vote On Poll Tax

The Atl. Journal 1/24/64

Georgia state senators Friday defended their 47 to 0 vote to ratify the anti-poll tax amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

But they declined to get into a verbal tiff with U.S. Sen. Richard Russell. He said in Washington their action makes him "hang my head in shame" and is "a source of humiliation to me."

Sen. Al Holloway of Albany pointed out that the people of Georgia spoke against the poll tax in 1945 by eliminating it. He added:

"I'm certainly not going to make any effort to veto the people of Georgia irrespective of my feelings. It was the only way a representative of the people could vote."

FULTON SEN. Charlie Brown said the Senate is justified in its vote since there has been no poll tax in Georgia for [illegible] years. "The Senate's action is to be commended."

DeKalb Sen. H. McKinley Conway Jr. said the Senate acted in the best interest of the state.

A vote against the poll tax could have "effectively sabotaged" the state's advertising program nationally, involving tourism and industrial development.

He said whether Georgians must pay a poll tax has long been settled. The Senate vote Thursday was "a matter of public relations."

SEN. ROBERT Smalley Jr. of Griffin said Sen. Russell is entitled to his view of the wisdom of the Senate's action just as the Georgia Senate is entitled to its views.

"I happen to think that the action of the Georgia Senate is correct irrespective of Sen. Russell's views."

"As far as I'm concerned, the Senate's action speaks for itself," Sen. Ben Johnson of DeKalb said.

Faubus Considers Splitting Election To Keep Poll Tax

Splitting the primary in two—with one for federal offices and the other for state and local offices—is one of the possibilities this year, Governor Faubus said Thursday.

This way the poll tax could be used in the primary for state and local offices and some other system of voter registration for federal offices, he said.

But Faubus conceded that even this plan might require a special session of the legislature. He doesn't know and he is in the process of finding out.

"It's a very complicated situation," Faubus said to newsmen a few hours before South Dakota became the 38th state to ratify the 24th Amendment to the federal Constitution. The amendment prohibits use of the poll tax in voting on federal offices in both primaries and elections. It became effective with the South Dakota action.

Faubus said that Arkansas had a form of registration for maiden voters which possibly could provide for registrations in federal elections without requiring a special session.

Faubus appeared reluctant to call a special session. He said that many legislators don't want such sessions in election years. Some legislators have said that Faubus wants also to avoid a special session for reasons of his own.

Making Study

He said he was devoting considerable time exploring the ramifications of the repeal of the poll tax requirement and that he wasn't far enough into the study to be definite about anything.

Earlier this week he said he expected any move to write even a liberal voter registration law would run into a dispute over whether to require a party affiliation designation.

Since then Faubus said he has received letters asking that a literacy requirement be included.

"One writer suggested that a high school diploma be required," he said with a smile.

"This would disqualify a lot of my friends," he added.

Suit Threatened

The state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has promised to file a lawsuit if any attempt is made to hold the summer primaries under the poll tax system.

The 1963 Arkansas General Assembly failed to pass a registration system in a dispute over literacy and party designation provisions. The Legislative Council, an interim legislative group, has been asked to cast around for a suitable registration law.

Poll Tax Ban Stirs 5 Southern States

By The Associated Press

There were some bewildered voters and puzzled election officials in parts of the South Friday following ratification of a constitutional amendment banning payment of a poll tax as a condition for voting in federal elections.

Texans began preparing a dual poll tax system. There was talk of possible election confusion in Alabama and a special legislative session in Arkansas.

The Mississippi legislature expected to consider the matter during the present session. Virginia had a new law on the books designed to offset the effect of the amendment to some extent.

THE FIVE states, which make poll tax payments a requirement for voting, came face to face with a long expected development Thursday when South Dakota approved the 24th Amendment.

It was the 38th state to do so and thus made the amendment part of the Constitution. Ratification was required by three-fourths of the 50 states.

The amendment provided that the right to vote in any primary or general election for president or vice president, or for senator or representative in Congress, shall not be denied because of the failure to pay a poll tax or any other tax.

Here is reaction state by state:

TEXAS — County tax collectors were readying a dual poll tax system and answering a barrage of questions from puzzled citizens.

"It's not going to be any fun, but we don't anticipate any great problems," said an official in a county tax collector's office at Austin.

Complications included two types of poll tax receipts and separate lists of the two classes of voters.

Frank Erwin Jr., secretary of the state Democratic Executive Committee, reported a drop in poll tax payments this year because of confusion over the federal amendment.

"There is a real danger that many Texans will be unable to vote in state and county races this year unless that confusion is eliminated," he said.

ALABAMA Judge Roy Mayhall, chairman of the state Democratic Central Committee said, "This amendment will cause considerable confusion in Alabama if we are forced to hold separate elections."

"If the Alabama members of Congress are to be elected without Alabama voters paying a poll tax," Mayhall said, "it is my judgment that all voters ought to be able to participate in all elections alike."

ARKANSAS — Tentative plans are being made to call a special session of the Arkansas legislature to set up a voter registration system, but Gov. Orval E. Faubus said he does not know when it would take place.

The governor said it might be possible to hold this summer's primaries under the poll tax system is state and federal offices are separated and federal offices voted on under some other system.

VIRGINIA — Gov. Albertis S. Harrison Jr. said Virginia's new law was enacted "in order to provide an orderly means by which citizens of Virginia who so desire might register and vote in federal elections without payment of poll taxes."

The law retains Virginia's $1.50 poll tax for state elections. In addition it provides that anyone wishing to vote in federal elections must file a certificate of residence six months in advance.

MISSISSIPPI — Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi said he expects the legislature now in session "will reckon with the matter and set up machinery to cope with it." He did not reveal details.

But Patterson said, "It won't pose as big a problem for Mississippi as some other states, since Mississippi does not elect any state officials at the time it elects senators, congressmen and presidential electors."

Poll Tax

more than anything is losing the $500,000 or $600,000 from poll taxes that goes to the schools," Mays said. "I have a proposal for replacing this money that would not involve any raise in taxes, but I want to discuss it with state fiscal officials before making it public."

Edward L. Works of Dallas County said he thought the governor would "do what's right" about calling a special session. He said he thought some form of literacy test might be a good idea.

Works said he did not favor separate registration for state and federal elections, but "we will have to find some way to provide money for the schools." He said he did not see the necessity of registration by party.

Edwin E. Hopson Jr. of Desha County said, "I think the right to vote should not be lightly bestowed. He said that it was the governor's prerogative to call a special session but that he did not favor one before the primary unless it was necessary. Hopson felt that it was all right for a member of a family to register for other members.

Arthur E. Deckelman of Drew County doesn't favor a special session before the primary because he said no contests appeared to be in the making for federal offices. He said each legislator should discuss three or four proposals with his constituents before reaching a decision.

W. R. (Witt) Stephens of Grant County said, "I would not care to comment at this time because I have been out of town and I'm not up on the situation."

G. W. (Buddy) Turner Jr. of Jefferson County said he would favor a special legislative session as soon as possible. "I was in favor of taking care of it during the regular session," he said.

He favors Faubus's proposal on moving the cut-off date closer to an election. He said he felt that except in instances of severe illness persons should be required to register for themselves. On the literacy test issue, he commented: "I think it would be nice if everyone were literate, but illitrate people should be given an opportunity to vote if they have interest enough to register themselves."

T. L. Greenlee of Jefferson County said the questions surrounding a new voter registration law were "too important to answer without first making a thorough study."

J. P. Walt of Jefferson County said that a special legislative session was the only way he could see to handle the situation unless "we want to take the chance that it will be decided in court." He said he would favor one registration system for both state and federal elections. He said a new law should require personal registration in all cases possible. He favors a party registration requirement.

James O. Stevens of Jefferson County said "in my opinion the legislature should meet immediately to set up a law to cover this year's primary. If it doesn't there will be a lot of doubts."

Stevens said he would favor having a cut-off date 90 days before this year's primary and from three to six months before the elections in following years. He said he would not favor a permanent registration system. "I think voters should re-register at least every two years," he said.

Stevens favors requiring each voter to register personally. "But I am not in favor of a literacy test because some people who can hardly read or write take a definite interest in politics. They know what they stand for and what a candidate stands for," Stevens said.

G. D. Smith Jr. of Lincoln County said he was in no rush to hold a special session. "There will be ample time after the April 29 filing deadline for the primary to pass a stopgap bill if there should be a federal contest," he said.

He said he felt that the present voter registration deadline of October 1 in the year preceding an election would should be kept in force, because "it is a stabilizing force in our state elections."

Smith said he would not want to do away with "the right of any member of a family to register for another member because it (personal registration) would be too much of a burden on rural areas."

Smith said he did not favor a literacy test, but that he was in favor of registration by party. He explained: "Jumping party lines leads to crooked elections. For instance in the northwest part of the state where the parties are more evenly divided, the Republicans will run a weak man in the Democratic primary. Then they will run a Republican in the general election and will vote in both the Democratic primary and the general contest."

Senators

James W. (Jim) Raney of Warren (16th District) said he thought the state would be "completely within its rights to wait until after the primary" before enacting a new registration law. Raney said he had never been in favor of letting anyone register for another person. He said a literacy test might be advisable, but "I don't think it would work." He said he thought that a cut-off registration date closer to the election would be a good idea.

Knox Nelson of Pine Bluff (20th District — Jefferson and Lincoln Counties) said he thought the new registration law should not "deprive anyone of the privileges of voting, but at the same time I think it should be strong enough to not permit abuses." He said he would favor having a special legislative session before the primary because it would give more time to explain the new law to the voting public.

He said he agreed with Faubus on the cut-off date "because it would create more interest in voting."

He said there would be confusion is there were a separate set of rules for voting in federal and state elections.

Nelson said he was studying registration laws in other states.

Morrell Gathright of Pine Bluff (20th District) said he felt that there would be no need for a dual system of election laws. "The general state revenues are growing, and sufficient funds could be allocated to the schools to make up for the loss of the poll tax revenues," Gathright said. He said he felt that a special session would be in order before the July primary because of the possibility of having federal contests in that election.

Merle F. Peterson of Dumas (21st District—Desha and Drew Counties) said he would not favor a literacy test requirement. He said he understood that "some states use the literacy test to keep colored folks from voting. In Arkansas we have never tried to keep them from voting. We ask them to vote for us."

Peterson said he would favor a cut-off date closer to an election. "I would not be a strong advocate of separate elections (for federal and state offices.)," Peterson said, but added that it would be necessary to have some source of revenue for the schools.

George L. Pugh of Portland (22d District — Chicot and Ashley Counties) said he definitely thought there should be a special session before the July Primary.

He said he was in favor of some type of registration requirements but that he didn't feel that a literacy test could be properly given. "I don't know who could administer it, and I think there would be a possibility of fraud on both sides, Pugh said.

Pugh said he thought a family member should be able to register for others in his family because in the rural areas it was difficult for everyone to get to the county seat.

Pugh said he did not think registering party affiliation should be necessary. "Good party members will vote the right way anyway," he said.

Special Session Is Expected

By JOHN R. STARR
Of the Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK—Governor Faubus has spent the last few days looking for a loophole through which Arkansas could pass its primary elections without bringing them under a legal cloud.

If he has found one, he has not said.

Other key government figures, including many legislators, feel a special session is inevitable.

No one wants to be quoted to this effect while the governor is studying the matter. But the general comment has been, "I don't see any other way."

Amendment 24, which became a part of the Constitution on ratification by South Dakota on Thursday, prohibits use of the poll tax as a qualification for voting for federal offices, including congressmen, in either primary or general elections.

The name of any congressman who draws opposition will be on the primary ballot.

Perhaps none will draw opposition in the primary. All escaped without opponents two years ago.

With no congressional race on the ballot, Arkansas apparently could use the poll tax to qualify voters for the primary.

But Faubus cannot afford to hold to this hope. His foes could embarrass him by providing a token opponent any time before the ticket closes April 29. That would necessitate a special session right at the beginning of the campaign season.

No one who has to run this summer wants a special session, now or later. But they would rather have it now if it has to come.

Faubus's friends believe he would do better to get the session out of the way before announcing his political plans. They believe he has enough strength to get a voter registration bill through the General Assembly with a minimum of controversy.

Any attempt to settle the problem without legislation will, of course, be open to court attack. A suit could confuse the picture enough to benefit Republicans in the general election.

And, in any event, some kind of registration system will have to be set up before the general election. A special session between the primary and general elections would be unpalatable to candidates with GOP opponents.

One "out" offered by legal authorities calls for separating the congressional and state races on the primary ballot. A voter who presents himself without a poll tax receipt could be, for example, given a ballot which would permit him to vote only for the congressional candidates.

Faubus has said he favors a bill that would make it easy for everyone to register and vote. This is the kind of bill that can be expected to come from any special session.

Efforts will be made in advance of the session to get a non-controversial bill, although it may provide only a temporary solution to the poll tax problem. The 1965 legislature would have plenty of time to draw up a permanent plan.

The 1965 session also probably will be asked to consider replacing the revenue which will be lost if the poll tax is no longer collected. This comes to more than $600,000 a year. It goes to the public school fund.

Lawmakers might elect to keep collecting the tax, for state elections only, or they might enact a straight per capita tax on every adult, without regard to voting privileges.

The poll tax originally was a per capita tax. Only since 1920 has it been used for voter qualification.

Slim Majority From Area Wants Session

By BRENDA TIREY
Of The Commercial Staff

A slim majority of Southeast Arkansas legislative delegates favor a special session of the state legislature to decide on a voter registration system to take the place of the poll tax.

The majority of the legislators said they would not favor a separate registration system for federal and state elections in order to keep the poll tax. However, several expressed concern over the loss of revenue to the schools that would result from abolishing the tax.

There was no consensus on the issues that stalled a new registration law in the 1963 legislature —literacy requirements, absentee registration and statement of party affiliation. Many had no comments on these subjects.

Most of the area delegates favor moving the cut-off date for voter registration closer to an election date.

Governor Faubus favors this.

Following are the comments of the legislators, polled by telephone:

Representatives

Albert M. Hayes of Arkansas County said he had no statement.

Nap B. Murphy of Ashley County said there should be a special session soon. He felt that if the session were after the primary there would be court cases on the issue that could bring adverse publicity to the state. Murphy said he would not favor restrictions on the registrant. He said he would not favor a statement of party affiliation. He said he did think a person should register in person if he were physically able. He said he would favor a cut-off registration date in the spring of the current year of an election.

Bill Wells of Bradley County would favor a simple law. "I think we very easily could get an act that would be complicated to the extent that it might be used against the better interests of the voting public," he said.

Ben Bynum of Chicot County said he didn't think a special session would be necessary before the primary. He said he felt that a cut-off registration date closer to an election would give more people an opportunity to vote. He said he could see no need for party registration because "there are so few Republicans in the state."

Raymond L. Mays of Cleveland County said he favored any voter registration law that would require voters to register in person in the county in which they live. He added that an exception should be made for servicemen.

Mays favors a special session before the primary. He said he saw no need for literacy tests. He said he would favor having state and federal elections at the same time, as they have been in the past.

Rockefeller Asks Study By a Special Committee

Special to The Commercial

LITTLE ROCK — Winthrop Rockefeller said yesterday that Arkansans should demand a study of voter registration by a special committee.

He issued a prepared statement in which he said:

"I think that a commission or committee, composed of prominent citizens from all segments of our state-wide community should be formed for the purpose of evaluating and considering laws of our sister states in order to determine the best and fairest election code and to submit these considered proposals to the Legislature for its thoughtful consideration."

Would Include Lawyers

He suggested that membership of the proposed committee include representatives of the Arkansas Bar Association, prominent judges and other authorities on law.

Rockefeller is considered a possible likely candidate for governor this year on the Republican ticket. He is the Republican national committeemen.

He said it was "imperative that the commission should be completely nonpolitical, with no ax to grind and no desire to favor any political group or organization."

Urges Speed

"No time should be lost in embarking upon this important task," he said.

Rockefeller said, when reached by telephone Friday night, that he feared a system of registration by party would be used as a political tool by those in power in the state.

Continuity of management in the joint AEC/Navy nuclear propulsion program must be maintained and supported.

It is my hope and expectation that this fine man will continue to serve the Nation with distinction. There can be no retirement for a man of the heart and spirit of Admiral Rickover.

I express to the Admiral my heartfelt wishes for a very happy birthday.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief biographical sketch of Admiral Rickover.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF H. G. RICKOVER, VICE ADMIRAL, U.S. NAVY

BACKGROUND

Born: January 27, 1900; graduated U.S. Naval Academy, 1922; selected for engineering duty only (EDO), 1937; assigned to nuclear reactor development, 1947; Assistant Chief of Bureau of Ships for Nuclear Propulsion, in charge Navy Department's nuclear ship propulsion program since 1947; Assistant Director for Naval Reactors, Division of Reactor Development, U.S. Atomic Energy Commission since 1949.

EDUCATION

B.S., U.S. Naval Academy, 1922; M.S. (electrical engineering), Columbia University, 1929; completion nuclear power instruction course, Oak Ridge, Tenn., 1947.

AWARDS

Awarded Legion of Merit for performance of duties as head of the Electrical Section, Bureau of Ships, 1946.

Made commander, Order of British Empire, 1946.

Awarded Gold Star in lieu of Second Legion of Merit for performance of duty in development of nuclear ship propulsion program, 1952.

Awarded Congressional Gold Medal for his accomplishments in successfully directing the development and construction of the world's first nuclear-powered ships and the first large-scale nuclear powerplant devoted exclusively to the production of electricity, 1959.

Presented the Distinguished Service Medal for exceptionally meritorious service from January 17, 1955, to January 17, 1961, while in charge of the naval nuclear propulsion program in the Department of the Navy and in the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, January 1961.

NUCLEAR PROGRAM (UNDER DIRECTION OF ADMIRAL RICKOVER) TO DATE

Design first nuclear submarine begun 1949; first atomic powerplant in the world, land prototype of Nautilus "goes critical" March 30, 1953; keel of Nautilus laid, 1954; Nautilus underway on nuclear power, 1955.

Today completed: 36 nuclear submarines, 17 of them Polaris subs; 1 nuclear aircraft carrier; 1 nuclear cruiser; 1 nuclear destroyer.

Also world's first nuclear powerplant built exclusively for generation of electricity completed 1957 (Shippingport, Pa.).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I join in everything the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont, the ranking Republican Member of this body, has had to say about our friend Vice Adm. Hyman G. Rickover.

Admiral Rickover has had to overcome almost insurmountable odds. He is obstinate, for which we can thank the Lord; he is determined; he is patriotic; he has made a real contribution to the welfare and defense of this country. He has achieved renown, not only because of the work he has done in the field of nuclear propulsion, but also because of his work in the field of education.

I am glad to join the distinguished Senator from Vermont in complimenting and congratulating this distinguished American on his birthday anniversary. Our congratulations and commendations to him are certainly well deserved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming will state it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is the Senate now in executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SIMPSON. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Chair whether the addition to rule VIII which was adopted last Thursday by the Senate applies to the consideration of the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, that rule does not apply to the consideration of the Executive Calendar at this time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Further inquiring, Mr. President, I gather, then, that as a name is called on the Executive Calendar, any Senator may be recognized, and he need not speak to the nomination in question; is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, on Thursday——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, first, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the present status of the Executive Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Navy nominations are being considered en bloc.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Have the Navy nominations been approved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, the Navy nominations are pending. Does the Senator from Montana wish to have the President immediately notified of the nominations thus far confirmed?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the nominations thus far confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Wyoming will yield briefly, let me say that I have not yet made a request in connection with the morning hour; but I intend to do so at the conclusion of the call of the Executive Calendar.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should like to have made clear for the RECORD whether the new rule applies to the Executive Calendar. I gather from the interpretation by the Chair that when nominations are called up and they are subject to debate, any Senator can discuss any question in connection with any nomination.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is an old tradition and custom in the Senate. The distinguished minority leader has read Senate Resolution 89 and knows that the rule of germaneness of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], under the resolution agreed to by the Senate last Thursday, does not go into effect until conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. METCALF in the chair). The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Is the Senate in the morning hour; and, if not, when is it planned to enter the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now in executive session, and there is no consideration of legislative business at this time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield briefly to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON], without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S TELEGRAM TO GENERAL MACARTHUR ON HIS 84TH BIRTHDAY

As in legislative session,

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Wyoming in yielding to me at this time.

This morning an article was published in the Baltimore Sun entitled "Johnson Sends MacArthur Telegram on 84th Birthday."

The article expresses the respect and the high regard of President Johnson for General MacArthur, and also the respect and the high regard that is held by General MacArthur for President Johnson.

I ask unanimous consent to have this article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOHNSON SENDS MACARTHUR TELEGRAM ON 84TH BIRTHDAY

NEW YORK, January 26.—General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, celebrating his 84th birthday today, fingered a congratulatory telegram from President Johnson and remarked whimsically:

Poll Tax

"I remember well decorating him with a Silver Star for his coolness and courage in an air mission in New Guinea.

"Had I known at the time he was to become President, I would have looked after his welfare better than I did—but he seemed well able to take care of himself."

PRESIDENT SENDS WIRE

The President's wire read:

"Your country sends you, with affection and warmth, prayers for God's blessing on your 84th birthday. You are one of the authentic American heroes of this century.

"On behalf of the American people, please accept the appreciation of a grateful nation for what you have given and all you have done."

CADETS VISIT MAC ARTHUR

President Johnson went on active duty as a lieutenant commander the day after Pearl Harbor. He was the first Member of the House to do so. He served in the South Pacific and went on bombing missions which won him the Silver Star. He served for 8 months, returning when President Roosevelt ordered all Members of Congress out of service.

MacArthur, in his Waldorf Towers suite, also received five cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. One of the cadets was John Putnam Otgen, 22, of Elm Grove, Wis.

MacArthur told Otgen: "Your great grandfather appointed me. I knew him well."

Representative Otgen, of Wisconsin, appointed MacArthur to the Academy in 1899.

Read to the general was a letter from the West Point cadets which termed him "a man who exemplifies by his accomplishments, past and present, the true meaning of dedication to country."

The letter was read by Richa Allen Chilcoat, 24, first captain and brigade commander of the corps. He is the son of Mrs. Edna B. Chilcoat, of Millersville, Md., and Floyd D. Chilcoat, of Minneapolis, Minn.

OTHER CADETS PRESENT

The other cadets present were Dennis K. Culp, Jr., 23, of Fresno, Calif.; Norman Lee Grunstad, 24, of Ortonville, Minn., and Harold Paul Kindleberger, 22, of El Paso, Tex.

Also present was Maj. Gen. James B. Lampert, Academy Superintendent, and Brig. Gen. Michael Davison.

In acknowledging the cadet letter, MacArthur said: "High honors have come my way, but I shall believe that the greatest honor was being a West Point graduate."

Officers who served with MacArthur in World War II arranged for their annual birthday party for him. The private affair at the Waldorf was organized by retired Maj. Gen. L. J. Sverdurp, of St. Louis.

As in past years, no guest list was issued. About 100 persons attended, mostly his former comrades in arms.

As the general walked into the Basildon Room, a voice called the assembled guests to attention. They then sang "Happy Birthday."

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield briefly to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRANSMITTAL OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 1 AS ADOPTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, RATIFYING A PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

As in legislative session,

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, as the senior Senator of the State of South Dakota, it gives me great pleasure to present today, for appropriate referral, a certified copy of House Joint Resolution 1, as adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, ratifying the proposed 24th amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America relating to the qualification of electors.

Attached with the official certificate is a letter of transmittal from the Honorable Essie Wiedenman, Secretary of State for the State of South Dakota.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks the official certificate from Secretary of State Wiedenman and the text of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request by the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, last Thursday, January 23, when news reached the Chamber that my home State of South Dakota had become the 38th State to ratify and make immediately effective the 24th amendment to the Constitution, the distinguished majority leader said: "I believe this is a great day in the history of the Nation."

No better description could be given to this event, Mr. President, than that delivered by the majority leader. I would only wish to add that it is a proud and happy occasion for my State—in the year of its 75th anniversary of statehood—to become the legal instrument by which the proposed amendment became the 24th amendment to our Constitution.

South Dakota takes a back seat to no State in its desire and in its efforts to achieve equal rights and equality of opportunity for our citizens.

The action of the State legislature last week to add this further guarantee to our citizens' rights to vote is in keeping with my State's record in this vital area of human liberties. For example, we were among the first to make certain that our Indian citizens received the right to vote.

Mr. President, South Dakota marks this occasion—as does the Nation—as another illustrious chapter in our continuing success to make liberty a living, working vehicle by which each citizen can fulfill his honest and dedicated aspirations as a fundamental part of a free society.

I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Wyoming in yielding briefly to me.

EXHIBIT 1

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Pierre, S. Dak., January 24, 1964.

Hon. KARL MUNDT,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR KARL: As directed by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, I am transmitting herewith a certified copy of House Joint Resolution 1, ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America relating to the qualification of electors.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

Mrs. ESSIE WIEDENMMAN,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

This is to certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true, correct, and examined copy of House Joint Resolution 1, as adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota on January 23, 1964, and filed in this office on January 24, 1964, and the whole thereof, and has been carefully compared with the original now on file in this office and found correct.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota at the city of Pierre, the capital, on this 24th day of January 1964.

[SEAL] ESSIE WIEDENMAN,
Secretary of State.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 1

Joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America relating to the qualification of electors

Whereas both Houses of the 87th Congress of the United States of America by a constitutional majority of two-thirds of each House thereof, made the following proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words and figures, to wit:

"Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the qualifications of electors

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution only if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress:

" 'ARTICLE—

" 'SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

" 'SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation' ": Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring)

SECTION 1. That said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state of this State, to the Secretary of State of the United States, and to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POLITICAL SMOKE SCREEN ON LIVESTOCK IMPORTS

As in legislative session,

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, on Thursday, January 16, 1964, Secretary of Agriculture, Orville Freeman, held a briefing for Members of Congress on beef imports. It was a well attended meeting which demonstrated the concern Members of Congress have for the problem which confronts our livestock industry.

Branton Ready To Push Amendment

1-29-64

Wiley A. Branton, director of the Southern Regional Council's Voter Registration project, said he is prepared to meet head-on expected resistance from several southern states to the recently ratified 24th amendment to the U. S. Constitution outlawing the poll tax.

The anti-poll tax amendment which was formally ratified Jan. 23 when South Dakota became the 38th state to approve it, applies only to primaries and elections for President, Vice President and members of Congress. Approval of the required three fourths of the 50 states came in time to apply the new amendment to the 1964 presidential elections.

States now requiring payment of the poll tax are Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and Texas.

Branton says he expects efforts will be made in all these states, except possibly Texas, to still use the poll tax device to prevent Negroes from voting in the forthcoming federal elections.

"If such is done," he said, "I am ready to go to court to enforce the new amendment."

Branton filed the lawsuit leading to the desegregation of Little Rock's Central High School in 1957.

For example, Arkansas's poll tax will be illegal in federal elections but there has been some conjecture that the state might be able to conduct its primaries using the poll tax on the ground that technically a primary isn't an election —only nominees for the election are chosen in the primary.

It's all up to Governor Faubus, who must call a special legislative session sometime to set up a vote registration system replacing the poll tax.

"If there is any attempt at all to keep people from voting in the primaries unless they have a poll tax," Branton said, "I'm serving notice here and now that there is going to be a lawsuit to restrain them."

Branton urged in a speech here that a special session be called and a "meaningful, liberal voter registration law" be adopted "so that people can register permanently and participate in the affairs of their government."

Branton said that the 24th Amendment is a boon to Negroes because it allows more of them to vote.

"This week will mark a major milestone in the South in attaining something that the NAACP has been working for, for years — the abolition of the poll tax," he said. He called the poll tax a vicious [redacted] the 24th Amendment believed it would discourage states from levying poll taxes in state elections. But the Virginia Legislature, anticipating the enactment of the amendment, had already acted to ensure that its poll tax would be retained in state elections.

A new Virginia law would permit residents to vote for Federal candidates by filing certificates of residence but would require annual payments of $1.50 per person for voting in state elections.

The South Dakota Senate hurriedly suspended its rules and rushed the proposal to a vote after the Georgia Legislature threat-state to avote.

The Georgia Senate approved the amendment, 43-0, Thursday, but the Georgia House working on other legislation, which had priority, delayed immediate action on the poll tax measure.

The 24th Amendment resolution was submitted to the states Sept. 24, 1962, after the United States House and Senate approved it by the required two-thirds majorities. Illinois was the first state to approve the measure, acting Nov. 14, 1962.

Of the 11 states of the old Confederacy, only Tennessee and Florida had approved the amendment by the time it was made a part of the Constitution. Mississippi formally rejected it.

Va. poll taxes face two suits

afro-Ames 2/29/64

RICHMOND

Virginia's poll tax, as well as its hastily enacted companion "certificate of residence" election provision, has both the Commonwealth legislators and citizenry clamoring.

Two high - ranking state Republicans, in this connection, last week filed suits in Federal District Court charging both the poll tax and the residece provision are unconstitutional.

In addition, they ask an injunction to block any Federal election results until the matter is cleared up.

The separate suits were filed by Horace E. Henderson of McLean, state GOP chairman, and Lars Forsenius of Roanoke, vice chairman of the Virginia Young Republican Federation.

DEFENDANTS IN the suit filed by Henderson names as defendants the three - member election board and L. M. Coyner, Fairfax County director of finances, while Forsenius names the elecion board and James E. Peters, Roanoke County treasurer.

Both complainants charge the certificate of residence requirement was hastily enacted by the General Assembly last November in an effort to nullify the 24th Amendment banning the poll tax.

The class action suits were filed on behalf of persons like Henderson, who has his poll tax and Forsenius has not, who want to vote in both elections without paying a tax or filing a certificate.

R. H. Hailer, the mortician is among a field of five candidates for two city council seats in the Camden Democratic primary.

Richard McGriff, 44, the Lancaster city council candidate in the special March 10 election, said he's running "because I've lived in this ward (One) all my life and feel I can be of service to the community."

AND ANOTHER probable reason for the growing number of colored candidates in the South as well as elsewhere in the nation is the constant reminder that the colored vote is the prize plum.

The colored population is only one-tenth of the nations total.

And the colored voters' strength is even smaller at 6.5 per cent. Yet the colored vote is put in another perspective when the 6.5 is changed into 4,500,000 well - placed ballots.

Ask Richard Nixon. The number of colored votes John F. Kennedy received for President far out-weighed his national plurality over Nixon.

MEANWHILE, BACK at Capitol Hill, some 14 senators have signed a resolution calling for Virginia to repeal the poll tax and get in tune with times as other states which have done so.

Sen. William V. Rawlings of Southampton County, who also represents Suffolk, Franklin and Nansemond and Isle of Wight Counties, said the people who sent him to Richmond are "weary of studies."

They either "strongly resent" the poll tax, he said, or are in the group that would retain it but in any case "are tired of being disallowed the right to vote on it."

OTHER ACTION by Virginia senators included heavy support for a "states rights" resolution urging a higher court than the U.S. Supreme Court.

Despite Gov. Albertis S. Harrison, who has twice spoken against the measure, 24 of the 40 senators are supporting the call for a constitutional convention to create a "Court of the Union."

Such a court would be composed of chief justices from the 50 highest state courts and would be authorized to review and reverse U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

The resolution, which has been circulating around the nation, hasn't gained any appreciable popularity—having been passed by only Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, South Carolina and Wyoming.

AND IN South Carolina, here Joseph H. Rainey became the first colored man to be elected to Congress in 1870, the spirit of public office has attracted a mortician and a cotton mill work-

Poll Tax Dying Slow, Confusing Death in 5 Southern States

By the Associated Press

The poll tax is dying hard and its death agony is spreading election confusion in the five Southern states that are trying to keep it alive.

In Texas, Alabama and Virginia — and probably in Mississippi—those who do not pay the tax will be able to vote only in elections for federal offices.

The fifth state—Arkansas—is inclined to let non-poll tax payers vote in all elections but state courts will have to decide if this is legal under the state Constitution.

The tax is small, $2 a year in Mississippi, $1 in Arkansas and $1.50 in the other states. So for revenue it is insignificant. But it has become one of the symbols of states rights and as such is jealously guarded.

Texas, Alabama and Virginia already have set up complicated dual systems under which those who pay the poll tax can vote for all offices but those who do not can vote only for president, vice president, United States senator or United States representative.

Mississippi has an act to implement a similar system pending in its legislature.

In these states, the voters will still have to pay the poll tax to vote for governor, sheriff, mayor, justice of the peace or any of the host of other state, county and local offices.

Arkansas is taking another course, if the courts permit. A bill to be introduced with strong support in a forthcoming special legislation session will allow those who do not pay the poll tax to obtain a free tax receipt that will qualify them for all elections.

Arkansas Attorney General Bruce Bennett is of the opinion, however, that the state Constitution requires payment of the poll tax for voting in state elections. If the courts so hold, Arkansas, despite its good intentions, would wind up with the same system as its four sister states.

But there seems to be little inclination in Arkansas for keeping the poll tax any longer than it will take to amend it out of the state Constitution in November 1966.

In Texas

Texas voters, on the other hand, recently defeated an anti-poll tax amendment, invalidating a 25-cent registration law set up by the legislature in anticipation of adoption of the amendment.

Texas then set up a 30-day period of free registration with registrants restricted to voting in federal elections.

Alabama has taken no formal action but in its Democratic primaries May 5 and June 2, voters who have paid the poll tax will get a ballot listing all offices; those who have not will receive a short ballot listing only federal races.

The Virginia legislature set up its dual system in November. A voter can qualify for federal elections without paying a poll tax if he files a certificate of residence six months before the election.

Dying for Decades

The poll tax has been dying by degrees for decades. It received a mortal blow early this year when the 24th Amendment was ratified by South Dakota and became a part of the United States Constitution. The amendment outlaws the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections.

At one time, almost all Southern states had a poll tax. All except the five voluntarily abolished it as a voting requirement. The last to do this was Tennessee in 1953. Georgia eliminated it in 1945.

Some states—such as Oklahoma—have a poll tax written into the Constitution but have never collected it.

Others, including Kentucky and North Carolina, retain it simply as a revenue measure.

Florida enacted a poll tax in 1889 to restrict voting of Republican Negroes, then repealed the law in 1937 when most Negroes had become Democrats.

Senator Spessard Holland (Dem., Fla.), led the fight in Congress to get the 24th Amendment submitted for ratification.

More moves can be expected in each of the five states toward replacing the poll tax voter qualification system, either as a result of court action or a change in sentiment of lawmaking bodies.

Virginia's dual system already is under legal attack from the state Republicans. The Texas leaders who pushed for the anti-poll tax amendment probably will try again. Alabama eventually will have to do something to provide at least for registering those who do not pay the poll tax.

And even in Mississippi — which proposes to charge non-taxpaying registrants $1 as a fee for issuing a voter certificate — court attacks are likely on whatever voting system the legislature approves.

POLL TAX BAN OFFICIAL NOW

3 Anti Poll Tax Suits Combined In Virginia

Atl. Herald 3/27/64

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Three law suits, seeking an end of the poll tax in Virginia for voting in state and local elections, have been combined to simplify and strengthen the legal battle against a franchise tax.

The move includes two Republican anti-poll tax law suits in U. S. District Court here and one filed in Norfolk by Mrs. Evelyn Butts of Norfolk.

In an order entered Tuesday last week, the three judges who will hear the suit said the three cases should be heard together because they have the same aim.

Earlier, the judges consolidated the two Republican suits.

The three-judge panel will hear arguments in the cases May 12.

The suits contend that Virginia's system of poll tax for voting and the certificate of residence violate the U. S. Constitution. The certificate of residence law was enacted at a special session of the General Assembly last November to bolster the state's control of voting, despite passage of the recent anti-poll tax amendment to the U. S. Constitution wiping out the poll tax in federal elections. Virginia officials who support the Byrd Machine are opposed to the 24th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Mrs. Evelyn Butts, a Norfolk civil rights leader, filed suit last fall after the legislature passed the new laws.

The Republican suits were filed last month by Horace E. Henderson, state Republican chairman, and by Lars Forssenius of Roanoke, vice chairman of the Young Republican Federation of Virginia.

Anti-poll tax Virginians are complaining about the road block which the state has set up against voting.

That Certain Smile

If you haven't registered to vote in the Congressional and Presidential races—and there's still time, since April 20 is the deadline—you might be interested in the following true story.

Not long ago a friend of ours went down to the Board of Registrars in the Tuscaloosa County Courthouse. He was twenty-one and wanted to register to vote. He was second in line, right behind an old Negro man. The Negro told the lady behind the desk that he wanted to register to vote. She said it was too late, since he had not paid his poll tax. Without a word the old man turned and slowly shuffled out of the office.

Then our friend stepped up and told the lady he was twenty-one and wanted to register to vote. She told him, too, that he could not register since he had not paid his poll tax. Our friend whipped out his copy of the 24th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America and quoted the part about not having to pay poll tax in elections for national offices.

The lady behind the desk smiled and let him register.

Substitute For Poll Tax Ruled Illegal

Atl. Const, 5-31-64

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Virginia's certificate of residence plan, a plan enacted by a special legislative session last November to take up the slack once the poll tax was outlawed for federal elections, was declared unconstitutional Saturday.

A three-judge federal court, in throwing out the certificate plan, said, however, the poll tax was still valid in state elections.

The opinion, written by Judge Albert V. Bryan of the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, said the effect of the ruling would be suspended for 30 days to permit an appeal—if one is desired—to the United States Supreme Court.

Virginia's new laws kept the poll tax for state and local elections. Any person who, otherwise quaiflied, paid the $1.50 a year poll tax was permitted to vote in federal, state and local elections.

Should an otherwise qualified voter desire to vote in federal elections without paying the poll tax, he would have been permitted to do so by filing the certificate of residence—a form setting out his name, address and a statement certifying that he intended to remain at that address a least until the forthcoming election.

The certificate was required six months before the general election, the same date set for payment of the poll tax.

Court Order On Poll Tax Fight Shakes Solons

Selma Times-Journal 6/2/64

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—With election officials under federal court restraint, Democrats nominate a senator and five representatives today.

County election officials, under a court order issued Monday, were barred from requiring that voters producue a poll tax receipt.

A new amendment to the U.S. Constitution forbids a poll tax in a federal election.

However, the legislature has tried to go around this by quietly passing a law that voters didn't have to pay the tax—but had to obtain a receipt, anyhow.

Voters who refuse to produce a receipt will have to sign an affidavit that they were registered as voters at least 30 days before the election. Then their vote will be put aside, to await the outcome of the court fight on whether the new "receipt" law is constitutional.

The ballot included four Negro candidates. They agreed they had no chance. They said their campaigns was mainly to show that Negroes find it difficult to vote in this Deep South state.

The six congressmen, all veterans, were expected to win renomination. Since Reconstruction Days, Democratic renomination has meant election in Mississippi.

The six—Sen. John Stennis and Reps. Jamie L. Whitten, William M. Colmer, William A. Winstead, John B. Williams and Thomas G. Abernethy.

Polls opens at 6 a.m. and close at 7 p.. Secretary of State Heber Ladner predicted a turnout of about 200,000.

Stennis was opposed by Victoria Jackson Gray, a Hattiesburg Negro. She campaigned actively. Stennis remained in Washington for the fight against the livil rights bill.

Fannie Lou Hamer of Rueville opposed Whitten. The Rev. John Cameron, a Negro minister from Hattiesburg, was among those opposing Comer. J. M. Houston, a retired Negro furniture dealer from Vilksburg, opposed Williams.

Reliable figures are impossible to compile but it is estimated that less than 30,000 Negroes are qualified to vote. Negroes make up about half of the state's population.

ANNUAL REPORT of MODERN COMMUNITY DEVELOPERS, INC. and PLANNED COMMUNITIES, INC.

This is a report to you - my 1500 bosses, the stockholders of M.C.D. and P.C. - on the what, the why and the how of our companies:

Since MCD was formed in '58, as a result of successful open housing in Philadelphia and Princeton, we have gone through two separate stages of development. The first involved the period from MCD's formation when we started building homes in eight states, to 1961 when we realized the full import of the Deerfield battle - that building new communities was fine - but could be painfully slow! We began planning for a new policy. The four year Deerfield battle ended in June, 1963 with a major financial loss to our wholly owned subsidiary Progress Development Corporation, when the U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear our appeal from the condemnation of our two sites in this all-white Chicago suburb.

Fallout from this battle hurt our job in Waterbury, Conn., where the "massive integration" slogan of Illinois opposition was used to label the new community being built by our subsidiary Meadow Homes.

The Deerfield battle resulted however in a myriad of new friends and in a major change of policy . . . the purchase of apartment houses to open them to all. Just as we have been operating with separate corporations for each job to protect the interests of MCD stockholders in case any one of the jobs had difficulties, each apartment house venture is a separate one in the form of a limited partnership where the investor's liability is limited to the amount he puts up. Thus, if a building does well each investor gains and our company gains to the extent of our share of ownership.

APARTMENT HOUSES The first, 72 apartments, was purchased early in 1962 with the assistance of a $250,000 revolving apartment house fund established by an MCD board member. This building, after paying 4% the first year, is now paying investors 8% cash flow, tax free for several years due to depreciation, plus additional tax benefits. For the past year investors have found a ready market for their $1,000 limited partnership units at $1,085. Six non-whites are living there. No one has moved out because of integration.

Before MCD was formed pioneer projects did use quotas to advance integration. No quotas are used in our apartment houses. We use our knowledge of the housing market to reach all people, keeping in mind always our goal of integration.

Our second building, twice the size of the first, was purchased early in 1964 with MCD buying the ground under it and Planned Communities receiving a $65,000 interest in ownership of the building. This too was integrated without incident. Our accountant's projections show it too should pay an 8% cash flow after the first year of preliminary operation and improvement.

The third development, over 400 garden apartments, was purchased in June. MCD received $65,000 interest in it.

Management fees and profits to MCD and PC from these three buildings should provide almost 90% of our $35,000 a year overhead.

OTHER OPERATIONS

Maryland A new, 40 acre site which we had purchased was taken in part for a high school, leaving us 10 acres or 29 lots to be developed.

Waterbury All houses are sold. There are eleven white and two Negro purchasers. A self-help project is planned for our twenty finished lots and co-op garden apartments on 24 acres. We are working with the FCH Corporation on plans for both. Foundation help has been promised for the self-help housing, where a non-profit group will erect shell houses, and families who complete them will get sweat-equity of several thousand dollars.

Providence A construction contract is signed and building should start shortly on this $7,500,000, 480 unit garden apartment-shopping center job. Our board member, Irving Jay Fain is president of the local group, University Heights, Inc.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Construction has begun on the second half of the 120 unit Rutland Towers middle income co-op. Occupancy begins this summer.

Riverdale - Bronx, N. Y. We have decided to sell the six acre site overlooking the Hudson because the cost of development has become excessive. Interest has been shown by builders friendly to open occupancy.

Wilmington Three new families moved into Runnemede in the past year. Three of twelve families now in are Negro. We believe our success here influenced an open occupancy policy adopted recently by the builders and realtors of the great Wilmington area with the support of the power structure.

BUDGET The MCD budget was cut sharply. From January to June of 1963 we were running at an annual rate of $65,000; prior to that $100,000. We cut the budget to $35,000 and are doing well. Meanwhile income is up. In 1963, there was a $16,000 profit for PC. MCD had a $172,000 loss, largely because of the Deerfield low condemnation award and legal costs. For 1964, the cash flow to date indicates a profit for both MCD and PC. PC could pay a dividend in 1965 if the board feels this is better than putting profits back to work for you. It is not likely that MCD will pay a dividend for some years, but I do expect its book value will rise, based on growth in the apartment house field and profits made by MCD and PC. MCD holds 10,000 of 12,400 shares of PC common.

A market now exists for MCD and PC stock. Bengston and Company, 200 E. 36 street, New York City is specializing in it. Anyone wishing to buy or sell MCD or PC stock should write to them. Book value as of December 31, 1963 was $10.93 per share of MCD stock. It is increasing with the growth of MCD's equity in the land under one of the buildings and in other apartments. Planned Communities Class A, preferred in liquidation, sells for $100 a share, which was the original price and is book value. Planned Communities common, issued at $1, has been selling for $10 a share.

The National Committee on Tithing in Investment - (NCTI) was formed in May to urge non-profit institutions and individuals to invest about 10% of their available capital in open housing. Eliot D. Pratt is founding chairman; Congressman Donald M. Fraser of Minnesota, board chairman. Others on the Board: Sterling Tucker, John J.O'Connor, Kivie Kaplan, Daniel Singer, Emil Mazey, Seth Glickenhaus and myself. Executive secretary is Howard Smith.

NCTI sponsors, as we go to press, include: Msgr. John Egan, Wm. H. Scheide, Robert Spike, Bishop Paul Moore, Jr., Bishop John Burgess, Henry Hitt Crane, Roy Wilkins, James Farmer, Dorothy I.Height, Roland Gittlesohn, Balfour Brickner, Eugene Lipman, Bayard Rustin, Irving Jay Fain, Truman Douglas, Whitney Young, John Cronin.

How stockholders can help MCD grow:

1. Stockholders' meetings around the country are needed. Stockholders who want to plan such meetings should write MCD. Such meetings clarify operations for stockholders.

2. When people plan to move to Washington, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Wilmington or Connecticut - urge them to write to MCD about housing.

3. Tithing in Investment Become a sponsor - Write NCTI for literature - Room 704, 1914 Connecticut Ave., N.W. Washington, D.C.

4. Live your beliefs If you can't move, try to integrate your neighborhood, and get friends interested in MCD's apartment house work.

5. We need more revolving funds for apartment houses, $250,000 to $1 million or more each. We need more institutional investors - churches, unions and other non-profit groups. Two foundations invested, along with individuals, in limited partnership units in our third apartment community.

The growth of MCD and PC has been largely due to a tireless board. All board members have worked loyally to make our progress possible. Also we owe much to our National Advisory Committee and to our 1500 stockholders many of whom work hard and sacrifice to build MCD.

Working together I know we can build a world where, in the words of Pauli Murray, every man can be "friend and brother to every other man."

At the Annual Meeting, June 10th, the following board was elected unanimously for the coming year:

Benjamin J. Anderson	Thomas A. Gaines	Robert R. Nathan
Harold M. Bailer	Seth M. Glickenhaus	Andrew E. Norman
William W. Brill	Morton S. Grossman	Eliot D. Pratt
Chester F. Carlson	Dorothy I. Height	Joseph L. Rauh, Jr.
Albert Sprague Coolidge	Frank S. Loescher	William H. Scheide
Peter J. Davies	Norman P. Mason	David H. Scull
Max Delson	John A. McDermott	Herbert H. Tate
Irving Jay Fain	Morris Milgram	Sterling Tucker
James Farmer	Frank C. Montero	H. John Weisman
	Dorothy S. Montgomery

Following the annual meeting the Averell Harriman Equal Housing Opportunity Award Luncheon was held. Honored with plaques by John Costanza were:

Max Weinrib, Chicago builder, executive vice president of MCD's Illinois Subsidiary, Progress Development Corp.

Dr. Arthur G. Falls, Chicago surgeon and Chairman of the board of Progress.

Eliot D. Pratt, Connecticut farmer, publisher of Current, chairman of the board of Goddard College and co-producer of film "Point of Order."

Joseph L. Rauh, Jr. leading civil rights attorney, chairman of the board of MCD's Washington D.C. subsidiary, Homeparks: ADA's civil rights chairman; chief counsel in the Deerfield freedom of residence case.

At the board meeting, June 10, 2:00 p.m. vice-chairman Frank C. Montero was elected chairman of the boards of MCD and PC. Former chairmen David H. Scull and Andrew E. Norman were elected vice presidents. Other officers; President, Morris Milgram; Treasurer, Harold M. Bailer; Secretary, Max Delson; Asst. Secretary-Treasurer, Thomas V. Garth; Counsel, Max Delson; Asst. Secretary, Herbert Max.

The new board chairman, Frank C. Montero of Riverdale, New York City was a founder of MCD. He was associate executive director of the National Urban League and is special assistant to Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Mission to the United Nations. He brings to this post broad knowledge of the field and the company and a rare ability to work with people.

A summarized financial report is enclosed. Copies of the CPA's complete report are available on request.

Sincerely,

Morris Milgram

Dear Wiley:

The National Urban League is pleased to invite your participation in a three-day "Community Action Assembly", to be held in Washington, D. C., at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, from December 9th through 11th. This meeting is being held especially for the purpose of sharing information with you, and focussing on the challenges imposed on all of us to see to it that the new programs made possible under government and private auspices which can significantly affect the socio-economic conditions of Negro citizens are understood, given proper direction, and made meaningful to those persons for whom they are particularly intended.

Our meeting is directed especially to heads of national organizations who bear a responsibility for community action programs, and to other community leaders. In initiating this Assembly of Negro leadership, the National Urban League is carrying out its historic responsibility as a professional agency in the social welfare field. Because of our trained staff and an experience gained over a period of 54 years the League is uniquely equipped to contribute importantly in the implementation of these measures.

We firmly believe that this Assembly will be one of the most significant meetings of our time, concerned as it will be with the "meat, bread and potatoes" issues that affect us all. We are deliberately restricting the number of persons who will participate; invitations are going only to organizational heads and to some key individuals.

Ours will be an action conference. We have been assured of the participation of the Administration, appropriate Cabinet members and their key aides. They will counsel with us as we work to develop guidelines for local community action based on these new, expanded programs - and to answer questions which might be raised concerning their effective implementation. These are crucial times. It is incumbent upon us to see to it that slogans such as "Freedom Now" and "Equal Opportunity" are transformed into tangible programs leading to better jobs, better housing, better education and a richer, fuller life for all Americans.

The Urban League believes that it would be a tragic indictment on all of us if the unprecedented efforts which led to the passage of the Civil Rights Bill and the Anti-Poverty Bill are dissipated because leadership fails to move effectively to insure their implementation. Many of our organizations can conceivably qualify as recipients of funds for these programs - and many of the new opportunities will be meaningless unless resources are secured to put those programs into operation.

We know that many demands are being made upon you at this time, but the urgency of these issues requires that you give this high priority. We regret that we have not been able to secure the financial resources to make it possible for us to defray your expenses in connection with the meeting. We are confident, however, that the significance of the meeting will be so clear there will be no question of your organization's bearing the necessary expenses. We are eliminating the "conference extras" - registration fee and the like - in order to reduce the over-all cost.

Please fill out the enclosed registration card and return it to us at once. Insure your hotel accommodation by sending in the hotel reservation card direct to the Sheraton-Park.

I look forward to having you as a participant in this important meeting.

Sincerely yours,

Whitney

FOR RELEASE
MONDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1964

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- The National Urban League is taking quick action in an effort to get Federal anti-poverty funds flowing out of Washington and into Negro communities across the nation.

Its three-day Community Action Assembly, which will attract 300 top national Negro spokesmen to Washington, Dec. 9-11, would be notable if only for the star-studded roster of high-ranking Federal officials who will speak, capped by an appearance of President Johnson.

But it's less spectacular long-range effect, League spokesmen hope, will be even greater. Their aim: to bring together the Administration's cabinet secretaries and their aides with Negro leaders to open pipelines of self-help for poverty-struck Harlems from New York to Seattle.

The League itself has gotten off to an early start in obtaining Federal grants for retraining programs in Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and New York, and for a housing upgrade operation in Milwaukee. The League's national director, Whitney M. Young Jr., believes that scores of non-profit and community-serving agencies are also entitled to a chunk of the funds.

Reading over the roster of participating spokesmen indicates that other Negro leadership groups have like ideas. The roll of delegates, representing a veritable cross-section of Negro life, will be boning up on the delicate art of "grantsmanship." Some, whose past activities concentrated predominantly on picketing and marching to topple racial barriers now may revamp part of their operations to topple qualification barriers.

"As the racial walls come down," Young says, "we must have the live, warm bodies of qualified men and women to pour through the breech. We must have scholars as well as football stars and engineers as well as entertainers."

Workshop sessions, consequently, have dull and undramatic titles like "Implementing the Economic Opportunity Act in Health and Welfare," or "Voluntary Agencies and the Economic Opportunity Program." For the YMCA or settlement house director serving Negro citizens in a southern or midwestern city, this may mean a lesson in how to get crucially-needed dollars for taking kids off the streets and replacing the lure of the pool hall with apprenticeship training or tutoring help.

Telling how to do it at these high-level "workshops" will be cabinet-rank experts like W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary of Labor; Anthony J. Celebrezze, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; and Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA). An added attraction will be R. Sargent Shriver, War on Poverty Director. An appearance by the President on Dec. 10th in The Sheraton-Park Hotel conference site will highlight the meeting.

In his keynote address opening the parley Young will portray what non-profit organizations can accomplish by citing the League's work. In Milwaukee, the local League has received a $103,000 HHFA grant to establish five information centers where low-income families can bring their housing problems.

In Cleveland, the League recently secured a $211,000 on-the-job training grant from the Labor Department to help 350 unemployed workers rise out of poverty. Pittsburgh's League got a $100,000 contract to train 100 workers.

The Urban League of Greater New York, in co-operation with Yeshiva University, has received Federal aid to prepare Negro school teachers from southern States qualify for State certification. And the National Urban League has received foundation grants for a wide variety of undertakings ranging from youth motivation to establishing regional headquarters.

"We cannot afford 35,000,000 American poor, whatever their race," Young said recently. "We have the resources and the 'know how' to mobilize our society and lift the afflicted out of the shadow of poverty and into the light.

. . . more

"If we do not, we shall appear to the world as selfish, callous and not understanding what democracy is all about, and we shall have failed ourselves."

Coordinator for the Assembly is Isobel C. Clark, National Urban League Associate Director for special programs.

COMMUNITY ACTION ASSEMBLY
sponsored by the
NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

Washington, D. C. December 9-11, 1964

OUTLINE OF IMMEDIATE ACTION

WHAT WILL THE URBAN LEAGUE DO?

The National Urban League will:

1. Send you a report of the Assembly. - by January 15
2. Prepare and send you a supplement to the Handbook. This supplement will include the Community Action Guidelines. - by January 30
3. Produce a "how to do it" film to help you interpret the Anti-Poverty program. - by February 15
4. Make available to you the services of the entire Urban League organization - National Headquarters, Washington Bureau, Regional Offices, Local Offices.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

1. REPORT AT ONCE TO YOUR MEMBERSHIP AND TELL THEM ABOUT THE ASSEMBLY - ITS INFORMATION, ITS INSPIRATION, ITS CHALLENGE.
2. Urge that the Anti-Poverty Program be placed on the agenda of the next meeting of your affiliate, branch or chapter.
3. Send the National Urban League your roster, with the names and addresses of the head and secretary of each affiliate, branch or chapter. (The NUL will send supplementary materials to you and to each one of them at nominal cost.)
4. Alert your affiliates, branches or chapters to be ready for unified community cooperation in the War on Poverty.
5. Follow-up with your constituency as soon as the Community Action Guidelines and other materials are received.

The National Urban League would like to feel that it can contact you at some future date with reference to progress being made by your organization in working on the War on Poverty.

HANDBOOK INTRODUCTION

This handbook of scholarly information, prepared recently by the program staff of the National Urban League, for use by Community Action Assembly delegates, focuses on the immediate problems, needs, resources, and priorities that disadvantaged Negroes face in Housing, Employment, Education, and Health and Welfare.

Your careful perusal of this document preparatory to discussion would substantially enhance the opportunities for the Assembly to develop meaningful sets of guidelines for community action. Following the Assembly, the National Staff will forward a handbook supplement including Community Action Guidelines and other significant materials.

CHAPTER I

PROBLEMS OF THE NEGRO WORKER

I. Discrimination

Discriminatory practices in recruiting, screening, processing, hiring, upgrading, transfer and promotion by employers in all areas of work still loom as the number one problem facing Negro job-seekers and workers.

II. Education and Training

A. Lack of Vocational and Technical Schools

Lack of opportunity to pursue training in good vocational and technical schools continues to limit the number and kind of available skills among Negro job-seekers. Too often what is offered can be found among those backgrounds listed as "disappearing jobs."

B. Lack of Apprenticeship Opportunities

Of the 100,000 apprentices enrolled in U. S. Department of Labor approved programs, less than 2,500 of these were Negroes. Improving apprenticeship opportunities are a must, in order to provide more Negro workers in the craft and apprenticeable trades.

C. Inadequate Educational and Vocational Counseling

Lack of information about Negro youth, their aspirations, their ambitions, and their problems, grouped with present processes used in the selection of counselors, has resulted in unrealistic educational and vocational counseling programs for Negro youth.

III. Unemployment

Negroes represent 11 percent of the work force but 25 percent of unemployed. Among Negro youth, 19 through 24 years old, 24 percent are unemployed as compared to 14 percent to white youth. Lack of educational training and background make Negroes most susceptible to lay-offs due to technological changes and automation.

IV. Recruiting

A. Unrealistic Programs

Recruiting programs, whether intended for the high school level, college level or for experienced workers, need re-examination. Too often there is misunderstanding about the background of prospective Negro workers with regard to education experience and motivation, on the part of recruiters. Lack of information about present day work situations and requirements is a handicap to Negroes.

B. Lack of Cooperation Between Negro Colleges and Employers

The dialogue which has been going on between Negro educators and employers has not been sufficient to change materially stereotyped notions about the quality or quantity of education Negro youth receive. Teachers in Negro colleges, on the other hand, have not had an opportunity to work or participate in industry oriented programs which might give them an opportunity to become more familiar with work situations.

C. Misinformation About Negro Job-Seekers

Lack of communication between employers and the Negro community, particularly as it relates to education and counseling, serves to perpetuate the idea that Negro job-seekers are "special" and, as such, have low aspirations and ambitions.

D. Inability of Negro Youth to Pass Written Examinations

The fact that testing procedures have not always been used positively and Negro youth have had little experience with organized testing programs, has resulted in the development of present negative attitudes about testing in general.

V. Advancement on the Job

A. Integrating the Work Force

Although there have been policy statements prepared relating to integration and equal employment by most major employers, there has been difficulty in translating these statements into practices.

B. Lack of Opportunities for On-the-Job Training and Retraining

Employers have long recognized the fact that schools and colleges could not do the full job of training as required by any given industry. To meet this need, they have set up their own training programs to take up where the schools left off. However, Negro job-seekers have only participated in very limited numbers.

VI. Inadequate Placement Services

Inadequate placement services in schools and colleges, together with discriminatory practices of public and private employment agencies, still loom as a major problem for Negro job-seekers.

VII. Underemployment

Discriminatory hiring practices have resulted in developing a very substantial group of underemployed Negro workers. Lack of opportunity for promotion, transfer, and upgrading, no matter what the training, has put a ceiling on the use of Negro skills.

VIII. Lack of Community Concern

A community which operates inferior schools for Negro youth; which does not understand the aspirations, ambitions and hopes of Negro youth and adults; which limits employment opportunities for Negroes; which fails to enforce vigorously equal opportunity laws and regulations; which does not provide for full participation of its Negro citizens in all areas of community concern, is, in fact, not meeting its full responsibilities to all its citizens.

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATIONS FOR SOLVING SOME OF THE PROBLEMS FACED BY NEGRO WORKERS

I. Discrimination

Every vestige of discrimination in recruiting, hiring, training, promotion, transfer and upgrading must be eliminated from every area of employment in our economy. Negro citizens must utilize the provisions of every means of legal redress from local city ordinances up to and including the Civil Rights Act of 1964 whenever discrimination appears to be the cause for failure to hire, upgrade or be transferred.

II. Education and Training

A. Youth

1. Motivation and Stimulation

Parents play the major role in motivating and stimulating their children; however, since many of them have had unfavorable work experiences, this would be reflected in what is passed on to the children. Therefore, all segments of the community, not only need to be made aware of the problems, but must implement positive programs including changes in schools and attitudes of counselors in order to give meaning to Negro youth of their place in our society.

2. New Careers

There must be a realistic appraisal of the trends in future manpower requirements. More information must be disseminated in realistic terms as to the emerging occupations resulting from automation and technological change.

B. Adults

1. Training and Retraining

Adults must take advantage of all training programs whether they be in-service, on-the-job, adult education, technical or college offerings. Negro leaders must encourage their constituents to avail themselves to such training. They should serve on boards of institutions where such training is conducted to insure that realistic programs to meet the needs of minority group citizens are developed and implemented.

2. Reassessment of Occupation Status

The Negro parent must talk about manpower needs in relation to the abilities, skills and interests of his children. While there will be an increasing need for professional, technical, business and other white-collar jobs in the years ahead, there will also be need for larger numbers of workers in the skilled trade areas. Adults and youth alike should appraise their own abilities and interests with an aim toward examining the possibility of achieving success in the skilled trades area. If community acceptance and status are based on income and the solid family life, the well paid skilled worker has a good chance to become a community leader.

III. Mobility

Negroes, either at the time of initial employment, or when it is necessary to move with a firm which, for one reason or another, finds that relocation is necessary, must be mobile.

IV. Changes in Occupational Opportunities

The Negro community must be convinced that every positive activity represents an additional opportunity. Parents, as well as youth, must accept the fact that changes are taking place. Employers must be more convincing in the ways that they present this information to Negro job-seekers in order that it have more meaning. The responsibility of preparation for the change rests upon all of us.

RESOURCES

Resources available to community leaders and groups for providing materials, information and manpower as might be needed as plans are developed to raise the economic status of the Negro citizens.

I. Community

The Urban League *

Individuals and groups may work with local and national staff and volunteers in many programs that have been designed to assist Negroes to find rewarding jobs.

Presently in operation is a National Skills Bank in New York and 56 local Skills Banks in Urban League cities all over the country. Here, qualified Negroes may register their skills for consideration by employers.

In addition, the League is sponsoring secretarial training projects, on-the-job training projects with industry.

CHAPTER II

HOUSING PROBLEMS OF NEGRO CITIZENS

I. Discrimination

Negro citizens today find themselves living in the readily identifiable ghetto directly due to discriminatory practices on the part of developers, realtors, landlords, Federal, State and Municipal Governments.

II. Present Housing

A. Dilapidation

The substandard housing in which minority group citizens are forced to reside are in need of repairs and renovation. Much of this housing has become available due to the "flight" of the previous tenants. It usually is old and without adequate heating and plumbing.

B. Overcrowding

Many times because of the high cost of rental, non-acceptance in other areas, and economic circumstances, Negroes are forced to live in overcrowded conditions. Housing, health, and sanitary codes frequently are not enforced.

C. Rental

Regardless of his ability to pay, the Negro cannot obtain adequate housing. Moreover, through various subterfuges where he has the means, he is unable to rent.

D. Ownership

The Negro buyer does not have freedom of choice in the selection of location of the property sought. He is obviously eliminated from even seeing houses in all areas because of the attitudes of certain realtors. Mortgage loans are more difficult for him to obtain irrespective of his position or income. In most instances, the points charged are higher than that of other buyers.

III. Urban Renewal

A. Selection of Areas and Projects

Most projects that have been implemented under this program have had as an express purpose, the elimination of slums. This has resulted in the program being identified as "Negro removal." These programs are generally in the Negro areas.

B. Relocation

Negro citizens in many instances have not been moved into integrated situations while being relocated, but rather into another ghetto. In some instances where these relocation projects specifically state that relocated residents have first priority in returning to the new housing built upon the cite, the Negro finds himself eliminated because of some administrative restriction.

C. Citizen Participation

Far too often, the decisions on the type and area of the urban renewal program have been made and the Negro citizen has been the last to know. He has not participated in the formulation of the plans for such projects although the regulations covering the program specifically state that there should be broad based community participation.

D. Non-white Participation in Redevelopment Process

The minority group citizen is used rarely as appraisers, contractors, staff assistants, etc. in the redevelopment process.

E. Slum Clearance

In slum clearance projects, evidence indicates that other low rental income housing is not available to those being relocated. Also, the cite which is cleared in many instances is being used for other priced rentals or for something other than housing. Hence, those who need the housing most, and can least afford to pay, are often victims of slum clearance projects.

IV. Neighborhood Conservation and Rehabilitation

More often it has been the unavailability of funds under this program which has prevented the full implementation in Negro communities.

V. Legislation

Very few cities and states have open occupancy housing laws. Such laws when proposed, have been very actively opposed and defeated by realtors and other groups with a vested interest.

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATIONS FOR SOLVING SOME OF THE PROBLEMS CONFRONTING THE NEGRO IN HOUSING

I. Discrimination

The opportunity to secure adequate housing based upon the ability to pay must not be restricted by artificial barriers of discrimination based upon race, creed, color or national origin. Negro citizens must have free access to such housing. Therefore, restricted covenants, etc. must be eliminated from all housing.

II. Present Housing

A. Dilapidation

Dilapidated housing has to be eliminated from all American cities. To this end, the various Federal, state and municipal programs and financial resources concerned with this problem must be intelligently brought to bear in solving this problem.

B. Overcrowding

City ordinances must be passed and enforced to prevent overcrowding. Present health and sanitation codes must be vigorously enforced. Citizen groups have a responsibility in reporting violations and working with city officials to eliminate this problem.

C. Rental

Rentals, particularly of the low and middle income variety, must be increased to accommodate the present and anticipated need. Under the provisions of current legislation and regulations, church, civic groups, and banks should undertake the sponsorship of such housing projects in order to increase the supply.

D. Ownership

All housing insured by the FHA or Veteran's Administration upon being foreclosed, must be made available to all home seekers. Banks and other financial institutions must not have any differential in lending policies and/or point charges. Realtors must show all listings without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. Negroes should not create new ghettos when purchasing homes.

III. Urban Renewal

A. Selection of Areas and Projects

Areas designated for renewal must not be selected solely for the purpose of reducing Negro concentration. The citizens living in the area should be consulted with, in the initial stages of the comprehensive program for an area rather than after decisions are reached for a specific project.

B. Relocation

Relocation projects should be reported in detail, to all who are affected. There must be Negro representation upon the planning commissions where such decisions are made.

C. Non-white Participation in Redevelopment Process

Bidding for all contractual work from planning, up to and including landscaping, must be open to everyone. All contracts should include a non-discriminatory clause that will be enforced. Contracts must be immediately withdrawn when and wherever discrimination practices are found to exist.

IV. Neighborhood Conservation and Rehabilitation

A wider and more creative use of these funds must be made by all communities. There has to be a more creative use of rent strikes to force landlords to improve properties. Neighborhood groups and civic organizations can sponsor clean-up and similar programs to enhance the appearance of neighborhoods.

V. Legislation

Existing Federal, State and Municipal laws must be rigidly enforced. Every violation should be reported and followed until satisfactory decisions are rendered. Efforts must be made to strengthen those laws currently in existence. New laws must be sought where none are present. Negro citizens must join with other groups and/or take the leadership in obtaining passage of such laws.

RESOURCES

Some of the resources available to community leaders and groups for providing information, materials, and manpower or plans are formulated to eliminate housing problems facing Negro Citizens.

CHAPTER III

LIFELINE TO EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN EDUCATION

Problems and Resources
for the Education of Negro Citizens

I. Specific Problems in Education

A. Reports from 71 Urban League affiliates in 31 states, in addition to five Urban League regional offices blanketing the country, indicate a number of problems which limit the opportunity of Negroes in education. Among those which are fairly common to all sections of the country are the following:

1. Disproportionately high dropout rate among Negro students.

2. Discriminatory practices barring Negro youth and adults from apprenticeship and "on-the-job" training programs.

3. Failure of many boards of education to initiate policies and programs for quality integrated education.

4. Lack of effective communication between parents, teachers, and students in schools changing in racial composition.

5. Overcrowded schools.

6. Need for better teachers and instructional materials in schools of predominant Negro enrollment.

7. Inability of many children to pay for school supplies - and even lunch.

8. Lack of sufficient Negro male images both in and out of the schools with which Negro youth can identify and hope to emulate.

9. Insufficient programs in vocational guidance, both in and out of school, to better interpret to young people and their parents a true picture of what jobs are available, and their training and skill requirements.

10. Lack of programs which interpret to all children the true meaning and implication of guarantees and safeguards, as well as individual responsibilities, provided by the Constitution and Bill of Rights.

11. Limited opportunities for vocational - technical education and preparation for the many new skill areas of our economy.

12. Limited public-supported vocational training programs beyond the high school level.

13. Lack of significant financial assistance for average students and particularly the non-college bound student.

14. Lack of opportunities for merit promotion of Negro personnel in many school systems beyond a certain level.

15. Limited employment of Negro school personnel in schools other than predominant Negro concentration.

16. Lack of representation of non-whites on school governing committees and boards.

17. Limited audio visual aids, counseling information and services to inspire and motivate Negro children.

18. Continued use of instructional materials which fail to include positive and constructive reference of the contributions of Negroes in the American culture.

19. Lack of adequate training of educators from teacher level through administration in intergroup relations and behavioral sciences.

20. Insufficient compensatory services (such as pre-school centers and reading clinics) in schools where children need extra help the most.

21. Need for a more coordinated approach in youth programs among Negro leadership organizations.

B. In addition to this sampling of problems with racial implications, other school problems of broad community concern impose additional handicaps on Negroes. They include:

1. Inadequate financing of schools.

2. School building shortages.

3. Inadequate library facilities in many sections of the country.

RESOURCES

Resources available to community leaders and groups for providing materials, information and manpower as plans are developed to raise the educational status of the Negro citizen.

I. Community

Local, regional, and national organizations and foundations with programs and other resources specifically geared to improve opportunities for minority group citizens in education and vocational training, such as:

The Urban League

The Urban League sponsors career clinics, back-to-school campaigns, workshops for parents, in-service programs for guidance counselors in Urban League cities all over the country. The Urban League also produces films and booklets to motivate minority group, such as: "A Morning for Jimmy," "Speaking of People," "Charm by Choice," and "The Road Ahead."

CHAPTER IV

PRIORITY NEEDS OF NEGROES IN HEALTH AND WELFARE

I. Pressing Health and Welfare Needs

A. A program to stop loss of life and health in areas particularly urgent in your community, such as:

1. Reducing non-white infant mortality rates, which are alarming and almost twice as great as for white babies.

2. Enrolling pregnant Negro women into prenatal care programs. They should also be included in postnatal care programs.

3. Early detection and treatment of communicable diseases, such as Tuberculosis and Veneral Diseases, which are now increasing, especially among teenagers.

4. Providing and increasing available services to unmarried Negro parents.

5. Making available family planning services among lower socio-economic groups.

6. Expanding services in the homes of elderly Negroes who need institutional care.

B. A program to implement the 1962 public welfare amendments and to build an understanding of the relationship of dependency and discrimination, with special attention to:

1. Coverage of unemployed parents in Aid to Dependent Children Programs.

2. Community work training programs.

3. Day Care Facilities - more Negro than white mothers must work even though they have pre-school age children and have little, if any, day care services for their children.

4. Seek legislation to raise the level of public assistance grants at the State level to the recognized standard index of living.

II. Considerations for Programs to Eliminate the Needs

A. Eliminating overt and subtle discrimination and segregation from all health and welfare facilities.

1. Fact Finding and Documentation.

2. Confrontation with health and welfare establishment with facts and a bill of particulars which must be met within a reasonable time limit.

B. Accelerating utilization of services by low-income Negro families.

1. Carrying services into neighborhoods and working with community leaders as case aides, recruiters, etc.

2. Extensive health education in public housing units, store front churches, etc.

3. Intensive work with families through FAN, parent education groups, home demonstration programs, and consumer education programs.

4. Extensive use of the mass media and selected mailing campaigns directed to low-income Negro families on community health and welfare services and their rights and privileges.

RESOURCES

Some of the resources available to community leaders and groups for providing information, materials and manpower as might be needed to improve the health and welfare status of Negro citizens.

"The war on poverty is not a struggle simply to support people, to make them dependent on the generosity of others. It is a struggle to give people a chance . . . Our fight against poverty will be an investment in the most valuable of our resources — the skills and strength of our people. And in the future, as in the past, this investment will return its cost many fold to our entire economy."

LIFELINE TO EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN EDUCATION

.... Problems and Resources
for the Education of Negro Citizens

> "If there was one thing the Negro had yearned for in his days of slavery, it was education. To Frederick Douglass, education had been the beginning of freedom .... There was a great thirst for learning ... It was not just children who went to learn, but adults, too .... Few were too young, and none too old."
> -- from the book, Worth Fighting For

Education for Negro citizens has continuing significance as the accelerated drive for equality brings into focus the need to correct the historical injustice of inferior and inadequate schooling.

Education for Negro citizens, as for all Americans, takes on new meaning and importance as technology makes more demands upon the intellect. Work requires a higher order of skill training and the "compacted" urban society insists on a new minimum of understanding about social, economic, and interpersonal relationships.

The myth that Negroes are not interested in education has been exploded. Parents have demonstrated beyond a doubt that they do care about the quality of preparation for life which their children receive. Adults have indicated that they want a new opportunity for training in order to be upgraded on the job.

The National Urban League is committed to bringing about change for the benefit of all Americans. The National Urban League believes that the lifeline to equal opportunity in education can be strengthened only through concerted effort by community leadership and through expanded resources, both public and private.

Fortunately, there are new resources both public and private to help Negro and other disadvantaged citizens in their march with others to the platform of equal opportunity in education. The U. S. Supreme Court, in 1954, outlawed segregation in the public schools. Expanded provisions of the National Defense Education Act will make it somewhat easier for the poor to obtain a higher education. The Vocational Education Act of 1963 is designed to carry out the intent of Congress that disadvantaged youth shall receive better vocational training.

There are other public measures such as the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which sets the stage for new patterns of education, employment and use of Federal funds. The U. S. Department of Labor has several programs merging training with basic education and youth counseling.

Finally, a start on the great war against poverty by the U. S. Office of Economic Opportunity places education at the heart of this effort. According to The New York Times, "education is the new growth stock, and everybody wants a few shares."

Negro community leadership, as evidenced by the tremendous response to the National Urban League's call to Washington, is committed as never before to raising the sights of Negro children, and to helping the Negro adult continue his basic education and retrain for the skills of tomorrow.

The National Urban League thus calls for a new partnership of effort with all responsible leadership to improve the status of the whole educational enterprise in America which at present tends to favor the privileged, denies to the poor, and stifles the economic growth towards a truly "Great Society."

THE PROBLEM

An indication of some of the problems which limit the opportunity of Negroes in education is contained in reports from 71 Urban League affiliates in 31 states, in addition to five Urban League regional offices blanketing the country. Those problems fairly common to all sections of the country are the following:

1. Disproportionately high dropout rate among Negro students
2. Discriminatory practices barring Negro youth and adults from apprenticeship and "on the job" training programs
3. Failure of many Boards of Education to initiate policies and programs for quality integrated education
4. Lack of effective communication between parents, teachers, and students in schools changing in racial composition
5. Over-crowded schools
6. Need for better teachers and instructional materials in schools of predominant Negro enrollment
7. Inability of many children to pay for school supplies - and even lunch

8. Lack of sufficient Negro male images both in and out of the schools with which Negro youth can identify and hope to emulate

9. Insufficient programs in vocational guidance, both in and out of school, to better interpret to young people and their parents a true picture of what jobs are available, and their training and skill requirements

10. Lack of programs which interpret to all children the true meaning and implication of guarantees and safeguards, as well as individual responsibilities, provided by the Constitution and Bill of Rights

11. Limited opportunities for vocational education and preparation for the many new skill areas of our economy

12. Limited public-supported vocational training programs beyond the high school level

13. Lack of significant financial assistance for average students and particularly the non-college bound student

14. Lack of opportunities for merit promotion of Negro personnel in many school systems beyond a certain level

15. Limited employment of Negro school personnel in schools other than predominant Negro concentration

16. Many school boards are not truly representative of the total community

17. Limited audio visual aids, counseling information and services to inspire and motivate Negro children

18. Continued use of instructional materials which fail to include positive and constructive references of the contributions of Negroes in the American culture

19. Lack of adequate training of educators from teacher level through administration in intergroup relations and behavioral sciences

20. Insufficient compensatory services (such as pre-school centers and reading clinics) in schools where children need extra help the most.

In addition to the above problems with racial implications, other school problems of broad community concern impose additional handicaps on Negroes. They include:

1. Inadequate financing of schools
2. School building shortages
3. Inadequate library facilities in many sections of the country.

Negroes are taking increasing advantage of growing opportunities for education. For example, from 1947 to 1961, the percentage of Negroes in colleges or professional schools rose at a much faster rate than whites. (See Table I in Appendix) However, the statistics revealing a disproportionate school dropout rate among Negro children, which is two-or-more times that of whites in many communities, is directly related to our ability to "reach" these children and to improve the educational system for their benefit.

The educational problem is due in part to an employment problem. All children need success images with which they can identify and hope to copy. If we are to encourage more Negro youth to stay in school and realize the full importance of education, we must show them a greater variety of exhibits in achievement by members of their race, until race, per se, is no longer an important factor. Negroes must be given the same financial rewards as others for whatever level of education they possess.

Statistics published by the U. S. Department of Commerce and the Council of Economic Advisors show that Negroes with a college education now earn less than whites with only a high school education. Negroes with no formal education earn less than whites with no formal education. According to these same sources, Negro service and domestic workers who have completed an elementary school education earn an average of $1,000 less than white service and domestic workers with the same education.

There are other economic aspects to poverty in education. Disadvantaged children can be helped if provided with special programs in the schools which would help them overcome early barriers to effective learning. For example, there is considerable merit in the establishment of pre-school centers in the public schools. However, according to a recent study by the National Education Association, three-tenths of the public school systems of 128 of the large cities surveyed with a population over 90,000 do not yet provide free kindergarten classes. (See Table II)

One-seventh of these school systems do not provide free textbooks to elementary school pupils. (See Table III)

One-fourth of these school systems do not provide free textbooks to secondary school pupils. (See Table III)

Effective community leadership to support the war on poverty becomes more of an urgent necessity when we review some of the effects of poor education and training received by Negroes.

Consider these few distrubing facts:

... Nearly 70 per cent of the young white population have graduated from high school but only 40 per cent of our non-white population have completed high school. To put it another way, 30 per cent of the whites and 60 per cent of the non-whites are "school dropouts."

... Of our adult population, 25 years and older, 6.2 per cent of whites and 22.1 per cent of non-whites have completed less than five years of school (1962).

... Almost 12 per cent of young white adults (age 25 - 29) have completed college, while only 5.4 per cent of this age group in the non-white population have done so.

... While 11 per cent of the total population is Negro, Negroes make up only 3.5 per cent of all professional workers - a major category slated for job expansion in the years ahead.

... Sixty-two per cent of the jobless Aid for Dependent Children (ADC) fathers have no education beyond elementary school, and the percentage of Negroes unemployed is still more than double the percentage of whites.

STRENGTHENING "LIFELINES"

The Urban League has observed many new approaches in the improvement of education for Negro and other disadvantaged citizens. They should be encouraged to continue and should be supported by more adequate resources.

These new approaches or innovations are characterized by a high incidence of creativity and imagination on the part of a few educators. The Urban League recommends the following innovations as representative of what can be done:

Full use of school facilities: afternoons, evenings, weekends, and during the summer;

Imaginative use of new housing facilities for experimental and on-going programs for children and adults, such as: housing projects, store fronts, empty theatres, boarded-up factory buildings, abandoned military bases, and church basements;

More non-graded schools;

More volunteer school aides;

More work-study programs for students;

More team-teaching;

More pre-school centers;

Public allowance funds for students to purchase acceptable paperback books;

More regional technical-vocational schools;

Expanded Health services for public school children.

RESOURCES AVAILABLE

The National Urban League is in a position to assist the national community through its national and regional offices, and its local affiliates. The Urban League sponsors youth incentive programs, publishes motivational films and booklets, promotes Back-to-School and Stay-in-School Campaigns, vocational guidance programs for boys and girls and their parents. The new Vocational Education Act of the Federal Government authorizes vocational education programs for persons in high school, for those out of high school available for full-time study, for persons who are unemployed or underemployed, and for persons who have academic or socio-economic handicaps that prevent them from succeeding in the regular vocational education program.

Here is a sampling of ten new Federal programs which provide opportunities for education and vocational training:

The Job Corps

Provides residential centers for young men and women, 16 through 21, in a coordinated program of basic education, skill training and constructive work experience. Designed for youth lacking schooling and skills for jobs. Smaller centers will be located on public lands; larger ones will be on unused Federal facilities near cities. A voluntary program. Forty thousand will be enrolled in the first year, and 100,000 in the second.

The Work-Training Program

Provides full or part-time work experience and training for youths, 16 through 21, enabling them to stay in or return to school, or increase employability. Can be carried out by agency of State, local government, or nonprofit organization. Will place youngsters in work in hospitals, settlement houses, schools, libraries, courts, parks and playgrounds.

The Work-Study Program

Provides part-time employment of college, university students from low-income families. On-campus jobs to include dormitory and plant maintenance, food service, clerical work, library indexing, lab assistance, and others. Off-campus employment, conducted under agreement with public or non-profit organizations, will place students as tutors, youth workers, recreation leaders, community service aides.

Community Action Programs

Provides financial support for local anti-poverty campaigns in urban and rural areas, or Indian reservations and among migrant workers. Possible projects in local anti-poverty programs include: remedial reading, literacy instruction, job training, employment counseling, homemaker services, job development, vocational rehabilitation, health services, among others. Will enable communities to attack the network of problems with network of positive, varied, coordinated programs. Federal assistance depends on community's determination to (1) mobilize its own public and private resources, (2) develop programs of sufficient scope and size that promise to eliminate the causes of poverty, (3) to involve the poor themselves in developing and operating the anti-poverty attacks, and (4) administer and coordinate the community action programs through public or private non-profit agencies, or a combination of these. Federal government to pay up to 90 per cent of cost of local programs in first two years; after that assistance on 50-50 matching basis.

VISTA Volunteers (Volunteers in Service to America)

Provides an opportunity for those, 18 and over, to join the War on Poverty. Volunteers will work with migrant laborers, on Indian reservations in urban and rural community action programs, in slum areas, hospitals, schools and in institutions for mentally ill and retarded. Period of service one year. Volunteers will receive a living allowance and $50 a month. Plans call for 5,000 VISTA Volunteers.

Adult Basic Education Program

Provides assistance to States for special programs of literacy instruction. Allotments to States is based on the number of adults 18 and over with less than a sixth grade education.

Special Programs to Combat Poverty in Rural Areas

Provides loans and technical assistance to help very low income farm families increase their income from farming or in other ways. The loans also will assist other rural families develop new opportunities for earning added income. In addition, there will be loans to start or strengthen cooperatives serving these families.

Assistance for Migrant Agricultural Workers and Their Families

Provides grants, loans, and loan guarantees to assist States and localities for special needs in housing, sanitation, education, and the day care of children.

An Employment and Investment Incentives Program

Provides up to $25,000 for small businesses not eligible under other loan programs. These include retail and service enterprises employing three or fewer persons, such as luncheonettes, filling stations, drug stores, barber shops, delicatessens, beauty parlors, furniture movers, cleaning shops, etc.

A Work-Experience Program

Provides funds for projects to help unemployed fathers and other needy persons to gain work experience and job training. Directed primarily toward jobless headsof families in which there are dependent children.

THE NEGRO WORKER

HIS STATUS, HIS PROBLEMS, AND HIS NEEDS

THE NEGRO WORKER

HIS STATUS, HIS PROBLEMS, AND HIS NEEDS

COMMUNITY ACTION ASSEMBLY

WASHINGTON, D. C.

DECEMBER 9-10-11, 1964

: : : :

NEGROES - A SUBSTANTIAL PORTION OF THE WORK FORCE

Proportion and Status:

Eight million non-white workers, most of whom are Negroes, make up 11 percent of the total work force. However, proportionately more Negroes than white work - 45 percent of the total Negro population compared to 40 percent of the white.

The bulk of Negro workers, however, is concentrated in jobs reflecting the least amount of training, skill and opportunity, thus rendering them most susceptible to unemployment.

Furthermore, there is a marked difference in the occupational distribution of Negro and white workers.

From the point of view of their distribution in the occupational structure relative to that of whites, Negroes constitute far less than 10 percent of the four top occupational groups: professional and technical; proprietors and managers; clerical, sales, and skilled workers. Negroes' participation in semi-skilled jobs is 10 percent greater than that of whites; in farming, their participation is 50 percent greater; and in service and unskilled jobs, 200 percent greater.

Income:

The extremely disadvantaged position of the Negro in the work force is also reflected in the figures on family income. The median money income of Negro families in 1960 was $3,233 compared to $5,835 for white families.

Over the past two decades Negroes have increased by three years their status in median school years completed. Yet, in 1964, 80 percent of employed Negroes, compared to 40 percent of whites, are working at the bottom of the occupational ladder.

Moreover, the majority of Negroes have traditionally been denied access to vocational, technical, and professional training, and virtually excluded from apprenticeship programs, thereby limiting earning power.

Unemployment:

The trend upwards in employment generally, and in specific areas in particular, seems not to have been able to provide for full employment. During most of 1962 and into 1963, we have had approximately 4½ million or about 6 percent of the available work force unemployed continuously.

Of major concern to us is the disproportionate rate of unemployment among Negro workers. Although Negro workers constitute only 11 percent of the total work force, they constitute 22 percent of the unemployed and the largest percentage of the "hard core" category.

The greatest amount of unemployment is found among those whose jobs fall into the semi-skilled and unskilled groups. These are the groups encompassing the majority of Negro workers.

It is well known that those jobs which require little or no educational background or training are most heavily hit during periods of considerable unemployment. This group also lacks sufficient background for inclusion in training programs which could lead them to continuing employment or to new jobs.

To say that automation has been a major cause of unemployment is certainly not an over-simplification of known facts and figures that reflect the extent of technological changes in specific industries. Reports from sources in government, business, industry, and labor alike reveal that many, many jobs are disappearing from the labor market, and that automation is playing an important part in this unhappy development. Here, too, the hardest hit are those who are not prepared to benefit from retraining programs designed to employ them in making the tools of automation or to transfer to other jobs in related or new industries.

One of the most tragic aspects of the present unemployment situation is its impact on young new workers. Although they make up only 20 percent of the total work force, they are 33 percent of the unemployed.

Included in this group, of course, are the drop-outs, the poorly and/or insufficiently trained; those who have been educated in school systems that have not had equal opportunities for admission to apprenticeship training programs in the craft trades or in industry. Many of these are Negro youth who, one way or the other, have had to face one or more of these problems.

PROBLEMS OF THE NEGRO WORKER

That the Negro worker faces problems in employment is a gross understatement. He is beset by problems in:

1. Discrimination

2. Education and Training

   a) Lack of Vocational and Technical Skills

   b) Lack of Apprenticeship Opportunities

   c) Inadequate Educational and Vocational Counseling

3. Recruiting

   a) Unrealistic Recruiting Programs

   b) Lack of Cooperation Between Negro Colleges and Employers

   c) Misinformation About Negro Job-Seekers

   d) Inability of Negro Youth to Pass Written Examinations

4. Advancement on the Job

   a) Integrating the Work Force

   b) Lack of Opportunities for On-the-Job Training and Retraining

5. Inadequate Placement Services

6. Underemployment

7. Lack of Community Concern

1. Discrimination:

Discrimination is the most serious issue underlying the problems of the Negro worker. This awesome monster crops up first in training and educational circles and plays an important role in turning out a poorly prepared product into the work-a-day world, thereby limiting opportunities for additional training. Most important is the fact that these poor backgrounds make it impossible for Negro workers to qualify for so many of the jobs which are available now or which will appear on the scene in the future.

While there may be no discrimination in a particular current job-related situation confronting a particular Negro, his difficulties in securing advancement or placement in such a situation stem directly from past discrimination. It may have been housing discrimination which restricted him to an inadequate education in inferior ghetto schools, or it may have been job discrimination which fixed his parents' income at a substandard level, thereby depriving him of financial support for a better education. The specifics vary, but the fundamental disease was there somewhere in his economic history.

Discrimination will be seen to reside at the core of each of the specific problems of Negro workers.

2. Education and Training:

a) Lack of Vocational and Technical Skills

Negroes have historically been denied equal opportunities for vocational and technical training. There was a feeling that they should not be trained for jobs unless there were job possibilities. On the other hand, Negroes could not be employed because they did not possess the necessary skills and training.

Closely related to this problem is that of a shortage of job opportunities for high school graduates and adults in new and expanding industries. This problem is especially acute in those industries which move into communities which have denied Negro youth opportunities to participate in the training programs that were set up to prepare workers for the new industries.

At the same time new workers are finding it difficult to find suitable employment, older Negro workers find that their opportunities are limited because they could not learn new skills on the job or in organized educational programs.

b) Lack of Apprenticeship Opportunities

Of all training barriers, those in apprenticeships have been most unyielding to the Negro's efforts to upgrade his skills. Many persons consider the lack of apprenticeship opportunities the greatest tragedy facing Negro youth who wish employment in some areas.

Apprenticeships are controlled by three factors: 1) an employment opportunity provided by management; 2) a willingness by the union covering the trade to accept the new worker; and 3) meeting the standards set up by the Department of Labor. Only recently has discrimination been recognized as a barrier affecting Negro participation.

c) Inadequate Educational and Vocational Counseling

Contributing adversely to this situation has been the inadequate vocational counseling service provided for Negro youth. Many of the persons who have been counseling Negro youth have gone about their jobs with little or no information about these youth, their ambitions, their aspirations or their problems. In addition, many have honestly thought they were helping Negro youth when they counseled them to accept early work permits, or to stop their educational programs any time a job became available.

While this situation prevailed in so-called "integrated educational settings", the problems of Negro youth in segregated schools with a full complement of Negro teaching personnel have been no less frustrating.

Here, there has been an almost complete absence of guidance and counseling services. What little there was became the responsibility of teachers whose orientation to the world of work consisted of what they had read or heard. Their own lack of experience with business, industry, government and labor made it impossible for them to do a realistic job.

The net result of discrimination in training and counseling opportunities of all kinds is the present glutting of the labor market with millions of unskilled, unqualified Negro workers and job-seekers.

3. Recruiting:

a) Unrealistic Recruiting Programs

As the number of Negro youth in colleges continues to rise, and the quality of their educational experience continues to improve, recruiting on college campuses should become a more fruitful medium for expanding job opportunities. The tragic fact is, however, that too many Negro youth still are not able to move into the broader job market because of inadequate recruiting and placement services available to them before they leave high school and college.

In predominantly Negro colleges, there is a grave shortage of placement services, and in predominantly white colleges a continuing reluctance on the part of placement officials to believe that recruiters have a genuine interest in interviewing all qualified candidates, regardless of race.

Negro youth do not see examples of progress and do not readily accept statements that changes are taking place. They believe that: 1) they will be required to be super human beings with skills in excess of those required of others; 2) they will need unrealistic amounts of patience and fortitude in the face of discriminatory practices that limit promotional opportunities; 3) it will always be necessary for them to institute complaints no matter what policy statements are made that guarantee them equal treatment; 4) their work performance will determine future job prospects for all other Negro youth.

b) Lack of Cooperation Between Negro Colleges and Employers

Closely related to the problems of recruitment and placement is the lack of information on the part of Negro colleges and industry about each other. This lack of knowledge, coupled with the reluctance of many firms to take positive steps to increase job opportunities, can be removed only as industry and business and the colleges work more closely in activities other than commencement and fund-raising.

c) Misinformation About Negro Job-Seekers

The extent to which misinformation and distorted notions about Negroes and their work habits affect their job opportunities can be observed in such references as - "Jobs for Negroes", "White jobs", "Negroes work best at jobs which require muscle and endurance", "Negroes like to work with other Negroes", "White people will not work with Negroes", "Negroes cannot supervise white workers", "Negro men may not work with or around white women".

It has been almost impossible to bring about changes in the minds of some employers because of the difficulty of removing such ingrained notions.

d) Inability of Negro Youth to Pass Written Examinations

Negro job applicants fail in alarming numbers to pass written and oral screening examinations. Admittedly, many Negroes have not had a great deal of experience with tests and examinations, and the major problem has only indirectly to do with skills or abilities. It is a matter of attitudes toward tests and the belief that they will not be employed no matter how well they do on the tests. There is also evidence to show that even if the written portion is passed, they will be eliminated in the oral or personal interview, where the process is personal and an opportunity for bias and prejudice can enter.

4. Advancement On The Job:

a) Integrating the Work Force

The problem of integrating the work force in a given industry, North, South, East or West, is one which requires the attention of top management, followed by firm and definite plans for implementation of policy at all levels below. Policy statements have been made at the top level, but by the time these reach the working level, considerable watering-down has taken place.

a) Defects in the Public Employment Service

What happens in the public employment agency is another issue. For many years now, it has been illegal for public agencies to accept requisitions or make referrals on a racial basis. It is known, however, that where segregated offices are maintained, whether by race or by job classification, it is possible to practice discrimination.

Where the public employment service does its greatest disservice to Negro applicants is where it exercises no initiative or takes no leadership in trying to develop additional job opportunities with the service itself or other employers.

While some progress has been made in some aspects of services, there still remains a great deal to be done in changing the image the service has created in the minds of many Negroes. This lack of use of the service and its facilities robs the Negro of an opportunity to expand his field of possible job prospects.

6. Underemployment:

Discriminatory hiring practices have resulted in developing a very large group of underemployed workers, especially in many branches of the Government. It was not long ago that a study of employment practices among the several Federal agencies operating in the Southeast revealed that there were only two Negroes employed as high as GS-12, none at GS-11; one at GS-10; none at GS-9 or GS-8; a large group at GS-7 which group contained the mail-room supervisors and messengers who had been working for periods as long as twenty years. The study also revealed that many of the Negroes who were working at GS-7, and below, were college graduates, some of whom had completed many courses above this level.

PAGE (s) MISSING

Discrimination in Federal employment is magnified when one realizes that the Civil Service regulations, which were written in 1873, state specifically that there are to be no discriminatory practices. There is little doubt that this regulation has been ignored during all of these years. Even now, when a great effort is being made to do a more equitable job, it is possible to point out at least eleven ways available to appointing officers who wish to ignore the famous "rule of three", even when all three candidates are Negroes. The only way to achieve real change here would be to declare a moratorium on all Federal jobs until a more equitable pattern is developed and fairer proportions of Negro workers are employed at all levels.

The occupational status of the Negro worker is thus one link in a logic - tight chain: low job status - low income - low health - low skills - low family stability.

At the end of the chain emerges its inevitable products - personal incompetence and social liability.

WHAT THEN CAN WE DO SEPARATELY AND TOGETHER TO FURTHER ALLEVIATE THESE PROBLEMS?

Provide Motivation and Stimulation for Negro Youth:

Motivation and stimulation of Negro youth are major responsibilities of the community at large that cannot be delegated to teachers and professional counselors alone. First, industry, business, government, and labor leaders alike need to be made aware of the problems which confront the Negro worker and job-seeker; and, second, positive plans to bring about desired changes in school and community need to be developed and implemented.

School programs must be expanded and given new direction. Counseling and teaching materials at all levels should be redesigned to provide teachers, counselors, and administrators with information and materials that depict the true image and worth of the Negro in our economy. Counselors, in particular, need special experiences that will help them to develop a background of information about the Negro - his ambitions, aspirations, needs, problems and progress.

The role of the family in solving the problems of youth in relation to their jobs is equally essential and will call for equally new and dramatic thinking on the part of parents. Many parents of Negro youth are to be found on the rolls of the unemployed, underemployed, and unhappily employed. Persons who fall into these categories are not in a position to give objective advice to fresh young minds that are anxious to try new ideas. A parent's own work experiences will be reflected in the advice and information he passes on to his children. Hence, it becomes doubly important that every effort be made to secure better jobs for adults.

Foremost in accomplishing these tasks should be provision for the participation of Negroes at all levels of policy-making and policy implementation - in overall community programs, not just any that might be developed to deal specifically with the Negro and his employment problems.

Devise Means for Helping Negro Youth Develop Interest in Pursuing Careers in New Areas of Work:

Negro adults and youth alike shy away from the opportunities for employment where the income is based on commissions. They shy away from trades and semi-professional skills. These are all jobs that have great demand now, and the demand will increase.

Help Youth and Adults Alike Reassess "Prestige Jobs" and Status:

For many years, Negroes were the builders, bakers and coffee makers. They were the chauffeurs and nurses. They shoveled the coal which heated the buildings or moved the trains along the tracks; they handled the passengers who passed through the transportation terminals all over the nation.

These were the jobs Negro parents knew about and held. They saw the school teacher making his way to and from school in his clean suit; the doctor going about his chosen profession but also building up personal status and community acceptance. They saw the social worker handling the problems of disturbed and disadvantaged families, and the preacher ministering to his flock. These became the symbols of success to him.

As a result of this, the Negro parent talked with his children about the disadvantages of "hard work", "outdoor jobs", "seasonal work", "serving other people", "working with your hands", being "bossed by white people", and the like. He did not talk about manpower needs in relation to the abilities, skills, and interests of his children. He did not talk about comparative wages and job security because he did not know how to do so, nor did he have the facts.

He did know that his opportunities for becoming foreman, supervisor, or "boss" were limited, if not non-existent.

This combination of events has resulted in several significant changes in the work status of Negro workers. When trains no longer required the services of a coal shoveler, and engines began to run on oil or electricity, white men took over the jobs of assisting the engineers.

When horses and buggies were used for transportation about the city, the jobs belonged to Negroes. However, when buses and taxicabs appeared, and it was no longer necessary to maintain stables, these jobs were taken over by white workers.

As wages in the craft trades increased and more attention was given to hours and working conditions, together with increased efforts on the part of union officials to organize these workers in the South and Southwest, there began the great influx of white skilled workmen into the brick masonry, woodworking, and painting trades. All the while, there was a lessening of interest, on the part of Negroes, in learning skills in these areas. Discriminatory union practices aggravated this situation by setting up segregated locals to bargain in favor of white workers.

When the industrial revolution came along, management considered the Negro as being able to work only in service or maintenance jobs, and never in production or supervisory classifications unless the work was in the foundry or out-of-doors. No thought was given to including the Negro in a training program or in clerical and office jobs.

Persons responsible for the education of Negro youth provided no leadership or information to Negro parents that might have helped them to better counsel their children about the changing nature of the job market.

Teachers and administrators, because they had little contact with workers, unwittingly helped in developing negative attitudes toward manual and technical work. When vocational training programs were in operation, they provided training in limited areas only; technical offerings were almost absent. Vocational schools were used as "dumping grounds" for problem children and those who did not do well in English and mathematics. No one ever thought that the children of professional families should have an opportunity "to select" vocational careers.

Consequently, today, Negroes are not employed in skilled trades where wages in most all areas exceed those of teachers and other white-collar workers. The doors of industry, business, and government have been "cracked" just enough to provide for a limited "peek".

While there will be an increasing need for professional, technical, business and other white-collar jobs in the years ahead, there will also be a need for larger numbers of workers in the skilled trades area. Adults and youth alike would be wise to appraise their own abilities and interests with an aim toward examining the possibility for achieving success in the skilled trades area.

If community acceptance and status are based on income and solid family life, the well paid skilled worker has a good chance to be a community leader.

Encourage Negro Workers to Move with Plants that Relocate in Other Communities:

Despite their widely proclaimed mobility, Negroes often fail to be mobile, either at time of initial employment, or when it is necessary to move with a firm which, for one reason or another, finds that relocation is necessary.

Encourage Negroes to Accept Facts Relating to Changes That are Taking Place:

Of major importance in motivating Negro young people to stay in school and aspire to higher goals is the task of convincing them that every positive activity represents an additional opportunity. There are still too many Negro youth who simply do not accept the fact that changes are taking place at home, in their region, in the country as a whole, and in the world at large. It is still difficult to convince them that they are now at long last regarded as worthy of consideration for jobs at all levels in an integrated society. They have good reasons for this.

There is also still too little being done by employers to show "good faith" in recruiting practices and in promotion practices after employment. Their parents are still smarting from the evil effects of the situations they find themselves in, and they need more information about changes in the world of work, and what one must do to be ready to make his niche therein.

Of particular interest to youth should be those jobs that are being created as a result of technological change and advanced scientific processes, including automation.

Take the Lead in Helping the Nation Solve its Manpower Problems:

Employers need special help in solving their manpower problems, whether in relationship to integrating the work force, recruiting and employing qualified Negro workers, or the full utilization of their skills after employment. As a group we have the responsibility to work incessantly to see that America makes a more equitable use of all its human manpower.

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

Some General Books Relating to Problems of Negroes

Dabbs, James McBride, Who Speaks for the South? New York, Funk & Wagnalls.

-- A thoughtful, unsparing yet fondly critical analysis, by a leader of the Southern Regional Council, of the development of the Southern "character"-- and particularly of how the white Southerner's confusion of his public self with his real self, his identification with a fabled past and insular present, has led to an insensitivity to the world outside and to defeat after defeat. "A book that will help the South understand itself and the North understand the South."

Ginzberg, Eli, and Eichner, Alfred S., The Troublesome Presence, New York, Free Press.

-- Fact-crammed history of the Negro's struggle for equality. "The most up-to-date historical treatment...for comprehensiveness should rank with John Hope Franklin's 'From Slavery to Freedom.'" Lubell, Samuel, White and Black, New York, Harper & Row.

-- The noted public-opinion expert traces the sorry history of our racial schizophrenia and argues that both whites and Negroes must take more realistic positions if they are ever to reconcile their racial differences. He particularly urges the assurance of residential mobility both as a right and as a way to end the stereotyped view many whites have of Negroes.

Pettigrew, Thomas F., A Profile of the Negro American, New York, Van Nostrand.

-- A useful and exhaustive critical compilation of scientific studies on Negro personality and behavioral traits, by a Harvard social psychologist.

Silberman, Charles E., Crisis in Black and White, New York, Random.

-- Thoughtful, committed, controversial analysis of the social and psychological factors underlying America's racial problem, with particular development of the concept that "the central fact in Negro history is slavery" - by an editor of Fortune Magazine.

Silver, James W., Mississippi: The Closed Society, New York, Harcourt, Brace & World

-- Acute, and acutely painful, analysis of a state bedeviled by fantasies of its past and present. The author is a long-time Southerner and history professor at the University of Mississippi. "Offers little comfort, but much clarity and comprehension...a small classic."

Weaver, Robert C., The Urban Complex, New York, Doubleday & Co.

-- An analysis by the Federal Housing and Home Finance Administrator of "human values in urban life" with an urgent program for improvement. "Forces into clear focus many facts about the nonwhite ghetto, the most important of which is that it is almost impossible for Negroes to get out of it."

Westin, Alan F., (Ed.) Freedom Now!, New York, Basic Books.

-- Excellent and extremely useful symposium on the civil rights movement, "its sources, the morality that influences it, the moods that dominate it, and the reasoning that indicates the strategy of its operations." Contributors include James Farmer, Kenneth Clark, Harry Ashmore, James Forman, Burke Marshall, Malcolm X, Whitney Young, James Baldwin, and others.

You Must Read This!

Ginzberg, Eli, (Ed.) The Negro Challenge to the Business Community, New York, McGraw-Hill Book Company.

-- An important domestic issue of the twentieth century - the Negro challenge to the American business community - is the subject of this most unusual and timely work.

Early in 1964 senior executives from sixty leading American corporations met at Arden House, Columbia University, with five eminently qualified experts to exchange ideas and opinions, and to illuminate diverse aspects of this complex problem. This book is a report of that meeting.

Each of the experts participating in this unique discussion is personally acquainted with this explosive matter and each has recently written a book on the Negro. The experts are:

Charles E. Silberman of Fortune Magazine.

Whitney M. Young, Jr., Director of the National Urban League.

Thomas Pettigrew, a Harvard University professor.

Kenneth Clark, a leading Negro intellectual and Professor of Psychology at the City University of New York, City College.

Patrick Daniel Moynihan, currently Assistant Secretary of Labor, and a long-time student of politics and minorities.

Eli Ginzberg, Professor, Graduate School of Business, Columbia University.

The result of this probing study is an authoritative book that both illustrates how we arrived at this crossroad - and points the way for a sound, steady advance.

GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE AMERICAN LABOR FORCE

Section I. A Working Population - Now

The nation has always been a population of working people. The characteristics of the work force, however, have undergone noticeable changes. Half a century ago, one out of every three persons lived and worked on a farm. By 1960, only one in ten persons lived there. There has been an ever-increasing shift of people from rural and farm areas to cities and urban areas. In addition, there has been a continuing shift of the population from the South to the North, the Middle West and the Far West. There has been some moving around of people within the South, but most of the shifting has been from farm to city. In 1940, the rural population was 57,245,563 or 43.5 percent of the total. By 1960, the rural population had dropped to 30.1 percent.

During this period of population growth, the work force increased, also, but at a somewhat smaller rate. In 1940, the work force was 56 million or 42.4 percent of the total population. By 1960, it had increased to 73 million, but was now 40.7 percent of the total.

The twenty-year period between 1940 and 1960 saw significant changes, not only in the size of the work force, but also in its composition. More women became wage-earners, more youth entered and remained in the work force, and more older workers continued or re-entered gainful employment. Some of these increases resulted from the war efforts and the necessity to make use of all available skills. This was especially true with regard to women workers. It was during this period, too, that we had the greatest number of youth entering the job market, either as drop-outs or as non-entrants to college and other post-high school educational institutions.

Although women workers constitute only a third of the labor force today, they account for more than three-fifths of the overall increase in the labor force during the past fifteen years. Of the 22.5 million women in the labor force today, 7.6 million entered after 1947, as compared to 5.6 million men who entered during the same period. During this period, the percent of women in the labor force increased from 31 to 37 percent, while the percentage of men dropped from 84 to 79 percent.

Men have been and will continue to be the "bread-winners", but they will be receiving more and more competition from the ever-growing number of women who are leaving the home to become bread-winners, also.

Although the total number of men in the labor force has increased with the increases in population, there has been a significant decrease in the participation of boys and of men past 60 years of age. Between 1947 and 1962, the proportion of boys, 14 to 19 years, dropped from 54 percent to 44 percent. A partial reason for this was the population shift from rural to urban areas where work opportunities for boys were more limited in cities than they were on the farm.

There has been a slight decline in the participation of men in the 20 to 24-year bracket. The next older group, 25 to 54 years, continues to hold firm percentage-wise. During the age span, 55 to 65, men become victims of work-related illnesses and retirement, the latter receiving some encouragement from increased Social Security benefits or provisions for early admission to the program.

SECTION II. SOME PROJECTIONS FOR THE FUTURE

Manpower Requirements

There seems to be no doubt in the minds of experts that there will be a continuing upward trend in employment during the next few years. For the labor force as a whole, it is estimated that the total number of persons gainfully employed will reach the 80.5 million mark by 1970, and 87.6 million by 1975. Projections for each of the major occupational groups are shown in the following table:

Occupational Group	Percent Change from 1960
	By 1970	By 1975
Professional and technical	43	65
Proprietors and managers	21	32
Clerical workers	31	45
Sales workers	23	34
Craftsmen and skilled workers	20	30
Semi-skilled workers	13	18
Service workers	34	51
Farm workers	22	28

During the past decade, job opportunities at the professional and technical levels have increased at the greatest rate and will continue to do so during the next decade. Other groups will also show rapid increases with the exception of the unskilled group, which will show no increase, and the farm workers group which will show a decrease.

Specific areas in which substantial increases may be expected are teaching, health professions, the social sciences, the clergy, law, engineering and the natural sciences. In engineering and the natural sciences, it is expected that the present 1.2 million employed may roughly double by 1975. These expectations are based upon the increasing manpower needs in space and defense programs.

Opportunities in the technical fields will show a significant rise due to expanding requirements for technicians needed to support engineers and scientists.

The teaching profession will account for an increase of some half-million new workers, as a result of an increasing school population and continuing interest in training programs for adults and other out-of-school citizens.

In health and medical sciences, the number of new workers will depend almost entirely upon the availability of training facilities, and the influx of forien medical school graduates who wish to practice in the United States.

Prospects for employment in the proprietorship and managerial occupations will depend upon the extent of the trend toward the formation of larger business enterprises. It is expected, however, that the number of small businesses, such as personal services, may increase.

Despite the expected increase in automative processes in business operations, economic experts estimate that there will be a great need for clerical and sales personnel. The increase will be due to the continuing volume of work in the communications field, the need for human beings to man the machines of automation, and the need for personnel in the growing field of sales and sales promotion. The bulk of this growth will result from the rapid expansion expected in banking, insurance, and retail business enterprises.

While it may be true that some workers will be replaced as a result of self-service counters and operations, these reductions may be offset by the increase in the need for cashiers, checkers, and persons with higher skills than those presently required for routine business operations.

Employment of skilled workers and craftsmen during the next decade is expected to show a steady and substantial growth resulting from increased building and construction activities of government and industry. These activities will provide very substantial increases in employment of workers in the fields of carpentry, masonry, the metal and iron trades, electricity, plumbing and pipefitting. Naturally, opportunities for foremen and supervisory positions in these fields will expand also.

Job opportunities for semi-skilled workers, especially those in industrial plants, are expected to increase at a much lower rate than has been indicated for many of the other occupational groups. This will be due in part to the fact that automation processes are expected to take over many of the jobs now listed in this classification. However, many of these persons may be retrainable and could be expected to qualify for jobs at the skilled level.

The overall increase in the population is expected to require many more persons in the service occupations: police and fire protection, nursing below the registered and graduate nurse levels, and other hospital and health service areas. An increase is expected in the need for general service workers due to expansion in travel, motel and hotel operations; food services outside the home; cleaning and laundry work; barbering; beauty culture; and others.

Hardest hit will be those who qualify for unskilled jobs only. Since this group is not expected to grow at all, considerable work must be done to increase the educational level of a large segment of the population in order to prepare these persons for training programs for jobs in other occupational classifications.

The number of farm workers will have dropped by some 28 percent by 1975. Many will be replaced by machines introduced in the process of growing more foodstuffs for a growing population. Others will desert the farms to seek better job opportunities in cities near their homes or in distant places, depending upon the kind of occupational information available to them.

One important question which continues to confront those who assume responsibility for projecting future manpower needs is that of sources and supply. If the estimate of the United States Office of Education that the present college enrollment of 3.5 million will double by 1970 is correct, it is possible that there may be a sufficient number of professional and technical workers to fill the jobs that will be available. Supplementing this group will be an increasing number of persons who may secure on-the-job training which will lead to openings at the professional and technical levels.

Training programs to prepare new workers in the managerial, general business and clerical fields are largely the responsibility of persons who plan educational programs below the college and university levels. The need for workers in these fields will not be met unless we drastically expand and improve educational programs in vocational and technical schools, business schools, two-year colleges, on-the-job training programs and other related training programs.

Projected manpower needs in the skilled trades indicate that much needs to be done to increase beginning opportunities in the craft trades. This may require a drastic change in the present apprenticeship programs of many unions, and a fresh interest and approach to the problem by management and government, for cooperation by all three will be required if any substantial results are to be obtained. It is estimated that there are some 160,000 apprentices enrolled in registered apprenticeship programs in the construction, metal, and printing trades. An equal number is estimated to be enrolled in programs that have not been certified by the United States Department of Labor's Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training, or by various state apprenticeship agencies.

There seems to be little doubt that the present apprenticeship programs cannot provide enough new skilled craftsmen to fill the jobs that are to become available as the result of retirement, death, and new opportunities as reflected by increases in manpower requirements.

Of special interest is information on specific manpower needs and sources in some of the basic occupations over the next decade. It is estimated that we will need 225,000 new electrical workers by 1970; 80,000 new tool and die workers, with 30,000 to come from the apprenticeship program; 690,000 engineers with a possible deficit of some 238,000; 750,000 new elementary and secondary school teachers, with the possibility of a shortage of some 85,000 by the end of the decade.

What are the implications of these anticipated shortages for the Negro worker? Surely a substantial reduction in expected deficits could be achieved by extensive upgrading of the 80 percent of the Negro work force now concentrated in lower-level occupations. Such occupational upgrading will require a commensurate upgrading in the Negro's educational status.

Educational Requirements

The following table shows the relationship between the kinds of jobs people hold and their educational attainment:

Table #4[4]

Occupational Group	Years of Schooling (1962)
Professional and technical	16.2
Managers and proprietors	12.5
Clerical and sales	12.5
Craftsmen and skilled	11.2
Operatives and semi-skilled	10.1
Laborers	8.9
Service workers	9.8

[4] See Table Appendix

The fact that Negro workers are not found in large numbers in the professional and technical, proprietors and managers, clerical workers, and sales workers groups may not be attributed alone to the fact that they lack the necessary education.

The median number of school years completed by non-whites over the past twenty-five years has risen from 5.8 years in 1940 to 8.1 years in 1959. The median for the population as a whole is 11.0. In 1940, 8 percent of the Negro population had completed high school; today the figure is 20 percent.

It becomes apparent then that much must be done to bring the utilization of Negro manpower into line with the Negro's educational attainment before we may expect any great change in the number of Negroes in the higher levels of job opportunities.

Remarks
By M. T. Puryear
Before the Community Action Assembly
Job Opportunity Session
Friday, December 11, 1964

The Negro has been called a burden on society because he is so dependent upon welfare services and other assistance from public agencies. He has been called socially deprived because he has been a social outcast, having been a victim of a social system which not only relegated him to a second-class citizenship, but also used legal means, as well as customs and traditions, to deter his efforts to change his status.

The Negro has been called culturally deprived because he so often lived in communities where cultural activities were not available to him, or his very fight for survival often did not include the time or energy to develop interest in or taste for such activities.

He has been called educationally deprived and intellectually unfit because he has not been able to develop the background necessary to acquire the training and experience required to compete in the job market.

He has been called a political novice because, I suppose, a group which has so long been denied the simple right to vote could certainly not develop very much political sophistication.

The Negro has been called a low producer because he has worked mainly in unskilled, menial, or, in fact, disappearing job categories. He has been called unqualified as a worker because of the serious lack of education and experience so often required when he sought new or advanced job opportunities.

Urban League
Bunny Cox

To some degree, there is truth--a lot of truth--in each of the above statements. We cannot, however, accept them as stated, for to do so is to accept the stereotype so well known to all of us.

Even if the above statements apply to some Negro citizens, there are those who accepted the advice of adults - teachers, counselors, parents - and stayed in school to acquire the educational backgrounds that were to lead to rewarding jobs in business, industry, government and education. This is the group which, if working, has found entry jobs available, but upgrading, transfer, and promotion out of its reach.

Such limitations have served to stifle ambition, curb motivation, and relegate the majority of Negro workers to incomes designated as poverty status.

This unhappy situation has not been the result of an accident. Negro workers have had help through discriminatory practices in recruiting, hiring, upgrading, transfer and promotion practices of employers in all areas of work in this country.

Negro workers have been told that they could not be hired because they lacked skills, education and experiences by the same people who set up and controlled the systems which made preparation and the development of adequate backgrounds impossible.

Other problems in unemployment, underemployment and advancement on the job have also contributed to the maintenance of this unhappy work situation.

Any group of citizens so designated needs assistance from every force in government, business, industry, labor and education. Not the least of all is that there must be concern and help from within the Negro community itself.

We believe it to be significant that we have been able to meet here for the purpose of addressing ourselves to the problems of Negro workers; however, we have come prepared to assess both the problem and the resources that are available to all of us as we seek new and more dramatic solutions.

To set the stage for our deliberation, we have asked two of this country's most eminent scholars to provide the kind of background information we will need in order to give sober and meaningful consideration to our immediate tasks in planning and developing realistic employment programs which will be designed to benefit Negro citizens.

Community Action Assembly
Health and Welfare Session

PRIORITY NEEDS OF NEGROES IN HEALTH AND WELFARE

Equal rights and equal opportunities to health and welfare for Negro citizens could be stated very simply as the elimination of the huge and continuing backwash of 300 years of discrimination and segregation. A simple statement but a great task to overcome for equality means that from the cradle to the grave - from extensive prenatal neglect, high infant mortality and illegitimacy, overworked, low-paid working mothers with no day care services for their children, underpaid, underemployed and unemployed males, the suffering, neglected aged, the large and disproportionate number on public welfare - in effect, that for the majority of the Negro population, equal opportunity to health and welfare means recognition of the needs and programs for action to overcome the double jeopardy of continuing discrimination and poverty.

A very recent study of 5,600 public assistance cases for example, found that 74% were in households headed by women and that the overwhelming majority of these cases suffered physical and emotional disabilities. And Urban League studies indicate that discrimination - overt or subtle - often exists in the very hospital, health and social welfare services that are supposed to help those in greatest need. This discrimination has also frequently contributed to under-utilization of services by those who need them most.

Many people recognize the needs of the poor, and especially of the more afflicted nonwhite poor, and sympathize with it. But few appreciate that financial costs to all America of neglect are the costs of cure.

For example, in New York City, where 75% of the over half million public welfare recipients are nonwhite, more than a half billion dollars was spent on such expenditures in just the one year ended last June - and case loads and costs are rising.[1] And what can the outlook be when nearly 2 out of 3 of these welfare recipients are children? The condition is national in scope and billions of dollars are being spent.

Walter Heller, formerly of the Council of Economic Advisers, estimates that it would cost approximately $11 billion a year to bring up all poor families to $3,000. Considering our current outlays for public assistance expenditures, which, although they go into billions, are far below the need, Mr. Heller's estimate of an annual $11 billion would be spent toward creating jobs as well as badly needed services - such as homemakers, health aides, foster parents.

With deplorably low incomes, little, if any, can be spent on preventive medical care or even crisis care. For example, average income of nonwhite husband-wife family unit, which, incidentally, is just about at the poverty level, is not only about half ($3,895 vs. $6,510) that of whites but also has to support more children (3.0 per family vs. 2.4). Three out of every 4 families headed by domestic service workers are poor, and you know who they are. The nonwhite mother-only family unit not only has a desperately low income ($1,665), well under that of the white, but she too also has more children than the white (2.8 per family vs. 2.1).[2]

1. New York Times, November 15, 1964
2. "Children of the Poor", Dept. Health, Education and Welfare reprint (1963)

The President's Task Force on Manpower Conservation has reported these alarming facts: that half the draftees called in 1962 by Selective Service failed their preinduction examinations. About half of those rejected were turned down for failure to pass the medical tests.

The most significant finding of the Task Force about the medical reject is that 75% of all persons rejected for failure to meet the medical and physical standard would probably benefit from treatment and that public health nurses can be highly effective in counselling most rejectees to seek medical treatment.[3]

I'm sure you're all familiar with such facts in every area as that out-of-wedlock births which are almost twice that of nonwhite mothers; that many agencies give services to unmarried mothers, but if the mother is Negro, services may not exist for her; that a mere one in 50 nonwhite mothers receives care at all and in the South, practically none; that 70% of white babies born out-of wedlock are placed for adoption as against only 5% of nonwhite; that the chance that Negro babies will die in the first year of life is about twice as great as for white babies; that the communicable diseases are increasing at an alarming rate, especially among teenagers, and so on it goes.[4]

These are national figures. Urbanwise, ghettowise, and geographically, however, the dimensions of poverty are much, much greater. For example, in the South 47% of the total population is poor as against the country's 20% average and a whopping 75% of these are nonwhite, compared with about 50% national average.

3. "One-Third of a Nation", Jan. 1, 1964. A report by the President's Task Force on Manpower Conservation.
4. See NUL publications: DOUBLE JEOPARDY, THE HEALTH OF NEGROES IN AMERICA TODAY, and THE URBAN LEAGUE'S APPROACH TO HEALTH AND WELFARE. 1964.

Twelve million Negroes, or 60% of the total U.S. Negro population, live in the South, with seven million living in the cities and five million on farms.[5] I've just returned from a National Urban League Health and Welfare Poverty Workshop in the South where we've worked out preliminary steps for Negro participation at every level as required under the Economic Opportunity Act. And we're planning similar Workshops at the city, county and state levels there. To work out meaningful programs to mobilize the poor at every level will require the maximum involvement of all organizations gathered here today.

As I indicated earlier elimination of poverty, aside from human and social considerations, is also good sense in monetary terms to the community. The economics of investment in human resources is very real. In addition to lower costs of rehabilitation and maintenance of the poor, repayment would come in higher tax revenues flowing from healthy persons working and at higher wage levels.

There are current, present governmental resources that the community can and should use to implement the national mandate to eliminate poverty and discrimination. Resources, which I'm sure Secretary Celebrezze and the panel will describe, such as the provisions of the 1963 Child and Maternal Health Act, the 1962 Public Welfare Amendments, and the 1963 approved Community Mental Health Centers. There are, as well, very important voluntary resources - the network of voluntary health and social welfare agencies throughout the country. All of these can become vital components of the Economic Opportunity and Civil Rights Acts of 1964.

5. "The War on Poverty", the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. A Committee report of the 88th Congress.

Even though the Economic Opportunity Act, historic as it is, as President Johnson stated, just a beginning, let us encompass the breadth and vision of our President, Vice President and other national leaders in devising steps for immediate action.

For, it's really up to an intelligent, active citizenry to push for effective distribution and utilization of these programs.

And we have called you here today because it is our business - our community business - to join hands with government and all interested private resources to design new and adequate programs to alleviate the problems with which we are all too familiar.

MEMORANDUM December 29, 1964

TO: Delegates to the National Urban League
Community Action Assembly, December 9-11, 1964
Sheraton Park Hotel, Washington, D. C.

FROM: Whitney M. Young, Jr., Executive Director

: : : :

The Urban League's Community Action Assembly marked another major stride toward equal opportunity for the Negro in this country. Your participation in that Assembly was an important factor in its success, and this letter comes to express our appreciation for the interest evidenced by your attendance. We hope this effort is only the first of many future cooperative ventures.

We believe that the objective of this action conference, which dealt with the "meat, bread and potatoes" issues of the day, was achieved in that Negroes from all over the country had the opportunity to meet with top government officials, including the President of the United States, to discuss the Civil Rights Bill and the Economic Opportunity Act.

Follow-up of that conference now becomes a number one priority, and your support and cooperation will be needed in this. We urge you not to delay informing your membership about the Assembly, and the League stands ready to assist you in any way possible to secure the resources to put both acts into operation in your community.

Enclosed you will find a list of Urban League affiliates and regional offices throughout the country. It is our hope that you will contact the office nearest your city as you move ahead in implementing the decisions of the Assembly. Enclosed, also, is a second copy of the Outline of Immediate Action. You will note that several suggestions are given for follow-up action by you, as well as by the Urban League. The materials promised are being prepared and will be sent to you by the dates designated.

Again, thank you for your most valuable contribution to the success of our Assembly, and we welcome any comments or suggestions you may have.

Dear Mr. Yeuell:

Your letter of August 30, addressed to the Southern Regional Council has been referred to this office for a reply.

We certainly wish to commend the Presbyterian Church for this much needed interest in voter registration. The provisional description which you sent to us has attracted considerable interest in our office and you may be assured of any support which the Voter Education Project can give you in launching your own voter registration program.

We are sending, under separate cover, a copy of our first annual report which you may find of interest and if, after reading it, you have any specific questions which you want to ask us then feel free to communicate directly with this office.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Gentlemen:

At a recent conference of the Campus Ministry Association of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. it was decided to establish a Long Term Voter Registration Project. A provisional description is attached.

We understand from a member of the association that the SRCHR has an office which is dealing with this matter. We would like your response to our plan and any material you may have to help expedite our efforts.

Sincerely,

LONG TERM VOTER REGISTRATION PROJECT

PROJECT:

In the summer of 1964 there will be initiated by CMA a five year Voter Registration Project within the geographic confines of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. The project will consist of a travelling team of approximately 20 people who are trained and competent in a methodology for Voter Registration and Voter Education. There shall be one full time staff leader (with training in theology and sociology or political science) who will be responsible for the development and expansion of the project.

The work of this team will include three aspects:

1. An intensive training session in VR methodology and strategy - to take place during the times when the VR books are closed.

2. An advance contact group which will begin conversation about need problems and potentialities of VR in a community with members of churches and other interested groups.

3. A lengthy period of on the scene work in gathering datum and assisting in the registration of voters in a community. This work should be done in cooperation with and support of local groups or persons wherever possible.

The length of time that the team is in any locality will be determined by the needs of that locality. During each summer of the five year period there shall be a complete project which could include short term ecumenical participation.

The Department of Campus Christian Life shall provide for the staff salary and for travel expenses of the team. Local churches and participants both should bear a portion of the living costs for the team.

PARTICIPANTS:

Students, faculty, and other churchmen with a special interest in sociology, political science, and theology will constitute the inter-racial team. Members of the team will rotate on and off at the end or beginning of a new VR project location, with approximately 2/3 of the team providing continuity of experience.

CMA TRAINING:

A training seminar at the 1964 CMA Conference with actual in service training in Black Mountain (if registration books are open) for campus ministers interested in beginning a VR project in their own community will be held.

THE OXFORD SPECTACULAR

JFK Viewed as Ballerina In Dodge of Rights Vows

By LYLE C. WILSON

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18 (UPI)—Practical politicians must admire the agility with which President Kennedy has egg-walked around the civil rights promises in the 1960 Democratic platform — a prima ballerina performance.

Candidate Kennedy's civil rights promises in 1960 won for him a massive Negro vote without which he would have lost a few states and the presidential election. Now he ignores his civil rights platform promises and gets away with it. It is a fact that the Republicans goofed the Negro vote in 1960. That does not diminish the solid substance of Kennedy's performance.

THE PERFORMANCE has not ended. Nor is it now any less spectacular and successful than in 1960. Consider:

—The Kennedy administration has proposed no legislation to make good on the specific civil rights promises of the 1960 campaign. When liberal Democrats prepared 1961 legislation to effect those promises, the newly elected President killed the project.

—When Senate liberals moved last month to deal with the filibuster Kennedy refused to help. That killed that. And who is being angrily assailed now by Negro and left wing leaders as a filibuster-loving racist? Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson is the whipping boy. And do the Negroes and lefties condemn the President for refusing to help their campaign against the filibuster? They do not.

KENNEDY held that the filibuster rule was a matter for Senate determination without White House pressure. Yet, Kenedy twisted arms last month to re-jigger the House Rules Committee toward a membership more favorable to the New Frontier. And now it is the Senate's turn for some arm twisting. Kennedy wanted to add some friendly democrats to the Senate Finance Committee. They would prevent Chairman Harry F. Byrd, D-Va., from cutting the giblets out of the administration's planned - deficit approach to tax reduction and tax reform.

Kennedy can risk ignoring his campaign promises on civil rights because he has other and effective ways of keeping Negro voters happy. He has no such alternative on taxes.

Kennedy evidently believes he must get favorable action on his tax program or come up to his 1964 re-election campaign against a politically deadly unemployment situation. There is no political alternative for Kennedy. He must deal with unemployment — get the country moving again — or risk losing in 1964.

Kennedy's political alternative to civil rights legislation goes like this: The Oxford, Miss., spectacular; prominent and well-paid government jobs for Negroes; and keeping before the public the idea that Kennedy will name a Negro to the cabinet. He probably will do it, too. Also:

A group of young Negro university women recently met here for lunch. Kennedy dropped in as a surprise guest. That news picture went all over the nation. The President and Mrs. Kennedy hosted a White House Lincoln's Birthday party. The news picture showed nationally known Negroes as honor guests.

This kind of dynamic politics is more effective with Negro voters than civil rights legislation. There will be more, much more.

What chance do Republicans have of winning the Negro vote from Kennedy in 1964? Not any!

The Herbert Hoover Headquarters Building of Boys' Clubs of America at 771 First Avenue, New York, N.Y., stands directly opposite the United Nations for millions of national and international visitors to see this symbol of the American way of life.

Their code—

I believe in God and the right to worship according to my own faith and religion.

I believe in America and the American way of life * * * in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

I believe in fairplay, honesty, and sportsmanship.

I believe in my Boys' Club which stands for these things—

Is also dramatically indicative of our heritage and I find it most fitting to call it to your attention.

On this, the occasion of the 103d anniversary of the founding of the first Boys' Club in Hartford, Conn., a resident and author of my congressional district, Mr. Robert J. Murrin, wrote a poem in honor of this organization and the significant contribution it is making in "Building the Citizens of Tomorrow" and strengthening our democratic principles.

Under unanimous consent of this body, I insert here the text of Mr. Murrin's poem and join with him in paying tribute to this worthy American institution:

BOYS' CLUBS OF AMERICA

It's an organization throughout our land
Which extends to boys a helping hand.
Guiding and leading as each goes his way
Down paths to the future in his life of today.

With dedicated leaders, all friends of the boy,
They fill his free time with learning and joy.
With diversified programs geared to his needs,
The Boys' Clubs are planting good character seeds.

Through hobbies and crafts, and libraries new,
Dramatics and game rooms—a group club or two;
Through informal guidance and a place of his own,
A boy need not feel that he walks alone.

Strengthening of body and development of mind
Are among the objectives of Boys' Clubs, you'll find.
To encourage the boys who need it the most,
Is a basic philosophy of which they can boast.

From the hazards of streets and temptation to wrong,
They divert his energy and help him "belong."
"Fun with a purpose"—so adequately phrased
Yes, Boys' Clubs of America deserves highest praise.

Kennedys Fear One Man in 1964 Election—Goldwater

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ASHBROOK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 28, 1963

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr Speaker, one of the best kept secrets of the Republican Party at the present time is the weakness of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller as a presidential candidate. In fact, it is getting to be less and less of a secret each week as his lack of appeal to Republicans begins to show. As usual, it can be expected that the Democrats will build him up since he is the man they would like to place in opposition to President Kennedy in 1964. Former Postmaster General Jim Farley propounded the "my friend, Nelson Rockefeller" line in a statement last week and we, in truth, read these statements all of the time. Of course, it will be Republicans and not Democrats who will nominate our candidate next year.

It is becoming more obvious that Republicans want a bona fide candidate who will not run on a "me too" platform. The strong position of Senator BARRY GOLDWATER is ringing clearly to Republicans throughout the country and I believe a genuine ground swell of opinion is forming in behalf of this great Senator. He speaks forthrightly about the affairs of state, is not deluded by the Communists and offers a positive free enterprise approach to preserve the sovereignty of our Nation internationally and fiscally at home. The bungling of this administration and its frightening lack of economic horsesense coupled with the inept handling of foreign affairs would naturally cause the Kennedys to fear a man who would speak out in honest contrast in the 1964 campaign. Americans are looking for a candidate like BARRY GOLDWATER—North, South, East, and West.

Walter Trohan hit the nail right on the head in his "Report from Washington," which appeared in the March 27, 1963, Chicago Tribune. I commend it not only to Republicans but to all of my colleagues in the House:

KENNEDYS FEAR ONE MAN IN 1964 ELECTION—GOLDWATER

(By Walter Trohan)

WASHINGTON, March 26.—President Kennedy and his brother, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, the grand vizier of the New Frontier, fear only one man in 1964, and it is not Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York.

The man they dread is a true frontiersman, Senator BARRY GOLDWATER, Republican of Arizona, the personable and articulate conservative who would rather be Senator than Vice President. They fear that GOLDWATER would carry the South, where he is viewed as an exponent of State rights and not as a hated Republican, and that he would rally the rightwing of the Republican Party in the North, which has shown little enthusiasm for GOP me-tooism.

Early this year the Attorney General, the second most powerful man in Washington who runs the Democratic National Committee and foreign and domestic policy, was interviewed by U.S. News & World Report. He was asked to guess who the 1964 Republican nominee will be.

"Well, I know, but I don't think he does, so I don't think I'd better say," was his reply.

The reference was not to Rockefeller, obviously. Since that time, the Attorney General and his brother have confided to intimates that GOLDWATER would make a tougher race for the Presidency than would the New Yorker. Rockefeller has two heavy strikes going against him in facing Kennedy—the lack of a war record and his divorce.

GOLDWATER A MODEL FAMILY MAN

GOLDWATER flew the hump between Burma and China in the war. He is a jet pilot in the Reserve with the rank of brigadier general. And he is a model family man, whose views of divorce as an Episcopalian are no less strict than those of the President.

Rockefeller would like GOLDWATER as a running mate, but the Senator made it clear that he will not run for second place, noting how Vice President JOHNSON has fallen from the position of the second most powerful man in Washington as Senate Democratic leader, to the anonymous obscurity of the Vice Presidency.

"I watched what happened to one of the strongest men in the country in a short space of 2 years," GOLDWATER said last week. "I would rather be a live Senator than a sort of backwoods man in the Vice Presidential chair."

Of course, the fact that the Kennedys have the strongest fear of GOLDWATER's rivalry doesn't mean that he will necessarily get the GOP nomination. He will face the "nice fellow but can't win" treatment from defeatist Republicans, who employed this line to kill off the hopes of the late Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio. GOLDWATER comes from a small State with a handful of convention votes, while Rockefeller has a bagful in New York.

ROCKEFELLER IS THE MAN TO BEAT

There is no doubt that Rockefeller will be the man to beat for the GOP nomination, as he was in 1960 and as he will be in 1968 if he doesn't get it in 1964. For this reason many Republicans want to give it to him next time around, much as many Democrats gave their nomination to Alfred E. Smith in 1928 to remove him as a factor in 1932, when they expected Democratic fortunes to improve, as they did.

The Kennedys have a map of the United States which shows the areas the President took in 1960 in black and those which Richard M. Nixon took, in white. The map shows that Nixon took more area of the country than the President did because the President captured most of the less extensive but more populous city areas.

They feel that they could improve the picture against Rockefeller, but fear that the man from the wide open spaces of the west might threaten to let down their political fences to more white space on the map.

A Doctor Speaks

OF

HON. ROBERT DOLE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 28, 1963

Mr. DOLE. Mr. Speaker, a recent issue of the Hutchinson (Kans.) News, March 15, contained an excellent statement by C. R. Openshaw, M.D. It clearly illustrates basic problems confronting individuals within our society who espouse the cause of conservative, constitutional government, but either sit idly by or beat the drum for expanded Federal programs which might benefit them directly or indirectly. Many Members of Congress and other elected officials are many times frustrated by conflicting and inconsistent views of constituents.

Dr. Openshaw in clear, concise language presents the problems and solution. Those who really believe in individual responsibility should appreciate his statement.

The statement follows:

A DOCTOR SPEAKS

As it becomes painfully apparent to even the most naive that a struggle of epic proportions is being waged today between the free world and those who would enslave it, the voices become increasingly louder that war (meaning all-out nuclear effort) is increasingly unthinkable.

Although nuclear explosions have not yet occurred in our cities, war is nonetheless real and declared by actions if not by formal decree.

Despite optimistic notes sounded by world travelers, the evidence is good that we are continuing to lose this war. Let me hasten to state that I do not refer to the overt struggle with Russia, with Castro, or even with internal communism. The overall status of these fortunes is so colored by controversy, interpretation, and political intrigue at a given moment, that even Government experts often disagree.

Instead, I refer to two other aspects of the war, about which there is little doubt of our progressive deterioration.

THE HOME WAR

The first is the home war, and here there can be no question that we are losing. By this, I mean that very few are fighting wholly, sincerely, and unreservedly on the side of strength for freedom. Individuals and groups fight on one side one day and on the other the next, or else fight with one hand while accepting bribes from the opposition with the other.

Who will not claim to be in favor of national solvency, individual incentive, and freedom of private and economic life from political domination: Who is not opposed to preemptive statism and fiscal irresponsibility? Who, that is, except when it might apply to his own community, or add a few temporary extra dollars to his personal pocket?

Try to close a military installation in the name of economies to be realized, try to cut a subsidy of any kind or eliminate expense of Federal involvement in real estate mortgages, pork-barrel projects, or loans at less than cost. The screams will come from all quarters, depending on who is personally affected.
